The University of Massachusetts' budget request for next year received a stamp of approval from Berkshire Community College last week.

"I can't remember this happening before," Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said. "It is encouraging when one college gives its support to another.

"This endorsement demonstrates a sense of recognition and unity between the colleges," he said.

In a letter from Berkshire Community College's board of trustees dated Sept. 25, the request for $164.3 million was endorsed.

The letter states that the board of trustees "wishes to express its support" of UMass' efforts to "improve and upgrade the physical facilities and quality of education at the University."

The letter also stated that "a strong flagship university is essential if the state is to progress culturally and economically and if the community colleges are to move ahead as they should."

The budget request was approved by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees in August and is expected to be approved by the Board of Regents of Higher Education next summer.

Freshmen math skills improving, report says

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Correspondent

Math skill deficiencies of entering University of Massachusetts freshmen are on the decline but 'math anxiety' still effects students' math scores, a recently released math department report states.

"The student body is getting stronger," said Doris Stockton, pre-calculus coordinator in the mathematics and statistics department. "The (secondary) schools are working harder to prepare students for college."

Stockton recently completed the report, "Mathematical Deficiencies of Entering Students at UMass Amherst" which includes plans to improve some of the math skills of entering freshmen.

"Our student pool is up," Stockton said. "The University is picking up students that would normally be going to the more Lexpensive private colleges."

The report indicates a rise in the mean math Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores of entering freshmen. This year's mean math score is 528, a 10-point increase from 1983.

Summer math placement tests scores in 1985 placed almost half of the students tested in calculus courses, 37 percent in precalculus and 14 percent in remedial math. These percentages reflect almost a 10 percent increase in students entering calculus classes and a 10 percent decrease in those enrolled in remedial math classes from the previous year.

The report recommended an increase in funding for basic math courses because they "form the underpinning of 50 to 59 percent of all major programs on campus."

"Math anxiety" is a continuing problem and can co-exist with the improved scores of the incoming freshmen, Stockton said. "Math anxiety is still prevalent. Anxiety is more obvious in math than in other subjects because the material is cut and dry."

Mathematical deficiencies can be lessened if the University increases its communication with high schools and community colleges, the report states. Also, high schools can prepare future college students by expanding early math placement testing, offering more college-level courses and by advising high school seniors to take math courses that will prepare them for college math.

They tell us it's safer

Stephen Erickson

It's all well and fine to talk about South Africa and the Soviet Union, AIDS and acid rain, earthquakes and hurricanes, and arms control and the deficit, but sometimes an issue strikes so close to home that it shakes the very foundations of our being. Sometimes an issue hits us where we live to such an extent that our consciences demand that we bring it to the forefront of public discussion. Sometimes an injustice can go just so long until we must cry out in the moral outrage and psychological indignation. I am, of course, refering to the inability of most college age adults, proud Americans for the most part I might add, to legally purchase and consume alcoholic beverages in this country that declares itself the land of liberty.

Why does this tyranny against our nation's youth exist? Are we not adults? Are we not held accountable to every responsibility of adulthood? What is it that compels the freeist nation on earth to discriminate against its youngest adult citizens? They tell us it's safety. Those who favored raising the drinking age to 21 like to cite statistics that show how the drinking age saves lives. That sounds fair enough, but why stop at 21?

We could go back to prohibition and really cut back on drinking related fatalities. Of course, that would mean all those politicians would have to do away with their cocktail parties. But they shouldn't mind, because lives will be saved. Using the same rationale, we could address the issue of crime. Like drunk driving fatalities, a lot of people are killed every year by violent crimes. If we imposed a constant state of martial law and a nightly curfew, we could arrest anyone found on the streets after sunset. That would surely cut down on violent crime.

We could all tay home in our alcohol-free police state, wearing crash helmets and knee pads, playing checkers and twiddling our thumbs, but that's just not what being an American is all about. (It's not about mandatory seatbelt laws either.) The responsibility of the government is to guarantee our rights, not to hold our hands as if we were children or inmates in a funny farm.

We can vote, be taxed, be drafted, run for political office, pick our noses in public, and own firearms but darn it all, we are just not responsible enough to drink, or so we are being told. Drinking isn't everything, but it is something, and there is a higher principle at stake here. We are willing to suffer the full weight of the law should we violate it, but we ought to demand that the law be applied evenly to all segments of our society.

Surely, we young Americans did not win our revolution against British tyranny, abolish slavery during the Civil War, fight two World Wars, shed our blood in Korea or Vietnam, only to be denied a beer. Somehow, we have run amuck of the U.S. Constitution. We must all work for the day when this un-American drinking age is repealed and young adults will no longer have to crack a cold one in the closet.

A grandson and his return

William Spain

I became increasingly nervous as the ferry pulled in to Dun Leoghaire after the voyage across the Irish Sea from England. Going to Ireland was my way of making an attempt to get a feel for the land of my grandparents, and I was uncertain about how I would be received. Would they be friendly and hospitable, or would I be ignored, treated like just another nostalgic "Yank"?

A lot awaited me. One of them was stunningly beautiful countryside. The landscape is covered with a living green carpet of thick grass and wildflowers. There are flat areas, rolling hills and steep, craggy moutains. On the back roads, farm animals wander around freely—cows, sheep, goats, donkeys, horses and ponies abound. I saw lazy cats sitting in doorways and dogs running up and down the fields. They have these wonderfully amiable little terriers and collies that would not even bark at a stange man with his backpack.

The streams flow clear and pure. I drank out of more than one of them and have suffered no ill effects. Many of the lakes are so full of fish that they practically jump up on shore and beg you to put the hook in them. Apparently, acid rain is not a problem. Yet.

In the towns and cities I found people with a charming capacity for self-deprecation and a healthy mistrust in government and politicians. (I had always wondered where I got that. Now, I knkow, it is in my blood.) They also make for great hosts. The hitch-hiking is superb although I noticed that I was picked up mostly by older, rural people. When I mentioned that fact to one of my benefactors, he explained it by saying that many of the young folks suffere from the suspicion and paranoia of a modern society that their parents, for the most part, had never experienced.

I also found (particularly among the youth) a great deal of bemoaning the lack of opportunity their country affords. Many of them leave for England, Europe, or the United States as soon as they are old enough to get traveling money together. Whether this is due to a rather stagnant socialist-oriented economy, or just due to a desire for a new life in a different place, I cannot say. It has certainly been going on for a long time.

While I was in Ireland, I figured it wold be a good idea to see if the stereotype of their love of drink had any truth to it, so I spent a good amount of time in bars (for research purposes only, of course). I ran into about the same number of drunks as I would have on a typical night in Boston, rather less than I might in Northampton or Amhrst. I saw a lot of couples drinking (he, a pint—she, a half-pint) together in the cities, a few groups of women, but never one along. I looked carefully for the last (also for research purposes). The only women I saw drinking in the smaller towns were tourists.

A push is on among Irish women for reproductive freedom but it has been slow in coming. Contraception has only recently been made legal, and then only be prescription and for married persons. There is no way to get a legal divorce. Abortion services are not available. Many would say that they have a lot of catching up to do. Others would say they have gone too far already. The same as anywhere elese, it all depends on who you talk to.

I will go back to Ireland someday. It has the feeling of being a find place for a honeymoon.

As I walked in may grandmother's footsteps along the river Barrow in New Ross (which, incidentally, is also the Irish home of the Kennedy's) I reflected upon whether I approved of her choice to leave Ireland behind to raise her descendants as Americans. With no offense to my Irish hosts or their lovely island nation, I would have to say that I am glad she did. Thanks, grandma.

Smith college has no alumni

I enjoyed the *Collegian*article (Sept. 30) on Mary Maples Dunn's inauguration as president of Smith College. However, the reporter made an error when she referred to the audience "dotted with alumni." Smith College has no alumni. Since it admits only women at the undergraduate level, what it produces are alumnae. As a classics major and future alumna, I hope my letter straightens out this small mixup—I was mystified to read the my alma mater had apparently been co-ed in the past!

CATE's success depends on student work and involvement

"Hey, how are classes going?"
"Okay."
"Only okay?"
"Yeah. I have one professor who's areal zero. Couldn't teach a fish to swim."
"That's too bad. Make sure you tell CATE about that."
"Is CATE your roommate?"
"No..."

CCATE is the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide, an alternative source for students to use when selecting their classes and professors. In fact, it is the third most widely used source of information for course registration. The CATE guide has even stirred interest from colleges and universities across the country who are interested in starting their own student run course guide.

Despite its recent success and improvements, the fate of CATE at this point seems nebulous. CATE's critics, namely faculty, might be pleased if the CATE guide no longer existed, but studetns who are paying for quality education may no longer know how, and with whom, to get it. During the past week, advertisements have been placed all over campus to hire a year-round staff person to coordinate the production of the CATE guide, but no one has responded.

Granted, the pay is not great, but we should all remember that it is only recently that it has become a paid position. The hours are flexible and work is done at one's own pace, more or less. Experience? As one advertiser put it so well, "We don't ask for it, we give it." The only definite prerequisites are interest, basic writing competency, and a desire to learn.

I truly hate to add to all of the mail that criticizes students for being apathetic, but the fact that not one person responded to the advertisements makes me wonder if, indeed, students, are interested in maintaining the tools of student empowerment that we have at our disposal. The CATE guide is paid for by you—through the Student Activities Fee and costs over $10,500.

I'm sure the SGA Budget's Committee could find many uses for that amount of money, but I wouldn't want to see it used any other way. The CATE guide has survived court battles to mandate that faculty release their evaluation forms (obviously we lost), budget cuts, lack of responses, and other threats to its existence. I feel a certain responsibility to maintain what previous CATE staff people have worked so hard to create. I'm sure you do, too. Applications are still available in room 420, Student Union Building.

Dissemination of information

Bravo to columnist David Valade for his courage and forthrightness in addressing key issues of our time. His most recent piece (Sept. 30), raises the gap between the myth of America and the reality. And, as he begins to explore the dissemination of information—and its retention—determines how knowledgeable the citizenry can be. Not to minimize this point, but there are two related issues which also impact on the degrees of relevance the U.S.—as well as other Western nation's—populace may have.

The first is, how willing are individual citizens in speaking out against the pressures to conform? As social psychologists have shown, individuals will make decisions which adapt to the group norm even when, separately, they would respond differently. The other point has less to do with information per say but rather focuses on the receiver.

As the psychoanalyst Erick Fromm has stated, in a society like ours, whose prevailing dictum is "I consume therefore I am," the individual's mind is (alas) geared neither to seeking the truth nor to acting on it.

Hence, for a better world each of us must risk leaving the materialistically-conditioned domain in order to more fully develop as human beings and thus transform the status quo.

Gloria brings in exotic birds

BOSTON (AP)—Hurricane Gloria blew some rarely seen exotic birds into Massachusetts, including a White-tailed Tropicbird, but it largely spared the local wild bird and mammal populations, wildlife experts said yesterday.

In addition, about 45,000 pheasants and more than 1 million trout being raised by the Massachusetts Department of Fisheries and Wildlife rode out the storm at the state's game farms and hatcheries.

While the damage to forests was extensive, most of the things that live in the woods appear to have survived quite nicely.

"There apparently is a small mortality," said Jim Baird of the Massachusetts Audubon Society. "For the most part, birds that are on land simply hunker down and stay where they are."

But birds that live out over the ocean, known as pelagic species, do get caught up in big storms and sometimes end up far from home.

One such exotic stray, the gull-like Tropicbird, turned up Saturday morning on the soccer fiedl at Gov. Dummer Academy in Byfield, north of Boston.

Medicaid patients rap doctors

HOLYOKE (AP)—A group of social service agencies and Medicaid recipients vowed yesterday to picket the offices of Hampden County obstetricians and gynecologists who refuse to treat Medicaid patients.

Two weeks ago, a state legislative committee was about to open debate on a measure requiring doctors to treat Medicaid patients, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and the Massachusetts Medical Society announced an agreement aimed at getting physicians to voluntarily agree to join the program. The goal of the voluntary program was to sign up at least 85 percent of the state's physicians to treat Medicaid patients by the end of next year.

"We are going to hold them to it," said Barbara Shapiro of Western Massachusetts Legal Services, and a member of the group calling itself the Medicaid Access Coalition. She said the picketing was scheduled to begin "within a few weeks."

Nun faces assault charges

WAREHAM (AP)—An attorney for a former nun accused of pummeling the chests of two hunters who were stalking geese outside her home said yesterday his client may have overreacted but isn't guilty of assault.

Dorothy Checchii-O'Brien, 54, of Plymouth, an animal rights activist, is on trial before District Court Judge Richard Kelleher on charges she hit and screamed obscenities at Michael Veloza and Steven Tyler, both of Plymouth.

Her attorney, Jack Atwood of Plymouth, said Mrs. Checchi-O'Brien's actions were "not too bright, probably one of the dumber things she's done in her life." She faces five years in prison and $1,000 in fines if convicted by the six-member jury of both counts of assault and battery.

Mrs. Checci-O'Brien said outside the courtroom she was trying to protect a flock of geese she'd been feeding on a pond outside her house for 10 years.

The hunters and Mrs. Checchi-O'Brien agree that she first confronted them Dec. 8 as they shot at birds near her home. She met them two days later when they returned to the area to hunt.

S. African police fight with students

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP)—Police battled mixed-race high school students following a rally at a university near Cape Town yesterday, and tens of thousands of youths boycotted classes despite a government appeal.

Violence broke out at the University of the Western Cape in Bellville after about 4,000 student leaders staged a rally there to decide whether to go to the classes, witnesses said.

Schools reopened yesterday after being closed nearly a month because of fierce rioting and the government asked students to return.

Reporters said police fired tear gas into buildings of the mixed-race university and one youth was shot in the leg after a crowd of about 200 youths started throwing rocks. Skimishes continued late into the afternoon.

Student leaders decided at the rally to urge a return to schools tomorrow to debate at each site whether to continue the boycott.

but the government announced a ban on all meeting on school grounds, jeopardizing chances of an agreement to end the walkout.

Reporters who visited schools around the Cape Peninsula said most were deserted. Only some primary schools had relatively good attendance, news reports said.

Police said seven reporters, incuding foreign television cameramen, were arrested during the Cape Town rioting and were accused of hindering police.

Cummings solo worth the wait

Blondell Cummings
Saturday, Sept. 28
East Street Theater

By ANNE D. CHENEY
Collegian Staff

Dance Review

On Saturday, Sept. 28, Blondell Cummings performed a solo concert at the East Street Theater in Hadley. The performance was one day late, due to the hurricane, but it was well worth the wait. cummings is one of an impressive list of performers.

When Cummings stands on stage, she is not much to look at: a short black woman with no figure to speak of, no long legs, no high cheek bones. As soon as she moves or speaks, however, her emorphous face and body take shape and breathe life into every character and every movement of her choosing. Her transformations from one characterization to the next are nothing short of amazing.

Saturday's concert was divided into two sections. The first half consisted of two choreographed works and a series of structured and audience-suggested improvisations. The second half, entitled Food for Thought, was made up of four pieces, all with food names: Chicken Soup, Meat and Potatoes, Tossed Salad, and (my favorite) Chocolate. In Chocolate, Cummings, accompanied by slides of drawings of the word chocolate, was covered in a brown cloth that swirled, took various chocolate shapes, and at one point extended a beckoning figure toward the audience.

Cummings explained early in the concert, to introduce her working Moving Pictures, that her first love had been photography. The eye that she developed as a photographer gives her images on stage the clarity of a well-focused camera.

Arts Council plans bulb planting

The UMass ARts Council has announced several events in conjunction with landscape architecture/outdoor sculpture project in Southwest.

The project, located between Coolidge Tower and Hampden Commons, is the work of landscape architecture major Todd Richardson and art student Caroline Gould. Theri design was selected from a field of 30 applications.

And exhibit documenting the project will open at the Hampden Gallery on Saturday, Oct. 5. It will be accompanied by a forum in Hampden Theater 11 a.m.-noon. An opening reception will follow.

At the reception, 1,000 spring bulbs will be availabe to students for 25 cents apiece. A planting will follow the reception.

JOHN GREY: Park; a Fantastic Story (Carcanet, $7.95 paper)

By any measure, Park is a twisted little novel. A bizarre ripoff of Well's Time Machine, this short (107 pages) novel deals with a certain Dr. Mungo Park who, upon dying, finds himself in a future world inhabited by a sophisticated culture of Latin-speaking black Catholics. Underground live the morlock-like progeny of white Englishmen. Pretty wacky, huh? Originally published in 1931, Parks is preachy in much the same way C.S. Lewis' Perendela triology or Herbert Read's The Green Child communicate the authors' moral/ethical/religious beliefs. And for good reason—Grey had a vested (vestmented?) interest in the subject, he being white and English and a member of the Roman Catholic clergy. In fact, in many respects Grey's life (covered briefly in an afterward by Philip Healy) is more interesting than his book. A platonic member of the Wilde circle, Grey is believed to be the model for the hero in "The Picture of Dorian Gray," and was a friend to many of the French Symbolists such as Louys, Mallarme and Verlaine. Their influence is, unfortunately, not felt in Parks, which is rather stifled and Victorian in a not-so-charming way.

RAYMOND CHANDLER: Raymond Chandler's Unknown Thriller; The Screenplay of "Playback" (Mysterious Press, $15.95).

Mention film noir, and somebody will inevitably bring up Raymond Chandler. One of the triumverate who defined the genre (Chandler, Dashiell, Hammett and James C. Cane. Oh, add a fourth: Cornell Woolrich). The Big Sleep, Lady in the Lake, The Long Goodbye, are a few of his novels adapted for now-classic films. Chandler also scripted a few classics: The Blue Dahlia, Strangers on a Train, and Double Indemnity. Now a previously unpublished screenplay has been released, a loose adaptation of his short story, "Playback," which was later generously adapted into his kast (and some say, weakest) novel of the same name.

Film noir is characterized in part by the pathos of the (anti)hero's situation and the futility of escape; existential alienation and omnipresent darkness. The film Playback is not spared these qualities. The unfortunate heroine, vacationing under an assumed name in order to leave behind her old life, tarnished by a murder rap from which she was only narrowly aquitted, is once again suspected of murder.

Downtown is a letdown

By Jim Neill
Collegian Correspondent

Marshall Crenshaw
Downtown
Warner Brothers

Album Review

Marshall Crenshaw is not as popular as he should be. The man who got his start as John Lennon in Broadway's 'Beatlemania' is responsible for some of the most romantic pop songs of the 80s. His self-titled debut and the follow-up Field Day (as in 'having a...') are both contenders for my stranded-on-a-desert-island- with-a-stereo-and-only-ten-records list.

Marshall has always held women in high esteem. Who else could write a song called 'Girls' (from his first lp) and get away with it? Give the same subject to Billy Idol or David Lee Roth and watch the tone change from romance to rape. The guy has got a little class.

Now, a good two years since Field Day comes Downtown. Sadly, even contributions as talented as N.R.B.Q., T-Bone Burnett, Mitch Easter and Faye Hunter of Let's Active can't prevent this record from sounding like out-takes from the first two lps. The ghost of Buddy Holly has always lingered somewhere in the background of Crenshaw's records but this time he's shaking his head instead of snapping his fingers.

Songs like 'Blues is King' and 'I'm Sorry (but so is Brenda Lee)' and maybe one or two others keep the disc from being a real stinker, but after the expectations most Crenshaw fans had built up during the legnthy interim period, Downtown is more like a piece of junk mail than the love letter we'd been hoping for.

The screening of Living at Risk: The Story of a Nicaraguan Family was cancelled due to the hurricane. It has been rescheduled for Thursday 8 p.m. in the Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College.

West German police quell riot

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP)—Two thousand people went on a rampage of window-smashing and arson last night after a mass rally against neo-Nazism in a downtown square.

Hundreds of riot police fought running battles with the rioters and used water cannon against them.

The most serious clash occurred when black leather-clad rioters barricaded a boulevard opposite the main railroad station, and the police charged.

A police water cannon truck unleashed bursts on scored of milling protesters, waielding clubs and plastic shields, the police fought with many youthful demonstrators, and a woman bystander was seriously injured. Hundreds of other rioters fled, smashing store windows and whooping as they went.

About 65 people were arrested, and at least five were injured in clashes with club-wielding police, police spokesman Manfred Fullhardt said.

Another police spokesman, Herst Grinniger, said earlier that groups of black-clad rioters numbering between 100 and 300 marched through various parts of downtown, smashing windows and fighting sporadically with riot police. Windows of the main train station were shattered by rock-throwing demonstrators.

It was the fourth day of street violence by leftists protesting a weekend meeting in Frankfurt of the neo-Nazi National Democratic Party. The violence also has spread to other West German cities.

Rescuers walk among the remains of Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia following a raid by Israeli fighter planes yesterday.

PLO retreat bombed by Israeli jets, 60 die

HAMAM PLAGE, Tunisia (AP)—Streaking 1,500 miles across the Mediterranean Sea, Israeli warplanes bombed Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters in a Tunis suburb yesterday and the PLO said as many as 60 people were killed.

The jets swept low over the coast to strike Yasser Arafat's headquarters only 12 miles south of the Tunisian capital. Although Arafta escaped the devastating attack, the Israeli bombs destroyed his political headquarters, his residence and the homes of several PLO officials.

Dressed in military fatigues and appearing distressed, Arafat and an aide inspected the damage and talked with the wounded. Arafat has made his main headquarters in Tunisia since he was driven out of Beirut by the Israelis in 1982.

In Tel Aviv, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin told a briefing the raid was to retaliate for the Yom Kuppur slayings of three Israelis aboard a yacht in Cyprus. And he called it a warning to terrorists "that the long arm of the IDF Israel Defense Forces will reach them wherever they are."

Although a caller claiming to represnt the PLO group "Force 17" claimed responsibility for the attack in Cyprus, the PLO has denied involvement.

Lt. Gen. Moshe Levy, Israel's chief of staff, told a briefing in Tel Aviv that as many as 50 people were killed in yesterday's raid. Medical sources in Tunis put the death toll at about 30 and said about 100 were injured.

Israel has bombed guerrilla bases in neighboring Lebanon 13 times this year, but it was the first time Israel has struck any other country since June 7, 1981 when Israeli warplanes bombed an Iraqi nuclear reactor near Baghdad. Israel also mounted the airborne mission in 1976 and rescued hastages held at Entebbe airport in Uganda.

Yesterday's raid provoked expressions of anger from other Arab countries and Tunisia called for action by the U.S. Security Council.

In Washington, the Reagan administration suggested it considered the raid an act of self-defense.

Stephenson dumped

Bills' coach replaced by Bullough

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP)—Kay Stephenson, whose Buffalo Bills won only two of their National Football League games last season and are winless so far this year, was fired Tuesday as head coach, the team announced.

Team owner Ralph C. Wilson Jr. said in a statement that he had relieved Stephenson as head coach and replaced him with defensive coordinator Hank Bullough.

"I have made this move today because I consider it to be in the best interest of the Buffalo Bills football team" Wilson said. "Kay Stephenson is a friend of mine and awill remain a friend of mine, but we need to move in a new direction, and it can no longer wait."

Tawo weeks ago, after the Bills were beaten 42-3 by the New York Jets, Wilson refused to place blame on Stephenson. The team owner said most of the Bills were not NFL-quality players.

Stephenson, 41, was the second-youngest coach in the NFL behind Sam Wyche of Cincinnati.

Reds stay alive, win 7-6

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—Eric Davis looped a two-run single to center field in the eighth inning to send Cincinnati ahead and the Reds beat the San Francisco Giants 7-6 Tuesday to remain mathematically alive in the National League West pennant race.

The first-place Los Angeles Dodgers, who lead the Reds by five games, had an opportunity to clinch at least a tie for the division title by beating San Diego on Tuesday night.

Davis had three hits, including the game-winner off relie ver Scott Garrelts, 9-5, and drove in four runs. The Reds loaded the bases in the eighth on Dave Concepcion's single, a walk to Bo Diaz and a bunt single by Ron Oester.

Tom Hume, 3-4, was the winning pitcher and John France earned his 11th save.

HOUSTON—Phil Garner and Dickie Thon drove in second-inning runs to back rookie Charlie Kerfeld's pitching and give the Astros a 2-0 victory Tuesday over the Atlanta Braves.

Kerfeld, 3-2, allowed four hits, struck out six and walked two in 1-3 innings before Dave Smith took over and picked up his 26th save. only one Atlanta runner reached as second against Kerfeld.

Steve Bedrosian, 7-18, took the less.

Volleyball cruises, sweeping Mt. Holyoke

UMass now 14-0

BY ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY–The University of Massachusetts volleyball juggernaut continued to roll on as the Minutewomen swept a pesky Mount Holyoke College squad 15-10, 15-5, 15-9 last night. The victory raises the 12th-ranked spikers record to 14-0.

"They (Mount Holyoke) were a very tough team to play," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino. "They were everything I thought they would be. They're a very scrappy team." Mount Holyoke gave UMass all they could handle in game one. The spikers raced out to an 8-2 lead behind the strong serving of sophomore middle hitter Marcy Guiliotis. But Holyoke chipped away at the UMass lead and tied the score at 10-10 before an Ann Ringrose crush gave the Minutewomen an 11-10 lead. UMass went on to win game one 15-10, connecting on 100 percent of their serves.

Game two proved to be a bit of a breather for the Minutewomen. UMass cruised to an 8-1 lead thanks to several booming kills by Guiliotis and senior co-captain Sally Maher. The UMass lead would bulge to 14-1 before Holyoke middle hitter Kelly Boldy nailed four consecutive services aces. A Ringrose crush ended the mild Holyoke rally and gave UMass a convincing 15-5 game two victory.

Despite taking game two in decisive fashion, the spikers looked a little tentative on the floor, more so than in game one.

"The thing that I was the most afraid of was that our flow would be disturbed from the week-long layoff," said Sortino. "But I think it was there tonight. Our being off for a week didn't hurt us that much."

Game three would be an almost carbon copy of game one. This time, Mount Holyoke jumped out to the early lead taking a 4-1 advantage. A Maher kill down the line closed the gap to 4-3 and it began to look like the Minutewomen were on a roll.

But Holyoke stopped two UMass rallies and led 9-6 before a Guiliotis block started things again for UMass. Maher then took matters into her own hands by nailing three bruising kills to put the spikers up, 10-9. A Ringrose crush, along with two Holyoke errors and another Guiliotis block, gave UMass game three, 15-9 to complete the sweep.

"Our timing was very good," said Sortino. "That means that we can start spreading out the offense a little bit more. I'm very happy about that."

SPORTS

Caught in a slump:

Field hockey is at Yale

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Coming off a frustrating 2-1 overtime loss to Springfield College on Sunday, the fourth-ranked University of Massachusetts field hockey team will be looking to rebound today as it travels to New Haven to take on Yale.

'We've had two really good practices. We're ready to roll,' said UMass coach Pam Hixon.

On Sunday, the Minutewomen dominated both halves of the game, outshooting the Indians 41-7 and holding a 19-2 edge in corners. The Astroturf of Springfield's Benedum Field favored the quick passing, ball control offense of UMass, but the Minutewomen, 4-2, failed to capitalize on scoring opportunities for the second time in three games.

'The opportunities have been there. We've been dominating play in each of the last three games,' Hixon said. 'It's just going to take a little more work. We'll have to bear down and execute a little better.'

Hixon laid out the following strategy for today's game (3 p.m.), 'We're going to have to move the ball around, creating more chances to score. We haven't been too deceptive in setting up our shots, and in order to score more goals, we're going to have to rely on the element of surprise a bit more.'

Against Springfield, Hixon said that the Minutewomen panicked at a point in the game when they should have been in control. Unraveling under pressure is not characteristic of the nation's fourth-ranked team, but according to Hixon, the loss is already well in the past as far as the team is concerned.

'For a while we had tunnel vision and that hurt us,' she said. 'But that's all done for, out attitude is that we've got to make things happen and forget about what has happened.' Yale is anchored by goaltender Nada Sellars, one of the top keepers in the nation. With the Minutewomen's recent scoring slump, it will be important to control the tempo against the Elis.

'Sellars is exceptional,' said Hixon. 'We're going to have to be very persistent and try to play around her because she's a very aggressive goalkeeper. She'll come out and challenge an offense.'

Last season, the Minutewomen defeated Yale, 2-0 at home on NOPE Field in a game that saw UMass, ranked seventh at the time, outshoot Yale 19-4. Sellars, with 14 saves, turned in a strong performance. UMass would like to see a repeat of that score this afternoon.

Football falls from 1-AA poll

The University of Massachusetts football team enjoyed a short stay in the Division 1-AA national rankings, falling out of the poll this week after losing to Harvard, 10-3 on Saturday. Richmond, a tight 19-14 winner over the Minutemen, are first with 79 points and three of the four first place votes. The only New England team is Harvard, 16th at 2-0.

In the weekly ECAC statistical rankings, UMass does very well. The Minutemen are third in scoring defense, allowing an average of 10.3 points per game. They are first against the rush and second in total defense (242 yards per game). Kickoff returner Andrew Thomas, a freshman, is second with an average of 25.3 yards-per-return.

High-flying men's soccer gets tested by Yale today

By BRYAN QUENZEL

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, 7-3, puts its perfect 4-0 home record on the line against an excellent Yale University squad this afternoon at Boyden Field at 3 p.m.

Yale is ranked second in New England behind the University of Connecticut. The Minutemen are sixth, but on a roll, winning six of their last seven outings.

UMass is hurting though as midfielders Andy Bing and John Shannon are injured and not expected to start. Bing has been the leading scorer for the Minutemen so far this season with seven goals and five assists. He has scored the game winning tally in UMass' last two contests.

Head coach Jeff Gettler is counting on forwards Franz Zwicklbauer (two goals, four assists) and Ferdie Adoboe (two game winning goals, four assists) to pick-up the scoring for UMass.

'I am hoping the forwards will put some goals in the net,' said Gettler. 'The midfielders have been doing the scoring, so now the forwards have to get on track.'

Senior Don Donahue will be the goalkeeper for Massachusetts. Donahue is 3-3 on the season with a 2.5 goals against average and 33 saves.

The Elis tout an impressive lineup with five former high school All-Americans including freshman Steve Cass from Duxbury.

Cass set the Massachusetts state high school scoring record and was a three-time All-American.

Jeff Duback will be in net for Yale. Last season, Duback was named a first team collegiate All-American. Other key players to watch are Charlie Dumphy from Springfield and Klaus Jenson out of Duxbury.

'They are very balanced with no weaknesses,' said Gettler. 'An all-around good team, so it should be a good game for us. We will see what we are made of.'

If the last two meetings between these teams is any indication, this game should go down to the wire.

Two years ago, the Elis scored with 20 seconds left in overtime for a 2-1 victory. Last year, Yale defeated UMass 3-1 in another overtime affair.

SOCCER KICKS: In other statistics, Bing leads UMass in shots with 41. Zwicklbauer is second with 29 with Anders Hedelin third at 28. UMass has allowed more than two goals only once this season, a 5-0 pasting by Boston University. Bing is the only player in double figures for points, with 19.

Board of Trustees seeks $259.6 million for 1987

By GREG BROWN

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees voted yesterday to ask the Legislature for $259.6 million for Fiscal Year 1987, a 15 percent increase over the University's Fiscal Year 1986 appropriations.

The trustees also approved their FY87 capital outlay budget which is money to be appropriated for extra projects. Because there was no capital outlay in FY85, and one is not expected for FY86, the FY87 request repeats the proposals that have been made for the past two years, according to a trustee document.

The capital outlay request would garner $1.7 million for the Amherst campus, to replace Fisher Laboratory, which was destroyed by a fire in April.

After the vote on the budget request, a debate ensued over whether the University should petition the Board of Regents of Higher Education for more support. The regents have initially recommended that the University only request about $241 million, but they will hold hearings in Memorial Hall Monday to further analyze the proposed requests.

Of the $259.6 million, $230 million is for "maintenance" funding—the amount of funding needed to maintain current enrollment and facilities—and $29.6 million is for additional programming.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said, "I'm prepared to go to the regents (Monday) and ask them for more, but will the board (of trustees) back me up?"

Trustee Chairman Robert H. Quinn said, "We on the board are all concerned with maintenance requests."

Trustee James F. Carlin said, "I refuse to believe the regents don't know that if you don't maintain something, its cost will go up."

In other business, the trustees granted tenure to Eula Bingham, a public health professor, and William Highter of the civil engineering department.

Also, the trustees approved the merger of the Judaic Studies department with the Near Eastern Studies faculty, and the creation of a PhD program at the Amherst campus.

The trustees voted to approve a $1 per semester optional fee for the State Student Association of Massachusetts.

Center refurnished

At a ceremonial dedication yesterday of the new University Career Center, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey announced plans for two more new buildings at the Amherst campus.

A new Visitor Information Center will be built next year across from the Whitmore Administration Building, and plans are being made to erect an admissions office building within the next three years, Duffey said.

"Groundbreaking for the Paul Robsham Memorial Center for Visitors will commence in the spring," Duffey said. "We hope to complete it a year from then," he said.

The visitor center will be named for the son of the University Trustee E. Paul Robsham, who died in an auto accident a few years ago, Duffey said. The elder Robsham financed the project in full.

Inauguration of the Pagoda celebrates Gandhi's birthday

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

With a peace walk from Northampton to the Campus Pond, speeches, prayers and theatrics, the builders of the Leverett Peace Pagoda celebrated Mahatma Gandhi's birthday yesterday as part of their week-long inauguration of the pagoda.

The marchers, carrying Buddhist prayer flags and beating small drums, were greeted at the Campus Pond by a 12-foot statue of Gandhi, several large white-cloth birds and Associate Chancellor James Leheny.

Despite the constant drizzle, about 60 people attended the rally. Other curious students looked on while a skit depicting the sinking of the Greenpeace "Rainbow Warrior" was performed.

Later, 11 vows of conduct taken by Gandhi were recited as a small fire was lighted for each.

After marching from Northampton at 7:30 a.m., Jon Keller of the UMass Peacemakers told the crowd, "You might ask why anyone in their right mind would do it. I did it to wake people up from their daily lives."

He warned the crowd of the threat of Trident submarines and said, "If you don't think we have enough (submarines) now don't worry, my government is planning on building 22 more at $1.2 billion each. I encourage everyone to do all they can to stop nuclear madness."

John Schuchardt of Plowshares Eight, a pro-disarmament group told the crowd, "The work of peacemaking is planting seeds. We are people who know that these seeds (of peace) will bring peace. We know that violence only brings a harvest of violence."

Commuter seats nullified; election slated next week

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate debated for about one hour and forty minutes last night before nullifying the commuter area senate and governing board elections.

The motion to accept the commuter elections, which failed by one vote, 25 to 26, was cast by secret ballot after the prolonged debate.

The nullification will mean a new election will be scheduled for the commuter seats on Tuesday, Oct. 8, near the Student Union entrance to the Hatch. An amendment was voted down which would have allowed candidates who didn't originally run to file nomination papers.

Earlier in the meeting, the senate voted to approve the results of every other area election held Monday and Tuesday.

The 24 commuter area seats still remain vacant, until the commuter election Tuesday. A run-off election will be held soon for eight other seats that are temporarily vacant because of a tie, said John Crowley, governmental affairs chairman.

When the motion to approve the commuter area elections first came up for debate, it nearly was passed without much attention from the senate. This was later attributed to senators who said they weren't paying close enough attention to the floor action. Debate was started by Bill Bennett, a senator who said rushing through the motion to accept the results "was not fair to the seven thousand people" in the commuter area.

Dave Martin, the commuter area spokesman, who said he had staffed a polling booth with the approval of Crowley, said "there's a question here of degree" of the violation committed. Some SGA officials said it was "ethically wrong" for Martin to work at the polling area of which he was running. Also, there was a question concerning individuals who allegedly handed out campaign leaflets within 50 feet of the ballot boxes, and the implication of this action.

A motion was then approved to limit debate to two minutes per senator who wished to argue either pro or con on the nullification.

"I won on both positions," said Jordan Rosner, finance committee chairman, "but I still want them invalidated." Rosner said the names of candidates on the alleged distributed leaflet received more votes than the names of candidates not appearing.

It's more work for me to do," Crowley said. "I don't think it's (new election) going to change anything radically."

Before adjournment, the senate passed a resolution that calls for Amherst College President Peter Pouncy to apologize and explain to the UMass community for referring to the Five College Area as "...a big elephant and four little beauties."

"None from UMass is convinced that it was done in a humoristic fashion," said Stacy Roth, campus president. "It's our hope that out of respect for the UMass student body and officials that we will receive some proper action on this request."

Rock Hudson dies of AIDS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rock Hudson, the cinema idol whose gallant admission of a yearlong battle against AIDS won sympathy and attention for victims of the disease, died yesterday at his home. He was 59.

"Please God, he has not died in vain," his friend and onetime co-star Elizabeth Taylor said in a statement.

Miss Taylor, who starred with Hudson in "Giant" and "The Mirror Crack'd," was one of his closest supporters in his final days, and was co-host for an AIDS benefit Sept. 19 with actor Burt Reynolds.

Hudson donated $250,000 to the benefit, which grossed more than $1.2 million for AIDS research, and sent his last public words:

"I am not happy that I am sick. I am not happy that I have AIDS, but if that is helping others, I can, at least, know that my own misfortune has had some positive worth."

He had known for more than a year that he suffered from acquired immune deficiency syndrome, but it became publicly known after a gaunt Hudson checked into the American Hospital in Paris on July 21. The hospital decided that Hudson was too weak to be a good candidate for its experimental therapy with an unproven drug.

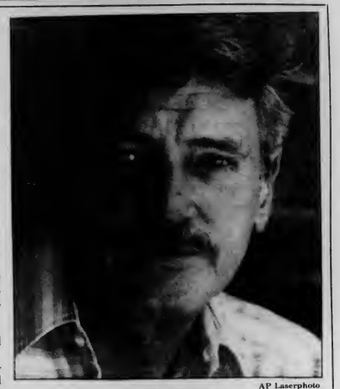
He returned to Los Angeles Aug. 6 and spent the next 18 days in UCLA Medical Center.

Olson said Hudson had been seeing friends and seemed unchanged recently. He said the actor had not suffered pain or taken pain medication for complications of AIDS, which disarms the body's resistance to disease.

The office of Rexford Kennamer, Hudson's physician, said it would not comment on the immediate cause opf the actor'sdeath. Coroner's spokesman Bill Gold said it would not be a coroner's case, since Hudson had been under the care of a physician.

Olson said only the staff at Hudson's home was there when he died.

Funeral services were not set immediately.



The most common victims are homosexuals, intravenous drug users and hemophiliacs. The disease is believed to be spread through sexual contact, contaminated needles and blood transfusions.

In 1955, Hudson married his agent's secretary, Phyllis Gates. The newlyweds had a much-publicized honeymoon in Florida, but separated the following year and were divorced in 1958. Hudson never remarried.

People magazine reported this year that the marriage had been set up by Universal studios to dispel rumors about Hudson's homosexuality. Olson refused to comment on such reports.

"There has never been any definitive statement about that from anyone, including Rock himself," Olson said Wednesday.

Hudson, 6-foot-4 and ruggedly handsome, was a perennial top 10 box office attraction during the 1950s and 1960s when big studios created stars and built movies around them.

Animal-rights activist convicted of assault

WAREHAM, Mass. (AP) — A diminuitive animal-rights activist accused of punching and shouting at two men who were hunting birds near her home was convicted yesterday of assaulting one man and assaulting and beating the other.

A six-member jury deliberated less than two hours before returning a verdict against Dorothy Checci-O'Brien, 54, of Plymouth.

Mrs. O'Brien showed no reaction in the courtroom when the verdicts were read, but outside she embraced her husband, John O'Brien. As the hunters walked past the couple, O'Brien shouted, "You happy? You should be."

At sentencing immediately following the verdict, District Judge Richard P. Kelleher, turned down a prosecutor's request for probation and fined Mrs. Checci-O'Brien $405.

The 4-foot-11 woman was accused of pummeling the chests of Michael Veloza and Steven Tyler, both of Plymouth, when she spotted them stalking geese and ducks near her house last December.

Waste bill may require approval of nuclear site

GREENFIELD, Mass. (AP) —Wary western Massachusetts residents have balked at a proposed low-level radioactive wate dump bill some say could circumvent a 3-year-old state law requiring voter approval of nuclear waste sites.

"There is everything in this bill from soup to nuts, but there is a glaring omission of any mention" of the referendum, state Rep. Carmen Buell, D-Greenfield, complained at a public hearing Tuesday.

The hearing was the first of three being held in western Massachusetts this week by a special Legislative Commission, which drew up the proposed sitting bill. Additional hearings are scheduled in North Andover, Fall River, Worcester and Boston.

"We beat the nuclear industry fair and square the American way—at the ballot box," Said Al Giordano of Charlemont, an anti-nuclear activist, who led the initiative petition drive that led to the 1982 referendum law. "Tonight we are here with a painful sense of deja vu... and the fact that we have to stand here burns in our guts."

Sam Lovejoy, who gave national attention to the anti-nuclear movement in 1979 when he felled a 400-foot-high test tower on the site of a proposed nuclear power plant in Montague, urged resistance "in the Legislature, in the courts and, if need be, by any available means."

Reference to the 1982 law was deliberately omitted from the bill because no popular vote would be "triggered until all other licensing and approvals are in place" for a proposed site, said state Sen. Carol Ammick, D-Bedford, chairwoman of the special commission.

peace). I can't help thinking again and again of that image. That we are all living on borrowed time, that we are all living on death row."

The idea of a Peace Pagoda began with Nichidatsu Fujii, a buddhist high priest, who built the first one shortly after the first atom bombs were dropped on Japan.

Work on the Peace Pagoda began 18 months ago under the direction of the Nipponzan Myohoji buddhist order. Leverett was chosen as the first peace pagoda site in the United States, partly because it is one of first nuclear-free zones in the nation.

Midwifery called "growing movement"

Choices about birth have implications concerning freedom

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Women who want an alternative to hospitalized childbirth, have the option of midwifery, a process recently legalized in Massachusetts, which allows women to have their children in their own home.

Midwifery, legal in six states, is now the subject of pending legislation in the Massachusetts legislature, which would provide a certification board for a all practicing midwives. Primary opponents to the practice are members of the American Medical Association who have lobbied against its legalization. The American Medical Association in Washington D.C. refused comment yesterday along with its public relations office in Chicago.

"It's important that people realize that this is not just a fad, but a growing movement. A large cross section of society is demanding midwife services," said Julie Burns, who has been a midwife for four years and is currently practicing in Amherst.

American Medical Association statistics show that in Holland, where 89 percent of children are born at home, infant mortality rates are 2 to 3 percent compared to The United State's 13 percent rate. Burns explained that midwives "offer the best care" in childbirth because of the intimacy and "philosophy of natural birth," involved with midwifery.

"We can afford to give women individual attention. We don't have a whole roll of women coming in here. The average visit with a doctor lasts about three minutes, but (midwives) visit with their patients for at least an hour."

Burns said she believes in a philosophy which supports a drug-free, natural birth process which she said hospitals rarely provide. Besides administering unnecessary drugs to patients, Burns finds fault in procedures which bar husbands and children from being present during labor.

"Women have a feminist perspective when it comes to most things, but with birth all that seems to go out the window. In the future I hope women can realize that choices about birth have long-reaching implications concerning a baby's health, and women's freedom," Burns said.

Shirley Kopinski, who had her child at home under the care of a midwife, said midwifery is an issue "of freedom of choice."

"he personal aspect of childbirth has been taken away aid Kopinski,"adding; "Hospitals are places where people go when they're sick. Birth is not an abnormal process and in a hospital it's seen as such."

Kopinski said she chose midwifery because she "didn't like the authority in hospitals."

"With a midwife, birth is a home-like process, and you can go at your own pace. Doctors have a way of playing on women's fears, but midwives help me feel powerful, and are there to help me through that natural process," she said.

According to Burns, midwives provide "extensive and thorough pre-natal care", on a regular basis. Cost for services usually range from $400 to $800 which she says is very low compared to hospital care, although midwife services are not covered by insurance. However, if the bill which would provide a certification board were passed she said it "would just be a matter of time" before it were covered under most insurance plans.

Eating disorders mask problems of pressures, stress

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Anorexia and bulimia, eating disorders which are reaching epidemic levels on college campuses, are not diseases but symptoms that people use to mask other problems according to an eating disorder counselor.

Mary Aubrey, a counselor at the Everywomen's center at UMass, said most of the people who suffer from these disorders are women who feel that their more deep rooted problems can be solved by losing weight.

"For many women by not providing themselves with food they don't have to face the real problem that is bothering them," Aubrey said adding that family dynamics plays a major role in the development of eating problems.

Many women who are brought up in households that don't teach them how to cope with pressures and stress are susceptible to develop an eating disorder said Aubrey.

"When women are forced to make the transition from home life to college life it can be very difficult," Aubrey said, "aside from academic pressures are the pressures of dating, meeting new people, and learning to deal with a strange atmosphere. By developing an eating disorder a women doesn't have to cope with these pressures because she can hide them with her concern for her weight."

Bulimia, also called binging and purging, has reached a higher level on the college campus then anorexia because the physical signs of bulimia are less noticeable.

"The body weight of someone suffering from bulimia rarely changes so not many people would suspect that an individual has an eating disorder," Aubrey said.

She explained that an individual with bulimia will eat only to dispell the food later while someone suffering from anorexia will starve themselves. Aubrey also said that one out of every person suffering from an eating disorder is male.

Ellen LaFleche, a teacher of eating disorders in the southwest residential college explained that another big problem on the college campus is that society has put pressure on women to be physically beautiful, and part of that means being very thin.

"Women have to learn to like their bodies," LaFleche said, "they spend too much time talking about being on diets and discussing their looks. Women want to try and have the perfect body when they should be happy with the body they have."

Mejia speaks about Bolivia

The moving human force behind the Federation of Peasant Women in Bolivia, Lucia Mejia, will speak on "Women in Bolivia's Peasant Movement" 7 p.m. tonight in Porter Lounge, Converse Hall at Amherst College.

In 1980, Mejia was elected Executive National Secretary of Peasant Women. On a trip to the Control Workers headquarters in Bolivia, where Mejia was accompanied by a fellow union worker and her infant son, her companion was killed and the union was then taken over by military forces.

"When there was the military coup of Garcia Meza, I knew of no one outside of Bolivia to whom I could tell what was happening to my country. I want the world to know about Bolivia, about our lives, about our struggles," Mejia said in an interview with the Third World Women's Program of the Everywoman's Center.

Mejia then left her post in the then military-controlled country, resuming it when democracy returned to the country. Now a community and union organizer in Bolivia, Mejia trains women in community participation, union and cooperative formation, while concentrating on solving basic health problems.

Dreamer is pretentious

Beautiful Dreamer Uniform Series
By Colette
Herter Art Gallery, through Oct. 17

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

In one sense, Colette's Beautiful Dreamer Uniform Series, currently on display in Herter Art Gallery, is the ultimate show: it couldn't possibly be worse.

COLETTE – A self portrait of the "beautiful dreamer."

To begin with, Colette has chosen an art form so in vogue that it's cliched: painting over photographs. This in itself would be forgivable if the artist had approached this avant-garde method in an original or interesting way.

She didn't.

Eight oversized works comprise one part of the series. The image of a sulky woman in a bunchy mini-dress and leg warmers is barely perceptible through meaningless splatterings of paint and Halloween glitter. The works are similar to the point of being boring, and, in all but one case, even the colors are unexciting–beiges, pinks and gray atop more grays. Boring.

The one happy exception is slashed with vibrant reds and teals, and bold gold sparkles. This portrait evokes a passionate, almost carnival-like feeling.

But one work does not a show make.

A dozen framed painted photographs are slightly better, but still lacking in inspiration. The photographed woman is more visible here, but still covered with the same profusion of dots and blotches and lines. Three of these, in which the artist has drawn the visual 'lines' directly onto the photo, are downright insulting to the viewer's intelligence. It doesn't take any genius to figure out where such lines are; we don't need the artist to tell us.

Two very forthright works in the series are headless statues of women swathed in fabric, and lit from within. They are reminiscent of the tacky Christmas ornaments often seen on front lawns during December; they're tacky. Worse than that, they're just plain ugly.

The largest work in this unauspicious exhibit is a three-panelled mural. The same sultry woman is painted here, minus her photograph. Bunches of fabric are stapled to the work, and again we see the same abstract confusion that never bothers to interest, excite, or touch the viewer.

The work is pretentious and completely unworthy of gallery space in a community with so many talented artists. And it's interesting to note that the woman photographed–the beautiful dreamer–is Colette herself.

She should keep dreaming.

It's also interesting to note that Herter Gallery's other show, Paintings and Drawings by Leonel Gongora, which was to open Sept. 30, has been delayed until Oct. 10. The gallery's excuse?

'The artist got nervous.'

Enough said.

Uncle bonsai, a progressive music trio comes to the Iron Horse this Wednesday.

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

Now that everybody has calmed down from the hurricane (somebody had to mention it just one more stupid time) we can settle down to avoiding doing our homework because we are obsessed with seeing interesting acts when they are in the area.

So what are these facinating things to do, anyway? Well, as my parents used to say, there's something for everyone. Tonight, for example, at the Iron Horse, there is some Celtic kind of experience featuring Relativity. On the other hand, in an effort to impress a potential producer, Girls' Night Out will be tearing up the stage at Pearl Street. In case you don't know, they are an area motown and originals band. Locally, the Habits will be playing at the Hatch for free.

Tommorow night, if you are willing to travel for a heavy metal type party, you can see Ratt playing in New Haven, which isn't as far as it seems. Locally, the incredible Dr. John will be playing at the Iron Horse. He is dependably good. He's a really good piano player as well as the writer of such songs as 'Right Place, Wrong Time,' and 'Such a Night' which he performed in the Band's movie, 'The Last Waltz.'

On Saturday there will be a concert for world peace in the Fine Arts Center featuring Odetta, DO'A as well as other artists. Sunday John Sprague will be at the Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College and Mimi Farina will be at the Iron Horse. Monday brings my obsession, Jorma Kaukonen, to the Iron Horse with Atlanta Bluesman Roy Dunn.

Tuesday, bluegrass guitarist Tony Rice will be at the Iron Horse, and Uncle Bonsai, an entertaining vocal trio featuring one of progressive music's few vocal counter-tenors, will be at the Iron Horse on Wednesday.

Watch for Bo Diddley next Thursday at Pearl Street.

Perceptions of our homeless

Drew McLeod

Last year, as an exchange student in Portland, Oregon, I did some field research on the skid-row homeless in that city. I would like to share some of that information and illuminate the facts on a greatly misunderstood minority group. There are roughly 45 million people living below the poverty level in America. Of this class, there is another lower class minority of two to three million people living at the bare minimum of life.

In 1983, a division of the Oregon state social services interviewed 131 people living on the streets, in missions, in soup lines, in parks, etc. Here are some of their findings: The mean age was 38 years and 58 percent were in their 20's and 30's. 85 percent were male, 77 percent were white, and 40 percent said they slept outside. Two-thirds depended on soup lines or other agency provided meals. One-fourth were on public assistance. Almost 50 percent reported having some high school education or graduating from high school. 46 percent had some military experience; of those who did, 82 percent were honorably discharged. Of those answering the question, two-thirds said they had no immediate family. 68 percent had never been married. Of those who had family, over three-fourths said they received no help from them. Lastly, over 90 percent were unemployed.

More and more social scientists are supporting the widely accepted theory that the most influential factor in our lives is the environment in which we are raised and come from. Most of the enviroment depends on social class and education. Most of the homeless come from the lower to working class strata. Between 50 and 70 percent of the homeless suffer from either alcoholism or mental illness.

It is practically impossible for people without treatment of these problems to hold a job or lead a satisfactory life. Because of their social class, they cannot depend on financial assistance form their family for treatment. Even worse, few of the homeless have any family, thus having no one to rely on for moral support or "connections" for jobs.

Even those who aren't mentally ill or alcoholics just don't wind up there and they just don't leave. It is a hole they dig themselves into and it's a rut they get stuck in. It is days of boredom, some loneliness, and despair, where alcohol can be a relief. After months of sleeping outside, they enter into a negative culture, a negative culture which drains one's self respect, diminishing one's chances for a job. These people endure a lot of stress. Deviancy, instability, and relapse have a direct relation to that stress.

Another problem these people fact is structural unemployment. In a capitalist system, production runs in a boom-bust cycle. These unemployed homeless are dependent and vulnerable to those cycles. Besides working for low wages, they are the last to be hired, and the first to be fired. When a recession hits, there are fewer public funds available, resulting in social services cut back even further. As an example, since the start of the Reagan Administration, it's estimated that 250,000 mentally ill were cut from Security Disability.

There is not sufficient treatment for the poorer, lower class people suffering from the diseases of alcoholism, mental illness, and/or the homeless phenomenon. Basic human needs (mental/physical health, food, shelter, clothing) are human rights, not privileges. In a country unprecedented in wealth, it is difficult to imagine we can let people live this way.

In closing, to help raise funds for a homeless shelter, the UMass Peacemakers and the Radical Student Union are having a Peace Camp, starting Friday, at the Campus Pond. Besides fund raisers, there will be informal group discussions, teach-ins, and a chance to interact with students working for peace and justice. I hop to see you there.

Did you know that UMass/Amherst maintains one of the most celebrated Linguistics Departments in the world? Did you realize that our Engineering, Polymer Science, History and Political Science Departments provide some of the most qualified graduates in the nation, within their fields? Have you recently seen a listing of the number of Awards, Fellowships and Grants which are achieved by the Faculty and graduates of this university each year?

Have you been able to take the time out of your heavy academic schedule to realize all of the social and cultural involvements and educational experiences which are available to you here at the university? Has anyone really bothered to tell you before, that contrary to popular Massachusetts at Amherst is considered one of the best state, and indeed, overall higher education institutions in the nation?

What is that you ask? Why are we spending valuable column space on "horn blowing hoopla?" Frankly, because our University is well worth it! Mostly, because too many of our friends and neighbors do not realize our potential, and it is our responsibility to make our presence known! For reasons of diverse academic excellence, for reasons of social and cultural education, and because our size provides some of the best reasoning within the Five-College Area. For political rallies, concert tours, Broadway shows, lectures, debates, films and so many other types of events take place for/under the care, education, and leadership of members of our Five-College Consortium.

Finally, because statements such as Peter Pouncey's, the president of Amherst College, reference to the Five-College area as "the big elephant surrounded by four little beauties," are still being made today. It is about time that our neighbors appreciate all that UMass has to offer and does provide for their use and enjoyment!

Pouncey made that statement this past Sunday, while speaking at the inauguration of the new Smith College president. Once again, the worth and reputation of this University are brought to question by an overzealous neighbor. We are not over reacting, we are simply trying to put an end to a constant stream of unprovoked attacks. In fact, if we truly want to change the course of events, the feelings must come from within—which is why we have come to you.

Obviously, if we had no problems with how the University was operated internally, we would not have tried to become the SGA co-presidents. Yet, there is a huge difference between attempting to gain more input into/or asking for changes within the system, and projecting an attitude of low esteem and pride about the opportunities made available to us all. Throughout the following two semesters, we, along with many University officials, will be organizing a large scale, Campus Pride and Beautification Campaign.

It is our hope that by steadily promoting the worth of various campus facilities and activities, we will be able to help convince not only our own community, but also our neighbors, that UMass has much to offer everyone. Indeed, by improving our physical appearance, or simply by being aware of the vast array of services available at our University, we can curb the habitual actions of disrespect received from our peer institutions, as well as many state officials.

The coming months are meant for enjoyment and education. Thee is a necessity for your organizational involvement and overall participation. Most of all, there is a need for open minds and acceptance of the actual and high value of our university.

Each day, as we strive for excellence in academia, social awareness, or any other task, we also reserve the right to feel good about what we are experiencing, why we are experiencing it, and where we are having that experience. We have no need to be subjected to the immense disrespect portrayed in statements such as Mr. Pouncey's.

Indeed, the next time someone prods your ego, by asking about "life at the Zoo"—tell them that you have not been able to visit in awhile, but the last you heard, the newborn Panda was doing just fine.

Stacy Roth and Dani Burgess are the SGA co-president.

Parking and sufficient sleep

Kathy Hart

It was 6 a.m. and I should have been asleep. Actually, I think that I was asleep, only in an upright position. As I sat outside of Hasbrouck with two strangers, swatting mosquitos off my arm, I wondered to myself, is this worth it?

I'm sure you may be wondering what would get me up at such an ungodly hour. Me, who has never even taken an 8 a.m. class in four years at UMass. Me, who needs 10 hours of sleep each night to function properly.

I almost didn't wake up. My roommate had to practically drag me out of bed. I was telling myself, "the PVTA bus isn't really that bad." She told me, "You'll be sorry," and she was right. Last month I was too late to get my Campus Center Garage basement monthly parking sticker. I wasn't about to miss out this month!

As I lay in bed that morning, I had thought about my other choices. I could get a sticker in P-lot, but that's about as close to my classes as my apartment is. I could take the PVTA bus, but after my experiences on the MBTA in Boston last summer, I swore that I'd never take another bus.

My last choice was to continue to fight for meters near the School of Management every day. It's not so bad if I can get a five-hour meter, but since my first class on Monday, Wednesday and Friday is 11:15, it was rough to even get an hourly meter. And when I did, I'd have to run back and forth all day, putting money in the meter. And, even then I'd usually get a ticket at the end of the day for being three minutes late.

And so, I got up that morning, and there I was. I was number two. A young man was already waiting by the door when I had arrived. My roommate decides to check all of the doors to see if we could get into the building. The concrete was damp, cold and very uncomfortable. I laughed at myself for bringing a book to read, a boring book at that. I could barely keep my eyes open, and reading was not the remedy.

Suddenly, I saw a silhouette approaching from inside the building. It was my roommate! I was psyched as it was starting to rain. Two more people had arrived, my roommate opened the door and the five of us made our way down the dark hallway. We found the lights and I put our blanket down. We have reached our destination, and now we had to wait.

And so there I was. I wondered if I was going to make it through the day, and I had my doubts. One of the men in line then offered to go on a coffee run. I glanced at my watch and saw that it was already 7 a.m. People were starting to arrive in droves. Actually, it wasn't as bad as I thought. The parking office opened at 8:30, and you can be sure I bought my sticker, and I'll never have to get up this early again. At least, until next month!

Breaking structural racism

Deborah Kutenplon

Last evening I read a newspaper article about the Fresh Air Fund. The Fresh Air Fund enables inner-city children to spend time each summer living outside the city with a host family. Most of the city children are black. Most of the host families are white.

My family sponsored a Fresh Air child for several summers when I was growing up. His name Tracy, and I remember being surprises that his palms were pink, much lighter than the rest of his skin. It was fine having him around, but every September he went back to New York City, while we got to stay in our comfortable town with its excellent public schools and plenty of space to play.

The newspaper article I read interviewed the white host family and their black summer-daughter. While the white family's hearts were certainly in the right place, I found myself wondering what the black child's parents thought. How did they feel to send her away to white people (strangers that first summer) so she could get out of the city? How did they feel not to be able themselves to offer the environment they wanted her to grow up in? What kind of psychic harm is inflicted, on parent and child, with the lesson that moving to a better place can happen only be leaving behind one's parents and culture?

Finally, I wondered why the reporter had not thought the black parents' views important enough to report.

Most of the city children needing a better place to spend the summer are black. Most of the host families who get to stay in those nicer places all year round are white.

Racism. I was very upset the first time someone told me that all whites in this culture are racist, simply by virtue of the privileges gained because of their white skin. Whether or not they seek those privileges, whether or not they even want them, all whites get them.

I was upset because I did not see why anybody should consider me a racist for what I could not control. I thought "racist" should apply only to what we could control personally—our attitudes, feelings, prejudices, and individual actions. About one month later, I finally realized why the man (a white) had simply looked steadily at me when I said this. He was silently demanding that I take personal responsiblity for my privilege, too, and for either accepting it mindlessly or working to change the system that unjustly awards it to me at others' expense.

My privilege, given my by structural, rather than personal, racism, has allowed me not only better schools, but safer neighborhoods, better jobs, more money, and more options than I would have had if I had been born black or brown. Not to mention fresh air.

Certainly the great contrast between white privilege and racially-based deprivation is not the fault of the Fresh Air Fund. If anything, the Fund humanizes the problem for a white family, perhaps encouraging them to care personally about challenging racism, while giving a cooler and perhaps more relaxing summer to a black child. Maybe one day the child will not have to leave in September; maybe one day her family will live next door.

Push for "Freedom Wagon"

I was deeply impressed to learn that the UMass student senate had voted in favor of cancelling classes one Friday to show solidarity with people struggling for freedom and human rights. The willingness of the senate to make this sacrifice should convince everyone of the senate's devotion to this noble cause.

Still, human nature being what it is, there are bound to be cynical souls who'll say, however unjustly, "Those senators will do anything to get out of going to classes."

To disprove this calumny, I suggest the senate vote for a "Get on the Wagon for Freedom" month. The entire student body, with the senators setting an example, would refrain from alcoholic drinks of any sort for the following thirty days.

While giving up alcohol would certainly be less of a sacrifice to the senators than missing classes, I believe that everyone will recognize what a public relations coup the Freedom Wagon program would be.

I'm sure now that the idea has been proposed, the senate will rush to pass this resolution.

1985 Doublethink at UMass

Racist. How is it possible for so much pain and hatred to be conveyed by one short word? Say it aloud. Feel the word hiss and crack along the tongue. Consider the whips of South African police slicing through the air, bloodying the backs of children. The word fits the concept well; it is sharp, ugly and direct.

Racism has once again become fashionable. Neo-Nazi groups are planning for the future through an elaborate computer network; they believe their time is almost here. They are armed.

Who are these people? They are those who doggedly maintain that American business will change the racist ideology of the Afrikaners. "Constructive engagement" is a way to lucratively invest $56 billion, not a humanitarian project. It is a means of reaping the benefits of white privilege.

They are those who defend South Africa's fascist government as preferable to communism, thereby clouding the issue with cold was rhetoric. These cold warriors are really only defending the status quo, a.k.a., white privilege.

They are those who would dismantle the Civil Rights Commission and, like Ed Meese, proclaim that to preserve, you guessed it, white privilege.

Closer to home, they are those who would slash the SGA Affirmative Action Office budget by 75 percent in the name of fiscal responsibility, while leaving the well padded UMass Republican Club budget completely unscathed. What do you suppose was being protected there?

Mispropriety in priorities

Donna Henry

The issue of AIDS appears to be more important than what's going on in the White House, or even in South Africa, these past few months. We have been reading about it in all kinds of publications. We have been watching reports of it on television and we have been hearing about it on the radio. This brings me to a common problem that has been in existence ever since life itself. It's the issue of money and its deadly relationship to humanity.

AIDS seems to be a perfect example of this problem. There are people who are "catching it." There are those who are dying because of it. And, there are some who have diagnosed homosexuality as the main cause of this disease. Therefore, whoever has AIDS, are either homosexuals or they have had some sexual connections with homosexuals. Yes, that is the diagnosis, or at least, that's what some "experts" have led society to believe.

Now, for those who have contracted it, they are condemned . . . treated as garbage. Others, if lucky, are treated once, maybe twice, then are told that there is nothing possible left to be done, not at this stage, at least. Keep in mind that these people are the common people. The "peasants" as they are referred to in our history books. These are people who are Franklin-less, Grant-less, Jackson-less, Hamilton-less, Lincoln-less and sometimes even Washington-less. They are so penniless that they have no choice but to be satisfied with a doctor's diagnosis at a local clinic.

However, it is now known that not only are the common people faced with this deadly disease, but also the movie stars . . . the handsomes and the pretties, the rich and the famous. Yes, I'm referring to the late actor Rock Hudson. However, not until now have I seen such determination to find a cure for an illness. Don't misinterpret me, finding a cure for AIDS should always have been an important issue. The public and our "experts" were always eager to learn something, anything, about the real cause and the proper cure for such a disease.

But, ever since Rock Hudson, the once extremely handsome, seductive, debonaire, became stricken with this disease, it seems that a tremendous amount of progress is now beginning to be made. A possible cure, known as HPA-23, which was previously made known to the general public, is now public knowledge.

Although this drug was actually discovered 13 years ago, and was first used to treat a rare and deadly neurological disorder, known as the Jakob-Creutzfeldt disease, never was it made known that there was a possibility that it could prevent a replication of the virus that is the cause of AIDS. And, some not very promising other antiviral drugs such as Suramin, Ribavirin, Alpha Interferon and Fascarnet are hastily being tested.

Husdon had also been flown to Paris to seek treatments from "readily awaiting experts in the field" at the Pasteur Institute. These are experts who were around when the common people were stricken, complaining and sent home untreated.

These are experts wheo, if those afflicted are not rich and famous, aren't going to speed up with care and caution, to find a cure for such a lethal disease. These are experts who cannot overlook the fact that you're penniless and think of you as one of the "unfortuinates," trying desparately to save the most precious gift God has given you—live.

My friends, don't be misled by the tone of this column. I liked Rock Hudson. I have always admired his talent as an actor. But if it takes a celebrity with enormous fame and wealth to actually set fire to our governments', to our scientists', and our renowned physicians' behinds, for them to so readily attack a germ as AIDS, or cancer, or any other of life's deadly enemies, then what?

What happens to the life of the poor widow with five children, no job, or working male companion, or sufficient food, who is living in a rat-infested apartment and is dying of cancer; or the life of the poor elderly man who lives next door and whose Sunday consists of a meal comparable to what some would feed their pets? What then? It appears to me that our priorities are decidedly mixed-up.

Daily fight of S. African blacks

I urge anyone who tends to minimize the state of repression in South Africa to imagine themselves in the place of a black South African. Suppose you live in the squalor of a shantytown outside Johannesburg, a black township under the guns of the South African police, or one of the Bantustan states like Transkei. Maybe you know that some whites can sometimes manage to critisize the racist system of apartheid without being banned or having their newspapers shut down by the regime. So what? You're black.

What white people do, you cannot. For you, there is no "free press," regardless of what the whites allow among themselves. That's what apartheid means: blacks are not treated as humans, let alone equals. If you grew up in South Africa, you would know that before you knew your name.

Imagine, then, that somehow you picked up a Collegian and saw some American college student claiming that the dissidents who risk arrest to denounce apartheid actually prove that South Africa has free speech. Wouldn't you feel totally frustrated? If you keep your mouth shut, people in the U.S. would go on believing that things in South Africa were getting better, which you know to be untrue. But, as soon as you speak up, along comes a student to say things must not be so bad after all, since you can speak. You're damned if you do and damned if you don't.

As a black South African, you probably don't know if people in the U.S.S.R. have more freedom than you do. In fact, the question seems ridiculous to you. You are not living in the U.S.S.R. You are living in the racist Republic of South Africa, where talk (for whites) is cheap, and your life tothe government is even cheaper. Fachism? You don't have breathing time to debate the exact character of white supremacy and its historical roots. Leave that to American college students. You must struggle for survival, day by day, and dream, work, and fight for a society whose sole purpose is not to crush you. Communism? Capitalism? Too absract, too far away to seriously consider. Smash apartheid first.

Isn't that what you would be thinking about, if you were black and South African?

Series of Nazi Holocaust lectures begin tonight

A lecture series exploring the Nazi Holocaust will begin at 8 p.m. tonight in the Wright Hall Common Room at Smith College.

Smith history professor Klemens Von Klemperer will start the series of five lectures with "On Germans and Jews, Some Historical Reflections." He will explore the historical relationship between the Germans and the Jews which led to the tragic Holocaust.

Reknowned author David Wyman will be the second speaker of the series on Oct. 17. Wyman, a University of Massachusetts history professor, is the author of Abandonment of the Jews.

The series is co-sponsored by the newly established Jewish Study Program at Smith and the B'nai B'rith Hillel foundation at Smith and Amherst colleges.

The goal of the series is simply "to offer different perspectives, by hosting speakers who were directly involved in the Holocaust from both sides," a spokesperson from Smith said.

The New Jewish Studies Program was established this fall with a government grant and the appointment of Director Howard Adelan.

The chancellor took several trustees on a short tour of the career complex, after their meeting in Memorial Hall yesterday. At the end of the tour, trustees Andrew C. Knowles and Gordon N. Oakes, both alumni of the Amherst campus, unveiled a plaque dedicating the center.

The career center, located behind Orchard Hill in the old fraternity/sorority park, was refurbished by the University at a cost of about $400,000, Duffey said.

The UMass defense will be facing a 6-1 Connecticut team that has outshot (148-54) and outscored its opponents (18-2) despite dropping a 2-0 decision to top-seeded George Mason last week.

UConn beat UMass in their last meeting, a 2-1 overtime decision in the NCAA Final Four last November in North Carolina. UMass took the 1984 regular season meeting, 2-0.

Senior All-American forward Cathy Shankweiler (4-3-11) leads the Huskies in scoring along with senior all-East midfielder Missy Morrone (4-3-11).

Sophomore Bonnie Mitchell, who lost her first career game against George Mason, will be in net for UConn with a 0.29 goals against average.

UMass, ranked first in New England and winners of the last two New England titles, will most likely go with freshman Jan Holland (four saves) in net.

"We just have to keep up our intensity and have a killer instinct," Banda said.

At the 63:23 mark of the contest Giordano threaded a pass between two Eli defenders. Zwicklbauer picked up the feed and was in on Duback. The feshman put the shot past the keepers' left for the 1-0 score.

"I got the ball coming up field," said Giordano. "I looked up and saw F.J. going through. I had no time to think."

"Before the game the coach said to keep our shots low," said Zwicklbauer. "He said we could beat him (Duback) low. He's tall and handles the high balls well. It was not a great shot, but it got by."

The Minutemen did not try to sit on the lead, instead keeping up its tenacious attack.

"We wanted to get two," said Gettler. "One is not enough in this day and age (of collegiate soccer)."

With 5:36 left in the game, Zwicklbauer stole the ball at midfield and kicked a lead pass to Giordano. The junior dribbled in alone and booted past Duback's right.

"F.J. stole the ball from their defense and lead me," said Giordano. "I had to keep it low. It was nice to beat an All-American. It feels good."

This was the first time that UMass has beaten Yale after coming up short the last three years, the last two in overtime.

UMass forward F.J. Zwicklbauer scored a goal and had an assist in yesterday's 2-0 victory over Yale. UMass is now 8-3.

"I thought we played our best game of the year today," said Gettler. "Technically and skill-wise we played real well. The victory raised the Minutemen's record to 8-3 on the season and 5-0 at home. UMass has won seven of its last eight."

Massachusetts hosts the UMass Invitational this weekend with Northeastern their first opponent on Saturday at noon. Hartford plays St. Joseph's at 3 p.m.

Minutemen 5-0 at home

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

The sign of a good team is its ability to rise up for a big game and that is what the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team did by shutting out Yale University 2-0 yesterday on a rain soaked Boyden Field.

The Elis entered the contest ranked second in New England, boasting a line-up with five former high school All-Americans, and the top collegiate goal keeper in the country.

"They are definitely the best team we have played this year," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "It was a great game for us."

Both teams played tight defense in the first half with neither having a clear advantage. When either squad had a scoring opportunity the keepers, Don Donahue for UMass and Jeff Duback for Yale, were equal to the challenge. Twice the Minutemen had shots dead on net from 15-yards out only to be denied by Duback.

Gettler said he looked for aggressive play from his forwards to combat the Eli offensive attack.

"The forwards had to play defense," said Gettler, "and our forwards won the balls. We tried to stop them from playing on the wings, letting them come up the middle. There was good hard play and our backs were stepping up and winning balls."

That aggressive style paid off in the second half. Forwards F.J. Zwicklbauer and Tom Giordano took turns setting the other

UMass snaps slump, 4-0

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Traveling to New Haven yesterday afternoon, the fourth ranked University of Massachusetts field hockey team needed to overcome a recent scoring slump and lack of concentration in order to beat Yale.

The Minutewomen shifted into high gear yesterday, crushing the Elis, 4-0, dispelling any doubts that their inability to score goals in the last three outings would linger.

UMass All-American defender Megan Donnelly scored three goals to lead the attack while junior forward Lisa Griswold added a goal off of an assist by Donnelly.

The Minutewomen, who had 104 shots in their previous three games but could only manage only one win, including losing 2-1 in overtime on Sunday to Springfield, scored a pair of goals in each half in disposing of Yale, now 3-3.

UMass coach Pam Hixon had been wary of Eli goalkeeper Nada Sellars, praised as a top-notch keeper, but the Minutewomen looked sharp offensively, getting good shots on the cage and capitalizing on their scoring opportunities.

The Minutewomen will next play on Sunday, hosting the University of Maine at 1 p.m. at NOPE Field. UMass goes on the road on the following Tuesday, playing at Northeastern.

The Minutewomen then return home for their three biggest games of the season, playing Temple, defending champion Old Dominion and nationally-ranked Connecticut.

UMass coach Pam Hixon was not available for comment on the game.

At the beginning of the season, University of Massachusetts women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda planned to let his All-American midfielder Kristen Bowsher go anywhere on the field .

Faced with the loss of last year's leading scorer Jolie DePauw, Banda was hoping Bowsher would be the catalyst for the Minutewomen soccer team.

"She has the option to play the whole field. She has the freedom to go anywhere she wants. She's the player of the team and she's a marked player," he said.

As third-ranked Massachusetts raced off to a 6-0 start, Bowsher, who has been slowed by a bruised knee injury, has played in only three games and has scored just two goals. So much for Banda's plan.

"The difference between this year and other year's is that we're playing a total team game," Banda explained. The Minutewomen have four players in double figures in points scored as UMass takes on fourth-ranked Connecticut today at Boyden Field at 3 p.m.

UMass midfielder Carolyn Micheel (four goals, seven assists, 15 points) and foward Monica Seta (6-3-15) lead the Minutewomen in scoring. Freshman forwards Cathy Cassady (4-2-10) and Michele Powers (5-0-10) are also among the leading scorers.

"Last year, everyone was looking for Jolie (DePauw) and having her knock it in. This year five girls have scored (the majority of goals) and the goals are coming quicker. No one is being lazy," Banda said. "We're making the issue.

"The offense is helping the defense and the defense has moved up to help the offense," Banda continued. The Massachusetts defense hasn't given up a goal all year as UMass has outscored its opponents by a 32-0 margin and outshot its opponents by an incredible 127-7 score.

Fullbacks Chris Schmitt and Debbie Belkin had game winning goals against Brown and Rochester, coming up from the defensive line to pressure the goaltender.

Stull undecided on quarterback for URI

Who will quarterback the University of Massachusetts football team against Rhode Island on Saturday?

Freshman Bill Shaughnessy was put at the head of the depth chart on Sunday, but coach Bob Stull said yesterday that sophomore Bob Williamson may land the job.

"It's really up in the air right now," said Stull. "We'll evaluate the remaning practices and name someone on Friday. We'll give the starter a chance in the game, but I can't rule out the possibility that the other guy will come in."

Freshman Dave Palazzi started the season, leading the team to a 2-1 record before separating his shoulder against Holy Cross. Senior Jim Simeone started last Saturday against Harvard, losing 10-3. Stull announced a change on Sunday.

Alabama transfer Tim Hecht and freshman Roger Baldacci "are not out of the picture" for the rest of the season according to Stull, but either Williamson or Shaughnessy will start against URI.

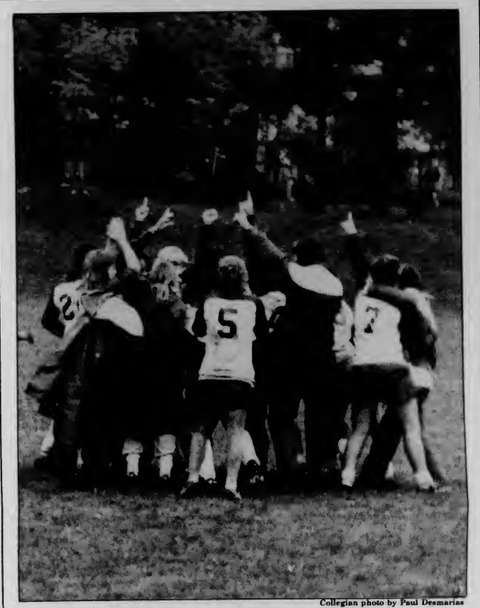
Committee proposals discussed

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

A committee charged with reviewing a recently implemented salary program for University of Massachusetts professional staff is expected to decide today whether to recommend changes to Vice—Chancellor Richard O'Brien.

The proposals for modification of the controversial "Olney plan," which were outlined at the committee's last meeting on Sept. 30, will be discussed amid internal controversy about the efficiency of the committee.



"My major concern with the committee is that it's not taking the time to do the job right," committee member Gerald Quarles said at yesterday's senate meeting of The Professional Association of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, an organization which represents non-academic employees, whom the new salary plan affect. Quarles added that he has no complaint with the committee's individual members.

"I have a somewhat different view of our progress," Committee Chairwoman Susan Pearson said in response to Quarles, adding that he missed two previous committee meetings because he was on vacation.

Quarles expressed concern that the committee "didn't make sure interests of the professional staff were covered" and that the committee displayed "difficulty in getting information from the personnel office."

"I can't recall any instance where the committee has had trouble getting information," Pearson said later, "the personnel office has been extremely responsive."

Knapp maps future plans for UMass

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp mapped his plans for the future of the University in an address to the Faculty Senate yesterday.

"We want to be the best public University in the Northeast, partly because it's doable," he said. "While we measure the quality of a university in resources and reputation, the involvement of students and staff are better tests."

"This University is finally coming into its own. We were seen as an answer to solving quantatative problems, taking care of so many numbers of students, now we're seen taking a qualitative approach."

Knapp said the University faced several problems that had to be solved in order to attract top-level faculty. "We have a problem with resource backlogs, especially those related to equipment and library supplies," he said. "Modernization of the physical plant is another problem."

"The climate for making our move is very good," Knapp said. He said that one of his objectives is to "make the University the object of conversation on academic matters." Knapp said he has seen encouraging signs with the increasing number of grants and contracts awarded to faculty. "This growth has been spectacular, reflecting the vitality of our faculty," he said.

"The context for the next stage is at the state level," Knapp said. "The state has realized the importance of a quality research university for the economic well-being of the state." Knapp said partnerships between universities and industry have increased, and that "UMass is at the forefront of this trend."

With the increase in ties between the private and public sectors, Knapp said interest in the University's internal workings has increased. "We're undergoing a sort of internal academic accountability. What is the value that the University provides its students?"

In senate business, the senate unanimously passed two ammendments to the by-laws. The first amendment creates a committee on University Relations and Development to represent faculty in the development of policy relating to institutional advancement. The second by-law broadens the scope of the Research Council and adds a member of the administration to the council. Both ammendments must be read three times before they are officially by-laws. Alumni book hotels solid
No local vacancies

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Hotel and other area hotels, motels, and inns are reporting they are completely booked for homecoming weekend at the University of Massachusetts, today and tomorrow.

"No rooms are available as far away as Greenfield and Holyoke," said Eric Snoek of the University Development and Alumni Office. "We're talking Springfield, and rooms there are getting scarce. The only chance someone has of getting a room in this area is if someone else cancels their reservation."

Hotel employees attribute the scarcity of rooms every year at this time to a combination of homecoming festivals, football games, and the fall foliage. In addition, many of the hotels in the area do not have many rooms.

"We only have 20 rooms," said Lisa Skirboll, an employee of the the University Moterlodge in Amherst. "Except for Howard Johnson's, most hotels in this area are small." Skirboll said there have been no openings at the Motorlodge for the past month, nor will there be any until mid-November.

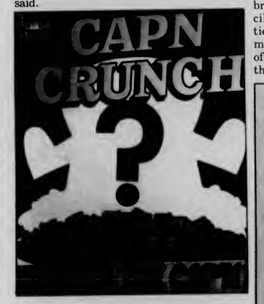
Cereal captain is missing from box

By SHEILA SPITZAK
Collegian Correspondent

Despite the fact that Cap'n Crunch is the most popular breakfast cereal among University of Massachusetts students, the moustachioed, sea-faring captain has left the face of the cereal box and has been replaced by a giant question mark.

Last Year, University Food Services ordered 3,248 lbs. of Cap'n Crunch, 2,000 lbs. more than the second favorite cereal, Raisin Bran. 'It's by far the most popular cereal,' said Richard Bongiovanni, purchasing manager of Food Services.



The cereal is re-ordered every three or four weeks while other cereals are ordered once a month. But recently, the boxes of Cap'n Crunch have been arriving at the dining commons without the familiar face on the front.

The Quaker Oats Company has taken advantage of the cereal's popularity by conducting a $10,000 natinwide contest for college students and children, most of whom have been used to seeing the captain's face on their breakfast table.

'It's our version of 'who shot J.R.?'' Jerry Perkins, brand manager for Cap'n Crunch, said. Perkins admits that the contest is a marketing scheme.

The contest is an acrostic puzzle designed by Thomas Middleton who designs puzzles for the New York Times and gives clues to the captain's whereabouts. The puzzle is found on the cereal box.

Worcester Munchy's manager Carla Bordeaux said Cap'n Crunch also sells better than other cereals, probably because it is a sugar cereal. Students eating at the dining commons tended to agree. 'I hate cereals like Cheerios that aren't sweet, the kind my mother gets,' student Tom Derosa said.

Reagan voices no objection to talks

CINCINNATI —President Reagan raised no objections yesterday to the Soviet Union's proposal for separate arms talks with Britain and France but suggested the Kremlin was making an almost meaningless gesture by offering to cut back its medium-range missiles in Europe.

Reagan said the Soviets have not promised to destroy the medium-range missiles that are targeted on Europe, but simply have suggested moving them elsewhere.

"To simply drive them up into the Ural Mountains or someplace else and then say that they're not a threat to Europe makes no sense," Reagan said. "They can be brought back any time they want to turn on the gas."

Reagan, visiting a soap manufacturing plant during a trip to promote his tax-overhaul program, stopped briefly after lunch to answer reporters' questions about the arms package unveiled in Paris by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Gorbachev's plan calls for a total ban on space weapons; a 50-percent reduction in strategic nuclear missiles; direct talks with France and Britain over their own nuclear arsenals, which contain about 150 missiles; and a pledge that the Soviet Union would begin unilaterally reducing medium-range SS-20 missiles to the June 1984 level of 243.

Mission of mystery for new shuttle

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla.—Atlantic joined America's space shuttle fleet yesterday with a dazzling liftoff on a mission of mystery, carrying five astronauts and a pair of military satellites built to withstand nuclear radiation.

Except for the launch, which could be seen from much of central Florida, the flight had as much secrecy as the Air Force could muster.

"The space shuttle is in orbit," was Mission Control's terse announcement 45 minutes after liftoff. "All systems on board the orbiter Atlantis are good. The mission is proceeding as planned."

The Air Force said in advance there would be only two public reports about Atlantis unless problems develop. The first, a status report four hours into the flight; the other, a 24-hour notice that the shuttle will land at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

Atlantis' maiden flight, the 21st of the shuttle program, was the second all-Pentagon mission. A spy satellite was delivered to orbit on the first.

Despite the news blackout, there was reliable information that the astronauts will deploy two Defense Satellite Communications System satellites, an advanced model known as DSCS-3. The $100 million satellites are designed to prevent an enemy from jamming their communications and for use by the president to send emergency instructions to nuclear forces around the globe.

The satellites also have been shielded against the radiation and electromagnetic pulse effects of nuclear explosions, which could short out or overload unshielded electronic components.

Surplus use a 'judgement call'

BOSTON—Students at Southeastern Massachusetts University could have received reduced room in board in 1982-84 if school officials had used a $540,901 budget surplus to reduce costs, state Auditor John Finnegan said yesterday.

Finnegan's audit found the school placed the surplus money in a reserve account instead of using it to reduce room and board rates by $204 per student in 1982-83 and $244 1983-84.

"At a time of escalating costs for students in our public universities, it is most disheartening that SMU students lost out on badly needed reduction of their expenses," Finnegan said in a statement attached to the audit of finances at the Dartmouth school.

But SMU officials said they saved students money in the long run by increasing the reserve account, which is being used to pay for a $1 million roof repair project.

"It's a judgment call," said Greg Stone, spokesman for t' :mouth-based school. "As it turns out, we needed that reserve and if we didn't have that account, we would be collecting an additional $500 for that one repair."

"We could have applied it to the next year and students would pay less," Stone said. "What we said is no, we felt it was more prudent to have that kind of reserve, gain interest on it and then apply it when major repairs have to be done so students don't get socked with an increased bill."

Better student retention aim of committee proposals

BY ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

Students who face the possibility of dropping out of school, and those who have dropped out and intend to return, may get some relief if a set of proposals offered by an administration committee becomes University policy.

The proposals, made by the Campus Retention Commission--a committee established to investigate how to help stem the tide of students dropouts--include mandatory faculty advisement for freshman and students on academic probabtion.

The report also proposes a requirement of all departments to grant access to first year students the courses they need to meet major requirements, or otherwise limit the number of majors within the department so there will be space for first year students.

"This report certainly is a good start," Randy Donant, director of Student Activities Office and one official who will have a hand in revising the proposals, said yesterday. "In fairness to the commission, they do comment that they have more to do."

The commission plans to issue another report in June, after lengthy review of its current proposals.

The 'interim report,' released last week by Vice Chancellor Dennis Madson, recommends:

% Students on acacemic probation should be required to meet with an academic adviser regularly.

% Students with falling grades should have access to an "early-warning system" where they notify their own advisers for special counseling.

% Entering students, about one half of whom drop out, according to the report, should undergo mandatory faculty advising.

%Students who apply for readmission after academic dismissal would undergo a mandatory interview, be assigned to a faculty adviser and if the student achieves higher grades at another school would have his or her new grade point average kept separate from the previous average.

% Students who face difficulty enrolling in popular courses, one of the problems members of the commission believe attributes to dropouts, should discuss the problem with respective department chairs. Also, departments should guarantee entering students access in their first semester to major courses and if that cannot be done, should limit the number of majors in its programs or 're-design' course requirements.

Anorexics are survivors

Disorders affect diet

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Women who have eating disorders should not be seen as weak victims, but rather as survivors, according to the leader jof a focus group meeting on anorexia and bulimia held last night in Butterfield Lounge.

In an end to Eating Disorders Week at the University of Massachusetts, Everywoman's Center Counselor Mary Aubrey, who facilitates a support group for women struggling with the issues of eating disorders and body image, discussed apparent causes and effects of eating disorders.

The discussion focused on anorexia nervosa; a condition that causes women to starve themselves and exercise in excess, and bulimia, a condition where people become obsessed with eating extremely large amounts of food and vomit or use laxitives to rid their bodies of what they've consumed.

Aubrey said that anorexics and bulimics may come from families where "there is not a lot of permissiveness in regard to showing one's feelings," adding, "Instead of showing any type of weakness, (bulimics) focus on food in helping them avoid other problems."

A woman can't take real control of her life, Aubrey said, until "she can face the problem areas and difficulties in her life," and only when "she finds other alternatives in life to fulfill her needs."

Nancy Kent, a recovered anorexic who attended the discussion to talk about her struggle in overcoming the illness, stressed the "power" anorexics and bulimics must have. This obsession with thinness or food as a remedy will inevitably encompasses their entire lives, but they still will be able to function and appear as if "all is in control."

"Just image what (anorexics and bulimics) could do if their bodies were full and alive with the energy they direct toward this obsession," Kent said.

Anorexia, Kent said, is misperceived in society as the "dieting disease." This causes people to think that anorexic women hold an ultimate goal to be thin and beautiful, when they are actually in a "search for separateness," and are crying out for help.

Kent added that bulimics rather than anorexics are more likely to reach out for help in rational ways. She said anorexics would not attend support groups because these groups are usually places where people get together to realize they are not alone in their problem. Anorexics "want to be alone with their problem because they think it is making them special," she said.

According to Aubrey, anorexia can be fatal, and is more physically dangerous than bulimia, but bulimia is "just as dangerous" because it can happen in complete secrecy.

"With bulimia, a person can maintain their normal weight and easily appear as if they are in control of their life...nothing will make (a bulimic) stand out," Aubrey said. Aubrey pointed out she had been counseling women who had been binging and purging for as long as 10-12 years.

Aubrey explained that many bulimics, were once anorexics who were obsessed with being thin, but that "a pattern develops and a very hard one to break. A woman will come to find that she's dependent on that binging and purging, as a way of coping and as a way of surviving."

SGA tribunal rules speaker 'lax'

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts Student Government Association judiciary tribunal last night ruled that Senate Speaker John Ruddock 'was lax' in his response to a motion passed by the senate last April.

The motion called for the placing of an American and a Commonwealth of Massachusetts flag at the front of the senate meeting place, next to the speaker's podium. The point in question last night was who was responsible for getting the flags' placement implemented after the motion was passed.

The tribunal ordered that Ruddock was ultimately responsible and ruled that he has to have the flags in place before the Oct. 16 senate meeting.

"Ultimately, I feel that the people who said they were responsible for getting the flag should be responsible," Ruddock said. Ruddock was referring to the fact that the original motion passed, four senators said they would provide the flags during the interim period, during which time it would be decided how the flags would be funded.

"In keeping with the mandate set forth by the senate, I'll have no problem" in obtaining the flags, Ruddock said.

"I consider it a victory for the senate," said Scot McCracken, the SGA attorney general.

"It's very important that the speaker realizes the importance of carrying out acts of legislation made by the senate," said Michael Cerrato, the senator who initiated the hearing.

A decision was reached after more than two hours of debate, which centered on the responsiblity of the speaker in the placing of the flags. Many references were made to Robert's Rules of Order on just what the speaker's responsibilities entail.

"John Ruddock should be bound by the rules," Cerrato said. "It's his duty to make sure it's carried out."

Since April, on only one occasion was a flag displayed at a senate meeting, when an American flag was anonymously draped upside down over a blackboard.

Benefit concert for world peace

By DONNA HENRY
Collegian Correspondent

A benefit concert to support the World Peace Campaign will be held at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center.

Sponsored by the Baha'i Club and the Baha'i Task Force of Massachusetts, the concert will raise funds to support organizations that promote peace during 1986, the year chosen as the United Nation's Year of Peace.

"The importance of the concert for world peace is to make people more aware of the fact that it's necessary for us to come together and recognize that we are one family and that we need to work together for peace," said Carol Rutstein, from the Amherst Baha'i community.

The concert will coincide with the dedication of the first North American Peace Pagoda in Leverett.

Featured entertainers at the concert will be the internationally-renowned folk singer Odetta and two Candian performers, Jack Lenz and Doug Cameron. Cameron's appearance at the Fine Arts Center will mark the starting point of his national tour to promote his latest albumn, Mona with the Children.

The Traditional Cambodian Music Ensemble and Do'A World Music Ensemble, a five piece jazz group from New Hampshire, will also appear and the New World Generation and the St. John Congregational Senior Choir will perform.

Local motorists wear seat belts twice as often as state norm

By JOSEPH TIGAN
Collegian Correspondent

According to environmental health and safety research conducted at the University of Massachusetts, local motorists should find it easy to adjust to the statehouse's recently passed seat belt bill if Gov. Michael S. Dukakis signs it into law as expected.

"The Amherst community is a well-informed group which recognized the benefits of wearing seat belts," said Donald Robinson, director of the Department of Environment Health and Safety at UMass.

Robinson, who teaches safety engineering, conducted research this semester and discovered that the percentage of seat belt use in the Amherst area is double that of the national scale.

While there is a 14 percent voluntary use of seat belts nationally, 28.5 percent of Amherst area drivers wear the restraints, according to Robinson's research. "On the average, for every 10 percent increase in the seat belt use, 1800 lives are saved," Robinson stated in his report.

"People in this area seem to be coming to grips with something that should be required," Robinson said. The mandatory seat belt law for Massachusetts motorists will take effect Jan. 1, 1986 if Dukakis approves it.

Dukakis aided the bill's passage in the House of Representatives.

"This law is designed to protect you and the occupants of your car," said Robinson. "It is the single most effective way to reduce highway fatality."

The bill, which invokes a $15 fine on motorists caught no wearing seat belts, will be inforced only if police pull a car over for another reason.

Sgt. Ron Rembiszewski, state police officer, said it will be difficult to enforce the law. "The fact that the car has to be stopped for another reason will definitely make it hard to enforce."

Rembiszewski said he agrees with the bill even though it may be hard to enforce. "I think it will help save lives to a certain degree."

The only opposition to the bill comes from people who feel they may be losing certain private rights or personal freedom, Robinson said.

"These are people who feel the rights of the individual outweight the enforcement of using such restraints," Robinson said.

One benefit of the bill for state motorists is a 2.4 percent rate decrease for 1986 insurance premiums, according to the state Rate-Setting Bureau.

Creative roots of peace pagoda influenced by UM

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

Although the peace pagoda in Leverett, which is set to open tomorrow, seems like a concept from a distant land, part of its creative roots are influenced by the University of Massachusetts.

The leverett pagoda emphasizes the pacifist teachings of Buddha as revived by the late Venerable Nichidatsu Fujii after the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

On his last trip to the United States two years ago for a consecration ceremony at the pagoda site, Fujii delivered a sermon on his 99th birthday. He began his address by saying that "a very deep karma had led him here," for William Freeman Clark one of the founders of Massachusetts Agricultural School, UMass' predecessor, had come to Japan long ago with 1,000 Bibles and had a major influence on Fujii's teacher.

Clark taught students not only how to cultivate rice, but also how to cultivate souls, said Mameru Kato, the Buddhist monk who is supervising the pagoda.

Fujii, who died this year at the age 100, was head of the Nipponzan Myojojithe, the order of monks and nuns who are building the pagoda. The pagoda in Leverett has taken two years to build. It is the first of its kind constructed in the United States, and the 71st world-wide.

Ordained as a priest in 1903 at the age of 19, Fujii traveled through Asia, spreading Buddhism and arrived in India in 1931 to eventually meet Gandhi, who gave him the name Guruji.

Fujii said it was his dream to build a peace pagoda in America. He said he became aware of America on his 61st birthday while he was praying on a mountain in Korea, said Kato. The 61st birthday is significant in Japan for, as legend has it, anyone who reaches the age will be reborn as a baby. But, on Fujii's birthday there was little cause for joy since that was the day the U.S. bombed Hiroshima, Kato said.

A volunteer worker applies granite to the pagoda in July.

"A very deep karma has led me here,"
—Nichidatsu Fujii, 1985

It was then that Guruji began building peace pagodas, Kato said. "The most Venerable Fujii revived this ancient Buddhist practice of constructing peace pagodas after the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in order to offer a spiritual basis for humanity to recover its true, righteous, and compassionate mind," Kato said.

Today's activities include a Convocation titled "Faith in Action" from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. The featured speaker is the Rev. George Zebelka who was the chaplain for the crews who dropped atomic bombs in Japan and is now devoted to non-violence based on Christian Gospels.

Tomorrow, a processional is scheduled at 9 a.m. up Cave Hill Road in Leverett to the peace pagoda.

At 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center, a concert for world peace will be offered. The event, spnsored by the Baha'i community, is free.

Professor never expected to stay or win prestigious award

By CHRIS ALLEN
and NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Correspondents

When Julius Lester arrived at the University of Massachusetts in 1971, he never expected to stay for 14 years, much less win the prestigious Professor of the Year Silver Medal Award from the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education in 1985.

'I never thought I would be here 14 years later, but here I am...UMass students grew on me,' said Lester, professor of Afro-American studies.

In addition to the council award, Lester has won other major awards for his teaching, including the University's Distinguished Teaching Award in 1984.

'Professor Julius Lester reflects the highest ideals that we hold for educators and scholars. We deeply appreciate his contributions to our campus and especially to campus dialogue,' Chancellor Joseph Duffy said in his letter nominating Lester for the award.

He grew up during the 1940's and 50's in Kansas City, Kansas and Nashville, Tennessee and spent summers in Arkansas. He remembers the time as not 'being pleasant for black people and I am angered and offended by white people who get nostalgic for the fifties. It is a world I recall with the pain of inner screaming,' he said.

He survived that world because he knew somewhere beyond 'were dreams and possibilities and I knew this was true because the books I read ravenously and-desperately were voices from that world.'

He remembers 'how disappointed I would be if I got a present and it wasn't a book--it would be a wasted Christmas.' And he loves to give books as gifts. 'It's my favorite thing to give to children,' he said.

Lester is also a songwriter, singer and string player, whose traditional and original songs were issued in 1966 and 1967 by Vanguard Records. But he doesn't do much playing and performing any more, except for his daughter's class at school in Amherst, and occasionally for his classes at the University of Massachusetts.

Lester says he would rather have been a jazz musician but, 'My feeling was that I had greater ability in writing than in music.'

'At the age of eight, all kids can write,' Lester said. 'The images are there, because they're young.' However to become a real writer 'There has to be something inside that compels you.'

Drop-out rate increasing

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

The increasing rates of drop-outs is a growing concern in the Hispanic community. As part of the continuing celebration of Bilingual Education Week, a panel discussion was held Wednesday night to address the problem.

Many reasons were given for the high drop-out rate of Hispanics: teachers have low expectations of Hispanic students, lack of Hispanic role models in schools, lack of counseling services, high student-teacher ratio, repeated placement of students in grades below their level, and high teenage pregnancy rate, especially among Puerto Ricans.

A member of the audience, who came from Puerto Rico and is a student at the University, said, 'Some professors have the attitude that if a Hispanic student asks for more time on an exam or for something to be explained, it automatically means that they don't understand because they are Hispanic. They never assume the reason could be because it's just a hard topic.'

'At the beginning of the century, the problem was not drop-out, but keep out. Mexican-American children weren't allowed to go to public schools even though their parents paid their money,' said Meyer Weinberg, director of the Horace Mann Bond Center for Equal Education at the University of Massachusetts.

Many educators refuse to use the term drop-out because 'no one wants to admit they're a failure,' he said,.

The bilingual education program was created to help Hispanic students become more adjusted to education in America. However, some people feel that it has hindered more than helped.

Marcela Lancomb, director of Compliance Massport, which is a company that owns Logan's Airport in Boston, Mass., feels that the Hispanic population has to be brought into the mainstream. 'It's not enough to be part of a bilingual education program. We have to look at bilingual education as a tool and not as an ends to a means.'

Yolanda Ulloa, director of Bilingual Education at the Springfield School Department in Springifeld, Mass., doesn't view bilingual education as a means, but as an opportunity.

'I'm very proud of my accent because it identifies my ethnicity. When you are defending your identity, you react differently to the language of the people who want to oppress you,' she said.

Secretary of Education William J. Bennett's statement saying that he felt the bilingual education program was a failure was met with varied responses.

'While it is true the program doesn't reach the children who need it most, Bennett didn't cite any kind of statistics to prove that the program was a failure,' Weinberg said.

'I think the program is successful. It helps to retain students and their identity without rejection,' Ulloa said.

'The program could be more effective if financial resources were allocated. If we don't respond to this, there is a chance that the bilingual education program will be eliminated,' said Hilda Crespo, director of Education, at ASPIRA (which means Hope) of America , in New York, New York.

Many suggestions were made about what to do to solve the high drop-out rate. Crespo suggested, 'We hold political officials responsible and get on decision making bodies.'

'Organize the parents because they can be a force in making change happen,' said Ulloa.

Due to space limitations, the second part of James Baldwin's letter to Bishop Desmond Tutu will not appear.

Some corrections need to be made from Tuesday's editor's note. James Baldwin is hosted by the University through the five college program as a professor of literature.

He is teaching a writing workshop at Mount Holyoke College and not Hampshire College as previously reported.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

UMass deserves respect

This weekend is UMass Homecoming. We all have something to be proud of.

Our University is attracting more qualified applicants, research grants, alumni donations, and Statehouse attention than ever before.

Last year, the University received a record breaking 18,00 applications for admission. This is really no surprise, as the improving reputation of UMass is noted in every major college guide to be printed in the last three years, including the finicky Yale guide, never previously known for lavishing praise.

UMass shines as more people realize the value of a public education. Most of New England's public higher education students are enrolled here. UMass also graduated more than half of the graduate students in New England and is ranked in the top 20 national graduate education institutions.

The University has also actively encouraged cooperative efforts with governemnt and business circles, with the result that UMass has become a model of public/private cooperation.

While all of this is happening, we, as students, have a responsibility to take pride in our University. We have a faculty that, both individually and collectively, is among the nation's best, and UMass is rapidly becoming known internationally as a high quality institution.

Athletically, the women's soccer, field hockey, and volleyball teams are nationally ranked, and there is a renewed interest in UMass athletics, as evidenced by increased scholarship support and the tentative plans for a new arena.

Tomorrow, the UMass football team takes on the University of Rhode Island Rams. With a revitalized program, guided by second year Head Coach Bob Stull, the Minutemen are in the midst of their best start in three years.

The Minutemen were nationally ranked last week for the first time since 1981, and there is good reason to believe they can pull off a big victory tomorrow.

So, on this homecoming wekend, attend the football game and rally behind the Minutemen. There are many reasons to be proud of UMass, and the homecoming game is an appropriate way to show our support for all that the University is accomplishing.

Media made Gloria a hoax

Karl Schieneman

On September 26, millions of Americans living in the Northeast were subjected to Nature's wrath in the form of Hurricane Gloria. While the effects of the storm on Amherst were quite obvious to all of us in the Southwood Apartments who spent the "Hurricane Holiday" playing soccer and football, it took all day coverage by WTNH Action News to keep us abreast of the entire national scene.

From about 3 until 6 p.m., we saw the same storm-ravaged tree stump in Bridgewater, Conn. from 12 different angles. Every now and then, the crew would show a boat or two bobbing in the water. The storm was not quite as devastating and all destructive as the networks would have hoped. (This is why I believe the news broadcasters created a national disaster.)

And, come on A-Team and Miami Vice fans of America, admit it. You were disappointed, too. You also wanted to see the Tower Library end up in the Campus Pond, the Southwest residential building play dominoes with each other.

At about 4 p.m., it became apparent through the efforts of Tom Noel, the "James Bond" of weather reporting, who was being flown all over Connecticut, that Gloria was not going to strike anymore trees. Then, after showing a few waves and a street light blowing in the wind, there was a public service announcement, "Don't touch electrical wires on the ground." Thank you for the advice, WTNH. I'm sure that if you had a sister station in Oregon during Mt. St. Helens it would have been flashing, "Don't touch the red hot lava."

After the message, it was back to the newsroom where an exhausted anchorman with an unbottoned shirt and rings under his eyes provided up-to-the-minute newsbriefs on every tree which had been hit in Connecticut. In the background, one could see a fulcrum of activity as technicians, meteorologists, and anyone else who was in the room ran back and forth in front of the camera. Once agin, the forgery could be seen upon close examiniation, as the similarities between the background personnel and cartoon scenery were obvious.

Later in the day, network anchor Peter Jennings hinted that something was amiss when he inadvertently said to a hurricane expert, "The hurricane is past...Everyone is pleased that the hurricane did not do as much damage as expected. Explain why?" And people say that reporters hate to give bad news.

The final indicator that we had just witnessed a modern day War of The Worlds was the last graphic flashed on the screen. "This has been a presentation by WTNH Action News." What more could an individual ask for in the way of proof than this admission of creating a hoax?

There was probably some legal reason for the graphic, involving protection against liability. But the whole thing could have been avoided if there was more morality in the news world.

Something should be done about this soon, for we are already firmly entrenched in a media-oriented world and it already may be too late. But until we attack this problem, people willcontinue to be dazzled by half-truths and eventurally end up as 1984 Prols. As college students and the future leaders of our country, we should realize that our minds are a terrible thing to waste and act quickly to clean up the news world.

Karl Schieneman is a UMass student.

Freedom, truth and justice merit more than 'dearth of cogitation'

David Valade's saltant babble about the sad state of freedom, truth and justice in this country deserves attack for a number of reasons.

Not once in his lachrymose essay does the author present a shred of supporting evidence that can withstand the test of even casual scrutiny. When he tries to present such evidence, his argument collapses into absurdity. For example, his 'proof' that the U.S. government 'has made a systematic attempt to suppress the truth' [about what, Valade does not say] lies in the fact that government personnel with access to key intelligence information are subjected to periodic 'lie-detector' tests and 'other methods [again, Valade does not elaborate] of preventing communication that would serve to enlighten the public.' Enlighten it about what, the U.S. Navy's anti-submarine warfare capabilities?

But Valade tells us that 'the information of concern...is about the everyday matters of government,' and that it is this information that is being so sinisterly withheld. My only question is, if it is being withheld, how does Valade know what it is?

In completing his condemnation of the American political system, after some fatuous references to Nazi war criminals and the Founding Fathers, Valade manages an amazing feat. In just one paragraph, a mere four sentences, less than fifty words, he condemns the entire concept of American due process to the ash heap of history. Here he vaguely constructs his argument (if it can be called such) around the impropriety of equating a body of rules with 'the philosophical concept of justice,' as if any society ever has or could hope to approach a philosophical social ideal.

Perhaps Valade's most telling contradiction, and the one that best reveals the dearth of cogitation that went into his esay, comes in his last paragraph. Naturally, power and destiny derive from political freedom, access to information, and not unrelatedly, a just society. Yet, interestingly enough, Valade concludes (rightly, for a change), 'The power and the future are ours.' Funny, that's what I always thought.

Courageous nun not extremist

I was truly shocked to read the article in yesterday's paper about a former Plymouth, Mass., nun charged with assault and battery. I can't believe this woman 'faces five years in prison and $1,000 in fines' for protecting geese from two hunters near her house!

Her lawyer says she 'overreacted' in 'pummeling the chests' of two men who were shooting at the birds. This woman has been caring for the birds for ten years–I think she has the right to defend them, even if it does mean screaming and swearing on her part.

How could these men be arrogant enough to file charges against Mrs. Checci-O'Brien and how could her attorney call what she did 'probably one of the dumber things she's done in her life'? What she did was not excessive or extreme, but it did require courage and she should not be penalized for her actions.

Trustees' actions questionable

Thank you for covering the board of trustees meeting on Wednesday, It's good to have reports on what the powers that be are doing with our money, in our institituion. I feel, however, that several key events were ommited from the reporter's article:

Primarily, there was a letter concerning the disciplinary actions to be taken against the 31 students arrested last May, over the since-resolved divestment issue. This letter was given to the trustees with a request to have the letter discussed. Needless to say, it never was. Being one of the 31 arrested I would love to know what their position on this issue is. The students have triumphed over the administration on South African investment. The issue left about divestment is the fate of the 31 protestors. These people were prime movers in facilitating this University's current, and supposedly ironclad, policy on divestment.

Also, why were there alcoholic beverages being served at this meeting? After all, it did take place in Memorial Hall, on this campus. Isn't that in violation of the current policy regarding alcoholic beverage consumption on campus? Is the University Board of Trustees perhaps exempt from this policy because they are such stalwart members of our UMass community, even if most of them rarely ever come to the campus? Perhaps President Knapp, or even one of the illustrious trustees could answer this. I think most of the community would like to know.

Some answers to these questions would be appreciated.

Preliminary apple crop loss put at $5 million

Hurricane Gloria damage tallied in Massachusetts

BOSTON (AP)—Nearly a waeek after Hurricane Gloria churned across Massachusetts, no one yet has an exact tally of the cost inflicted on the state's homeowners, utilities and governments, although it is unlikely to run into tens of millions of dollars.

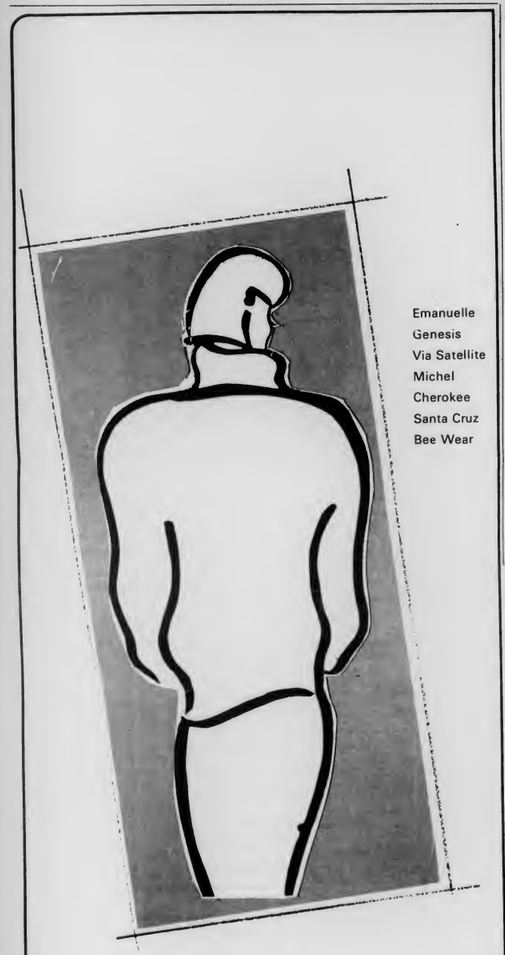
But utilites reported yesterday a dwindling number of households without electricity, with full power expected today.

As for a detailed overall figure on losses, Jim Doresey, press secretary to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, said, "We don't have it, and we won't have it until early next week."

"We have sent a letter to 351 political subdivisions," Civil Defense Director Robert Boulay said. "We have said to them we need information about your losses, the damage in your community; we'd like to know the figures on insured and uninsured public and private property. We'd also like to know about the debris clearance, the overtime, this kind of information."

As of late yesterday, Boulay had received no replies—in part, he said, because public works crews in most communities were still cleaning up.

Boulay said he expected answers from local officials in the middle of next week, and the results will be used to apply for federal relief, if any is available.



Janet Christensen, a marketing specialist at the state Department of Food and Agriculture, said preliminary estimates showed a loss of $5 million to $7 million in the wind-blown Massachusetts apply crop. Some of it can be saved for use in cider, and some downed apples can be sold slightly bruised, she said.

In Worcester and Middlesex counties, 10-15 percent of the young apple trees were simply blown down and will need to be replaced.

In addition, about 20 percent of the silage corn crop was destroyed; 70-80 percent of the peach trees in Worcester County were blown down; and some Bristol County vegetable growers lost up to 30 percent of their crop.

Generally, though, dairy farmers weathered the storm well, except for isolated farms that lost power for refrigeration and some farms in central Massachusetts where wind blew barn roofs off.

Massachusetts Electric Co. managed to get the last of its customers back on line early yesterday, but a short at a sub-station at 5:40 a.m. cause 6,000 customers in the Malden and Lynn areas to lose theri power again for about two hours, said spokesman Jeff Dennard.

'Stars Wars' defended by Secretary Weinberger

Washington (AP)—Defense Secretary Casper W. Weinberger offered a rousing defense yesterday of President Reagan's "Star Wars" program, accusing its ciritics of adopting a "blame America first" attitude and ignoring Soviet efforts to achieve military superiority.

Weinberger, addressing the Philadelphia World Affairs Council, said he was troubled by the "tunnel vision" and "lack of strategic perspective" that has marked debate over the program—known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

His prepared text was released at the Pentagon.

"This tunnel vision is born of the simplistic idea that there is really no substantial difference between the doctrines and capabilities of the United States and Soviet Union," he said. "Indeed, if you read only domestic critics and Soviet propaganda, you would think that SDI emerged full-blown from our minds without reference to Soviet capabilities or strategic history."

The Star Wars program is more than the world's best hope for ending the "mutual suicide pact" that now maintains peace, Weinberger said. It is a military necessity, prompted by clear evidence the Soviets have spent the last 13 years ignoring arms treaties and seeeking the capability to win a nuclear war.

Weekend movie round-up:

Friday Film Folies

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Can you believe that all the movie theaters in Amherst closed down last Friday because of a measley little hurricane? Wimps! Who cares if the governor declared a state of emergency? REAL movie theaters never close. That was the second most catastrophic loss of service in this area.

The worst disaster to strike the community was the loss of my Friday film column. Untold thousands sat in darkness mourning the absence of my cinematic words of wisdom.

Have no fear, oh, unhappy hordes, me and my ego have returned. But enough about me, what about the movies?

Glenn Close(Big Chill)is in two of the Hampshire 4 Theaters. Maxie is a comedy which stars Close as a housewife whose body is taken over by the spirit of a wild singer from the 1920's whose name is (guess what?) Maxie. (Look for a review next week). Close also stars in a murder thriller called The Jagged Edge. In Jagged, Close is a savvy lawyer assigned to defend Jeff Bridges who is accused of savagely butchering his wife. Everyone in the known universe thinks Bridges is guilty but Close knows he's innocent. Why? Because she's in love with him. Sounds good but will a jury buy it?

Raul Julia can be seen in two movies playing in the area. In Kiss of the Spiderwoman, Julia is Arregui, a political prisoner in a South American jail cell with an effeminate homosexual played by William Hurt. Julia is a somber and intense tortured rebel but it is Hurt who will snag at least an Academy Award nomination maybe even a statue for his performance in this film. Kiss of the Spiderwoman is playing at the Academy of Music in Northampton until Oct. 17th.

Julia can also be seen in the suburban murder comedy (what will they think of next?) Compromising Positions as a somber yet comic police detective investigating the murder of a very lecherous dentist. Susan Saradon (The Hunger, Rocky Horror Picture Show) stars as a suburban housewife who gets caught up in the mystery and solves it. There are a few tense moments in the film that are positively Hitchcockian. In one scene, Saradon is in danger and Julia, who could easily save her, is on the other side of the door completely unaware that she is even in danger. The humor is very dry and it may take a few seconds to get some of the jokes.

My two favorite Shakespearean actors, Chuck Norris and Arnold Schwarzenegger star in two macho blood movies that search and destroy their way into two area theaters this weekend. Invasion USA is a delightful little paranoia tale about terrorists who try to take over America and the one man on the continent who can stop them, Chuck Norris. Comando stars Arnold (Conan, Terminator) Schwarzeegger and Rae Dawn Chong (Quest for Fire). Chong is the daughter of Chong of Cheech and Chong fame. Even after reading a press release for this great piece of cinema, I still have no idea what this film is about. All I know is that there's lots of explosions and Arnold is in leather. If you rate movies by body count then this one could be for you.

Creator stars Peter O'Toole (Lawrence of Arabia, etc.) as your average everyday Nobel prize-winning scientist who wants to re-create his dead wife from her cells which he has been cultivating for 30 years. Vincent Spano is his young assistant, Mariel Hemingway plays O'Toole's girlfriend. Most reviewers found the film contrived but they also thought O'Toole transcended way above his material.

Agnes of God stars Jane Fonda, Anne Bancroft and Meg Tilly (see review). Agnes is a mystery about a young nun who gives birth to a baby that is later found strangled. Later under questioning, the nun, Agnes (Meg Tilly) says she didn't know she was pregnant and doesn't even remember the baby. The court appoints a psychiatrist (Jane Fonda) to find out if Agnes is mentally fit to stand trial for manslaughter. Anne Bancroft plays the Mother Superior of the convent. She tries to protect young Agnes from Fonda. If you can't stand Jane Fonda, you probably won't like this movie. Not only does Fonda act like Fonda, she also tries to make you think she smokes. If you can stand Fonda, you may like this contest of modern science versus faith.

Pleasant St. is showing The Coca Cola Kid which stars Eric Roberts as a Coca Cola representative trying to bring Coke to the only place left in the world that doesn't drink the beferage. With messianic fervor, Roberts tries to convert the small Austrailian town from their heathen way to righteous path of Coke.

"Agnes of God" pits faith against modern science

AGNES OF GOD
Starring Jane Fonda, Anne Bancroft and Meg Tilly
Directed by Norman Jewison
Screenplay by John Pielmeier based on his stage play.
Mt. Farms Theatres

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Agnes (Mel Tilly) a young nun in a convent screams in her room one night. When the other nuns finally break open her door, they find Agnes curled on the floor, her white novice's uniform drenched in her blood. In Agnes' wastepaper bsket the Mother Superior (Anne Bancroft) finds a newly born baby strangled with its umbilical cord.

Under questioning Agnes says she doesn't remember being pregnant or giving birth. She doesn't believe the baby exists. The court appoints a forensic psychiatrist (Jane Fonda) to determine if Agnes is mentally fit to stand trial for manslaughter. Everyone wants Fonda to give a quick answer and everyone wants the answer to be that Agnes is crazy. Neither the church nor the state wants the case to come to court because the publicity would help no one. Fonda tells them she won't make a judgment until she understands everything about Agnes.

Fonda gets opposition from the Mother Superior (Bancroft). 'I do not want that mind cut open,' Bancroft states. As Fonda pushes further into her investigation, she discovers that this may not be a simple case of hysterical amnesia. Fonda exposes a cover-up and a trail of clues I won't disclose.

The film was directed by Norman Jewison who also directed A Soldier's Story. One can see why he was chosen for this project. Jewison is very good at opening up plays but I think Agnes would have been strengthened dramtically if Jewison had kept most of the action indoors. The original stage play was set in a room with two chairs and an ashtray. The film would have benefitted from that kind of intensity.

Movie Reviewer

It is nice to see a trend in movies that produces scripts for strong leading female characters. Although Agnes provides an opportunity for all three actresses to shine, the performances are not as strong as one might have hoped for.

There are some people who can't stand Jane Fonda. If you are one of those people then this movie may not be for you. Jane Fonda acts like, well, Jane Fonda. What's worse in this film, you are expected to believe that she smokes. It doesn't come off. Her performance is passable. It isn't great, but it serves.

Meg Tilly is convincing as a naive novice. Some people were put off by the way she portrayed sublime holiness by always staring at the sky.

Anne Bancroft performs best in this film, though at times she seems a bit embarrassed by what she is doing. Bancroft's performance has the most variety and depth. Unlike Fonda, you always see the wheels turning in Bancroft's head. She's always thinking or feeling something. It is her presence that is felt throughout the film.

Agnes, while it is outwardly a murder mystery, also contains a debate about faith and modern science. Fonda rightly accuses Bancroft of keeping Agnes in complete ignorance about the world around her. Agnes leads such a sheltered life that she doesn't know where babies come from. Agnes' ignorance pushes her further into faith. When Fonda asks Agnes if she was ever outside the convent, Agnes says 'There is no world outside the convent.' Bancroft at one point suggests that Agnes' pregnancy might be a miracle.

This film may sound like a very dry and boring theological debate. It is not. Agnes is an involving and at times, humorous movie.

Gandhi photo exhibit is striking

The Life of Gandhi
Student Union Gallery, Wheeler Gallery
Through Oct. 13

Art Review

ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

To approach the Student Union Art Gallery's The Life of Gandhi as merely a photography exhibit would be a mistake. It is much more than that.

The photographs are strong in quality; the large (some up to five feet high) black-and-white works grab the viewer with both their simple, clear composition and their obvious empathy.

It's important to remember that most of the photographs were not snapped in the interest of art alone; therein lies their strength. The portraits eloquently capture the shaman of nonviolent resistance as he cared for lepers, held children, served time in prison, and fasted. One particularly striking work, a close-up of Gandhi's face, shows him deep in reflection, with lips pursed and eyes closed.

This exhibit is being presented in honor of the Peace Pagoda in Leverett, in conjunction with two other UMass galleries. Nuclear Sites, by Robert Del Tredici, will be on display at the Hampden Gallery today through Oct. 13. Also, the Gandhi exhibit is on its way to Wheeler Gallery, where it will run through Oct. 13.

The three galleries should be commended for working together.

Motel, according to employee Kay Corrigan. "We're booked solid. A lot of it is due to the homecoming, but also because of the football games and the fall foliage," she said. "I couldn't begin to estimate the number of people we've turned away."

Homecoming has little effect on the Campus Center Hotel, employee Meredith Schmidt said. "We are booked up every weekend during the academic year," she said. "For Saturday, about a hundred alumni have reserved rooms."

Because of the scarcity of rooms, the date and activities of the activities of the annual homecoming weekend must be planned years in advance, according to Snoek. "We have to plan ahead a minimum of three years just because getting hotel rooms in the fall in Amherst is next to impossible," he said.

Homecoming weekend officially starts today at 7 p.m. with a bonfire at the Campus Pond." (UMass Football) Coach (Bob) Stull will be there with some of the football team. The band will be there along with alumni and students," Snoek said. At 8 p.m. a band concert will be held at the Fine students," Snoek said. At 8 p.m. a band concert will be held at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, featuring performances from the music and dance featuring performances from the music and dance departments.

The festivities will continue with a parade at 11 a.m. tomorrow, starting at the Haigus Mall, going through downtown Amherst, and ending at Alumni Stadium. Alumni classes from 1975 and 1980 will have a barbeque outside the stadium at 11:30 a.m.

The modification proposals for the salary plan, which was implemented July 1 at the recommendation of Olney Associates of Boston, included:

% a readjustment of the plan's method of determining salary increases

% a modification of the plan's criteria for determining job classifications

% an adjustment of the plan's criteria for determining job classification

Discussion of the Olney Plan at the PAUMA senate meeting was opened when Chancellor Joseph Duffey was addressed by George Clay, laboratory manager of Health Services.

Clay questioned Duffey on whether the administration was honoring a memo of agreement with PAUMA. The memo states "in effect, that the PAUMA senate will be given the opportunity to review changes that awould affect its members," Clay said.

"It is absolutely essential that this University have a clear policy with regard to salary structure," Duffey said before he further discussed the issue off the record.

At a faculty senate meeting yesterday, Quarles thanked the UMass faculty for its support of PAUMA since the implementation of the Olney plan.

Police report

Two trash can fires were extinguished Wednesday night in the Campus Center walkway between the video arcade and the Barbershop, University of Massachusetts police said.

Sterno was found in the bottom of the two trash cans. There were no damages reported and police have a suspect, they said.

In other police reports:

Tire tracks dug up part of the Warren G. McGuirk Alumni Stadium field Wednesday night, an athletic department official told police. A car drove through the unlocked south end gates onto the field and drove a full circle around the field starting from the 45-yard line. More than 20 feet of grass was dug up, the official said.

Two men were arrested Wednesday night and charged with trespassing after they were reported to be fighting with residents of Dwight House.

Police issued trespass notices to an 18-year-old Brookline man and a Foxboro man, neither of whom are students. Police said the two men were later spotted near the Whitmore Administration Building and were arrested and charged with failure to obey a trespassing notice. The men are also suspected to have vandalized the hallways of Dwight House with graffiti, police said.

all at home during a four game stretch commencing next Saturday at 1.

The 12th ranked University of Massachusetts volleyball team, 14-0, will face their toughest challange of the season against a tough Northeastern University club tomorrow at Boyden Gym. Game time is slated at 1 p.m.

We're not going to change anything for them," said coach Elaine Sortino. "What we want to do is expand our offense a little and do a few different things. Hopefully we'll be alright."

The Minutewomen and Huskies met earlier this season at the Central Connecticut State Tourney with UMass coming out on top in a two-game sweep.

"What we need to do and do well is serve tough," said Sortino. "It helped us a lot in our first match with them and I think

"They looked very good at the CCSU tourney," said Sortino. "They have more talent than they did last year and they have more experience. Basically they have the same team from last season."

"I think Northeastern took us a little bit for granted last time we played," added Sortino. "You can believe that's not going to happen on Saturday. They're going to be very well prepared to play us."

UMass will have their hands full dealing with Northeastern's big guns: outside hitter Monique Ellis and the former Junior Elite Team setter Karen McAnaw, who Sortino called "an extraordinary setter"

"Player for player, I think we match up well," said Sortino. "Defensively, they're probably as scrappy of a team as we will ever see or face. We are going to have to play off our offense and expect the ball back."

"The thing that I'm the most concerned about is that we get out and play well," said Sortino. "We sputtered against Mount Holyoke. I don't think we had a particularly good match against them. It's been a while since we've played well and had a good flow."

"This is a match we are not going to be tired for," added Sortino. "We will be ready to play."

University of Massachusetts forward Catherine Cassady dribbles past a UConn defender on Thursday. UMass won, 1-0.

It was MacDougall, a senior co-captain, who blew a one-on-one opportunity with just 3:45 left in the game, sending a shot over the crossbar. Huskie Missy Morrone also had a few good chances that were broken up by the UMass defense that has still hasn't given up a goal all year. UMass has outscored its opponents, 33-0.

Massachusetts outshot their New England rivals by a 9-3 margin with a good deal more going over the crossbar. UMass' freshman keeper Jan Holland made three saves. UC's Mitchell made nine saves.

"It was really hard out there," UMass' forward Cathy Cassady said. "It was the first time we really had to put it together and work hard."

The rain-slicked and the mud-covered field didn't help either. "It just made it more intense," Cassady said. "We had to concentrate on the little things—like staying upright."

Both teams also had to battle an inconsistent referee who managed to call nine fouls on both teams, much to the displeasure of the UMass fans who felt that the Minutewomen were short-changed.

But it was really just a battle between the two top-ranked teams in New England. UMass played the last five minutes like they were the team down 1-0 and constantly pressured UConn and Mitchell, who made some diving saves in the last three minutes.

"We had never lost on this field," MacDougall said."We thought they would be young and inexperienced. They were'nt.

"In our opinion (coming into the game), we thought UMass was the best team in the country," she said.

Banda said, "We went to the ball and forced them to make mistakes by putting pressure on the ball. Everyone played well."

All-American Kristen Bowsher played the entire game and had two shots on goal along with Carolyn Micheel. Defenders Sue Bird, Chris Schmitt, Belkin and Susan Montagne kept UConn at bay and brought up the ball on more than a few occasions.

"It was a good, tough, well-played game. A good game for women's soccer," Tsantris said.

Keys for UMass include cutting down on turnovers (they had seven last week against Harvard) and maintaining the high level of intensity they have displayed this season. The Rams will be looking to establish the air game early and often and put the pressure on Williamson. UMass can not afford to get behind early to the Rams, after the loss to Brown (which came after leading at one point, 10-0) coach Bob Griffin's crew isn't likely to let down at any time.

"As all Yankee Conference games are, this is an important one," Griffin said. "The game is on the road to the conference championship. This is UMass' first league game and they have it at home where they always play tough. They are a well-coached team and have obviously improved from a year ago."

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Unknown idiots drove a car around the field on Wednesday night after driving though unlocked gates at the stadium. The field will have to be filled in, but due to the weather is can not be resodded in time. . .the UMass-URI season series is a close 29-28-2 with the edge to the Rams. . .McKeown leads UMass in tackles with 46, Sullivan is second with 30, but leads in sacks with 4.5. . .Sullivan, a transfer from Iowa, played his best game against Harvard with 12 tackles. . .Neri leads UMass in rushing with 250. . .Barnwell has 205. . .per 100 yards, UMass opponents have scored only three points. . .Shaughnessy is 0-for-4 in two series of downs (both against Harvard) this season. . .UMass has averaged 12,866 fans in two games. . .for the season, UMass has played before an average of 13,700 fans, a considerably higher number than last season. . .retired UMass treasurer Robert Hawley, a long-time UMass fan, will be at the game, he is celebrating is 90th birthday later this month.

Homecoming weekend: UM's busy

Soccer, volleyball, field hockey are all in action this weekend

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team host three other Division 1 squads this weekend in the UMass Invitational Tournament.

The Minutemen, 8-3 and ranked second in New England, go up against Northeastern University in the opening match tommorrow at noon.

UMass has won seven of its last eight contests and are 5-0 at home. Massachusetts is also coming of a big 2-0 shutout of Yale on Wednesday.

Leading scorer Andy Bing (seven goals, five assists), coming off an ankle injury and the flu, and John Shannon (sore knee) are both questionable starters for the Minutemen.

UMass will go with senior Don Donahue (4-3, one shutout) in net on Saturday and freshman Sam Ginsburg (4-0 , two shutouts) on Sunday.

Northeastern, 2-0, gave UMass a tough game last year (a 2-1 Massachusetts victory) and coach Jeff Gettler is expecting much the same this year.

"They have very good forwards," said Gettler, "with a tough kid, Franz Manard, up front."

Other standout performers for the Huskies are forward Tony Dias and keeper Frank Stockwell.

Last-years tournamment champion Hartford, 3-6, squares off against St. Josephs (Pa.), 2-6, in the second game at 3 p.m.

The consolation game will be played on Sunday at 12 a.m. with the championship game at 3 p.m.

Gettler has two goals for his team this weekend, winning its own tournament for the first and in the process tie the school record for wins at ten.

"It is the third year (of the tournament) and we have yet to do it," said Gettler. "We have come in second each time." The UMass field hockey team, breaking out of a three game scoring slump, hammered Yale, 4-0, Wednesday in New Haven. The fourth ranked Minutewomen host unranked Maine, Sunday at 1 p.m. on Totman Field at NOPE.

The Minutewomen, 5-2, outshot the Elis 25-3 in their highest scoring output since trouncing Pacific University, 5-0, three weeks ago at NOPE.

"Yale was an important win for us because we've been complacent at times," UMass head coach Pam Hixon said. "We were constantly on target. We played big time and did a great job."

Hixon said she was especially pleased with the efforts of senior All-America defender Megan Donnelly and sophomore midfielder Amy Robertson. Donnelly had a hat trick and added an assist while Robertson, converted to right wing last Sunday against Springfield, has adjusted to the change very well Hixon said.

"She's done a very good job working with Judy Morgan in the last two games," Hixon said of Robertson. "We've had a number of players in different and new positions this year and it's going to take time for our players to mesh, but everyone combined well against Yale. They showed a lot of mental toughness and determination."

Hixon hopes that the Minutewomen will continue to show that same mental toughness and determination against Maine, regarded as a young, inexperienced team with a lot of freshmen.

"We have to go out, play hard and do it up," Hixon said. The Minutewomen then travel to Northeastern on Tuesday before returning to Totman Field for their biggest test of the season taking on Temple, defending champion Old Dominion and Harvard University of Massachusetts forward Michelle Powers boots the ball away from Connecticut defender Maureen O'Connor in action yesterday on a wet Boyden Field. UMass won, 1-0 to go to 7-0 on the season.

Women now 7-0 on year

The fourth-ranked University of Connecticut women's soccer team went after the third-ranked University of Massachusetts team in the first ten minutes of yesterday's game the only way they knew how. Hard.

The Huskies came out, in a torrential downpour that lasted most of the game, and dominated a flat-footed Minutewomen team in the early going.

But Massachusetts went to what they do best. They made freshman Beth Roundtree's stunning goal with 8:46 left in the first half stand up for a 1-0 UMass win, the Minutewomen's seventh win in a row.

UMass played the ball and made their one-touch, two-touch passes. And they took over an intense struggle before 200 drenched fans at Boyden Field and 50 or so drier fans on Tobin Hall's balcony.

"I thought we looked very composed," UMass coach Kalekeni Banda said. "Our defense didn't let them score. You have to give them credit. We play defense to get results. We play team defense to score points."

It was sophomore fullback Debbie Belkin that had the game-winning assist. "I crossed the ball (in front of the goal) instead of dribbling. It happened to be a good cross and Beth was there," said Belkin.

And Roundtree, a freshman foward from Ewing, N.J. ,made a superb play faking out Huskie keeper Bonnie Mitchell by kicking the ball hard backwards into the left side of the net. Mitchell was going to the right.

"Somebody (Roundtree) made something out of nothing," said UConn coach Len Tsantris, whose Huskies lost their second game in a row, dropping to 6-2.

But Connecticut had their chances to tie it up despite Massachusetts dominating the second half of play.

"We just haven't clicked yet (on offense)," UConn's Donna MacDougall said. "UMass consantly attacked on defense. They played a great game."

Massachusetts vs. Rhode Island

Ehrhardt's next for UM's defense

The University of Massachusetts defense (from left: John McKeown, Steve Silva, Mike Kowalski, Chris Wood and Duckworth Grange) will have a big task Saturday, taking on All-American quarterback Tom Ehrhardt and the University of Rhode Island at Alumni Stadium at 1:30 p.m. Both teams are 2-2 on the season.

Rhode Island, with All-American Tom Ehrhardt, doesn't have any quarterback problems. The Rams, under head coach Bob Griffin, can be expected to throw the ball at least 40 times on Saturday. Tight end Brian Forster, another All-American, is Ehrhardt's primary target, catching 40 passes for 637 yards this season.

In a 32-27 loss to Brown last week, Ehrhardt threw for 461 yards, completing 30 passes. Forster caught 18 passes for 327 yards, a national record for tight ends. The Ehrhardt-to-Forster combination is easily the best in I-AA and among the tops in collegiate football.

"We've got a big task ahead of us," said UM defensive coordintaor Jim Reid. "He's (Ehrhardt) a hell of a quarterback. I think we're a little more ready for him this year than last year."

Last season, UMass was beaten 20-19 in Rhode Island and could've tied if not for a missed extra point. The Rams, although running up a lot of yards, had troubles scoring. UMass held a 16-7 lead midway through the second period. Ehrhardt threw three touchdown passes, going 37-for-54 for 405 yards of passing.

The UMass defense is a much better one in 1985. The Minutemen have allowed just over ten points a game this year thanks to an intense defensive line, a group of hard-hitting linebackers and a much-improved secondary.

UMass also has greater depth, having two solid players at each position. That depth has been tested so far however as three starters have been knocked out for the season and several others for periods from up to six weeks (Palazzi) to just a game (linebacker Paul Manganaro).

"I'm comfortable with the players we have in there right now," said Stull. "But I wouldn't want us to go any deeper."

Against Ehrhardt and the Rams, UMass will selectively blitz and drop back in multiple pass coverages. Ehrhardt drops been scored on the UMass defense.

On offense, the question is the quarterback. Williamson ran the option at Milford Academy and was recruited by UMass. He entered non-football playing Worcester State in september of 1984 before transferring to UMass in January.

The Palazzi-to-Simeone-to-Williamson change of signal-callers is one Stull hopes is finished. The second-year UMass coach wants a leader to come forth.

"Ideally, he will go out and play well," Stull said. "But that doesn't always happen. I think Billy (Shaughnessy) can do the job if we need him. Last week was the first time we didn't score after getting inside the 20, I don't want to see that again, we can't afford it, especially against Rhode Island."

UMass will be looking to establish a time-eating ground game to keep the ball away from Ehrhardt and the explosive Ram offense. Last year, senior tailback George Barnwell rambled for 172 yards against the Rams. Add junior-college transfer fullbacks Al Neri and Anthony Strickland and the Minutemen should be able to gring it out with some success.

Should Williamson go to the air, he will look primarily for UM's top receiver, junior flanker John Crowley (nine catches for 136 yards) or split end Tom Cioppa (four grabs for 69 yards).

On the line, UMass has had success going right, behind the blocks of guard Stan Fay, who started at fullback last season but has yet to play this season after injuring a knee in spring practice, came to UMass as a defensive back before being shifted to offense. He will be used in special schemes on defense and potentially on offense and special teams.

UM's linebackers (Todd Rundle and Manganaro on the outside and John McKeown and either Vito Perrone or Steve Silva on the inside) Mare fluid athletes that play good pass coverage. The defensive line (nose guard Mike Dwyer and tackles Eddie Sullivan and Mike Kowalski) will be met with double and triple teams and will be responsible for stopping what little running game the Rams have (211 yards in four game), plus trying to get at Ehrhardt.

The defense as a unit is among the best in I-AA. They are in the top ten in rushing defense (80.5 yards-per-game), total defense (243 yards-per-game) and scoring defense. Top-ranked Richmond, maybe the division's post potent offensive team, scored only 19 points on UMass, one touchdown on a punt return and another on a halfback option. Only three legitimate touchdowns have been scored on the UMass defense.

Keys for UMass include cutting down on turnovers (they had seven last week against Harvard) and maintaining the high level of intensity they have displayed this season. The Rams will be looking to establish the air game early and often and put the pressure on Williamson. UMass can not afford to get behind early to the Rams, after the loss to Brown (which came after leading at one point, 10-0) coach Bob Griffin's crew isn't likely to let down at any time.

"As all Yankee Conference games are, this is an important one," Griffin said. "The game is on the road to the conference championship. This is UMass' first league game and they have it at home where they always play tough. They are a well-coached team and have obviously improved from a year ago."

Kaczorowski and tackle Mike Briggs. Center Pete Montini has also played well. The left side is manned by John Benzinger and first time starter Bob Greaney (in for the injured Sheldon Hardison). Tight ends Ned Toffey and Bart Fuller have also played well.

On special teams, punter Dimitri Yavis has averaged 40 yards a kick. Placekicker Silvio Bonvini is questionable with an injured him, should he be unable to go sophomore walk-on Rolf Wendt will take over the kicking chores.

Weiner will try for Conte's seat

By KATHLEEN KENNEDY
Collegian Correspondent

The former Director of the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Aging, Robert S. Weiner, D-Amherst, announced his candidacy for Congress, Friday morning at the City Council Chambers in Northampton, aiming to unseat current Congressman Silvio Conte.

Weiner, a 10-year resident of Amherst and UMass master's degree recipient said, "through a massive telephone campaign, organized campaign management and supportive volunteers," he plans to beat Silvio Conte, R-Pittsfield, who has held the seat for 27 years.

"Conte is a conservative Republican," Weiner said, "tied to the administration in almost all it does except for a couple of votes in an attempt to quiet down the people of Western Massachusetts."

Weiner has been elected as a delegate to the 1982, 1983 and 1985 Massachusetts Democratic State Conventions. He is legislative Chairman of the Pioneer Valley Gray Panthers, vice-president of the Amherst Democratic Town Committee and was on Senator John Kerry's state campaign finance committee.

John Kerry's state campaign finance committee.

Weiner said he vowed to "fight to win back the funds we have lost in housing, education, jobs, environment, protection, energy and health care."

Robert S. Weiner announced his bid to unseat Representative Silvio Conte.

According to Weiner, "The district lost $14 million in student loans during the last five years of the Reagan Administration along with $200 million in other program cuts."Weiner is the president of a nationwide executive search and management consulting group in Amherst. He was also the director of the U.S. House Subcommittee on Health. In addition, Weiner served as a campaign aide to President Carter in 1976 and Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass, in 1980.

Weiner recieved his master's degree in recent American history from UMass and a bachelor's degree from Oberlin Collegein 1969.

Peace pagoda is inaugurated

Spectators await the start of the ceremony inaugurating peace shrine in Leverett Saturday. The celebration continued despite heavy rain.

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

LEVERETT—The clouds and rain shrouding the top of a crowded hill here Saturday did not darken the splendor of the inauguration of North America's first "peace pagoda."

More than 2,000 people from all over the world converged upon this hill, bedecked with flowers and banners, to pay homage to the white structure erected as a "challenge to war mongers the world around," as one speaker said.

The celebration culminated 18 months of work by volunteers using donated materials to build the pagoda, sealed with cement and filled with Buddhist artifacts and remains of Buddhism's founder, Siddhartha.

Though rain powerful enough to remove the white face from parts of the freshly painted pagoda persisted, many people remained standing throughout the ceremony. They listened to Buddhist monks' wind-muffled chants of "Myo-Ho-Ren-Ge-Kyo," an expression of their desire for world peace.

"Rain or shine, we remain dedicated to peace," Mahatma Gandhi's granddaughter, Sumatra Ganhi Kulkarni Devi, said as rainwater washed over the podium where she stood.

Other speakers included Leverett Selectwoman Nancy Emond, who is studying at the University of Massachusetts.

"I have noticed a great deal of ambivalence and apathy among college students," Emond said, "I believe apathy is fear. In this jaded age of Rambo-mania, you have followed a different vision." Ilkyd Harrington, who helped build London's recently completed peace pagoda and is a member of that city's governing council, traveled to Leverett for the inauguration.

"This is a great spiritual and emotional challenge to war mongers the world around," Harrington said. After the ceremony, those who withstood the heavy downpour sought refuge under food tents, featuring cultural specialties ranging from Japanese sushi to Sri Lankan rice. Others remained outside to stroll around the pagoda, examining guilded statues recessed into the pagoda wall, each representing a stage in the Buddhist quest for enlightenment.

Town resident drafts petition for rent control

By PETER DELANI
Collegian Correspondent

Tenants facing rent increases may soon find help if a petition calling for Amherst to request the state Legislature to form a rent control board becomes law.

The petition would take at least until May 1986 to become before it is passed, according to Kenneth Mosakow, the Town Meeting member who drafted the petition.

Despite the lenghty process involved in establishing the rent control board, Mosakowski said he is enthusiastic about its potential. If the board is established, it would rule on an appeals basis.

"An individual or a group of tenants from a housing complex would have to file a petition to the rent control board if they thought they were victims of exhorbitant rental increases," Mosakowski said "It would be very similar to a small claims court." Mosakowski said the wording of the article submitted to the state would be similar to a rent control article approved for Lowell in 1975.

That article stipulated that the board would meet every two weeks to review cases. A petition from tenants would take approximately 30 days to go before the review board. Mosakowski said this board would be a "two-way street," serving as a vehicle for landlords and owners to air any displeasure or problems they may have with tenants. Mosakowski said there is a tremendous need for low-income housing in Amherst. More than 10 percent of the traditional families in Amherst are under the poverty level, up more than 100 percent from 1970. Mosakowski said that the waiting list for subsidized housing is the longest it has been in years. In 1984, Amherst received over 300 applications for low-income housing. In 1982, Watson Farms--a 15 unit housing complex for low-income families on East Street in Amherst--recieved 124 applications from families within two weeks of its opening.

Perhaps the most telling figure is from a survey taken in 1980 by the Census Bureau. The U.S. Government established a relative figure on how much of a family's net income should be spent on housing. The government said no more than 30 percent of a family's net income should be spent on housing. Of the tenant households in Amherst more than 48.2 percent of the families spend 35 percent or more of their total income towards housing. This figure exceeds those of neighboring communities. Belchertown is the closet town, with 41.8 percent of families paying more than 30 percent of their income for housing. Others are as follows:

- Deerfield 23.4 percent
- Hadley 18.2 percent
- Northampton 23.8 percent
- Holyoke 27.9 percent.

Mosakowski said since the 1970s, "conventional family poverty has more than doubled in Amherst."

The housing shortage and high rates effect not only low-income families, but students and faculty at the University of Massachusetts.

Observatory to have $3 million

By ANITA ROYE
Collegian Correspondent

A $3 million grant was recently awarded to the Five College Radio Astronomy Observatory by the National Science Foundation in recognition of past research.

The observatory, used by all the colleges in the Five College system, is designed to study planets, young stars and galaxies by the use of the largest single antenna millimeter radio telescope in the United States.

The grant will help further research to "survey a large number of nearby galaxies and study star formation," said Paul Goldsmith, associate Director of the observatory and a radio astronomy professor at the Unviersity of Massachusetts.

The 11-year-old observatory is housed in a dome near the Quabbin reservoir.

The $3 million will help to continue operation of the observatory for the next three years, until the grant runs out, and then the observatory will be eligible for reconsideration. The money will also go toward purchasing new equipment and paying the salaries of engineers, astronomers, and graduate students working in the

ASHBURN, Ga. (AP)—Ashburn's black community gathered amid tight security and refrains of hymns yesterday to bury a black man whose shooting death by police touched off a violent demonstration and several days of racial tension.

State patrol officers lined the funeral route and stood outside the new Mount Olive Baptist Church, where nearly 300 people attended services for Robert L. Wright.

About 30 extra law enforcement officers waited at the Turner County Sheriff's Department in case trouble developed, but the southern Georgia town of 4,500 people, about evenly split between whites and blacks, was calm.

The Rev. Fred Taylor of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference told mourners that the "ultimate question" blacks in Ashburn face is how to "prevent or lessen the chance of the same thing happening again."

Taylor, bearing a message from SCLC President Joseph Lowery, said, "It is very tragic. We live in a world where people resolve human conflict with the barrel of a gun."

The body of Robert Lee Wright, Jr. is carried by pallbearers from a Georgia church Sunday. Wright was shot by a police officer while fleeing courtroom hearing. His killing touched off a night of rioting by angry blacks.

1 killed in riot

LONDON (AP) — More than 500 youths battled police in fierce street fighting yesterday night in north London. Officials said one policeman was stabbed to death and another officer wounded by a shotgun blast was among 28 people injured.

It was the first police fatality and the first gunfire reported in the riots that hit the south London district of Brixton last weekend and the industrial cities of Liverpool and Birmingham last month.

Clive Appleby, administrator of North Middlesex Hospital, said a policeman died shortly after being admitted with a stab wound in the neck.

Scotland Yard said at least six policemen were injured during the rioting in the Tottenham district, including one with a shotgun wound in the stomach.

Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, reported earlier that three policemen were shot, but police did not confirm that. The agency said one policeman seen being dragged away unconscious, and is quoted another officer as saying "They are now using shotguns."

3 Soviets held

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—A caller saying he represented the extremist group holding three Soviet Embassy personnel hostage said yesterday they would not be freed until the Soviet Union and America end Lebanon's 10-year-old civil war.

The anonymous caller told a Western news agency that the group holding the Soviets, the Islamic Liberation Organization, also appealed to another terrorist organization not to free the American and French hostages that it kidnapped.

Guerrillas of the Islamic Liberation Organization, a Moslem fundamentalist group, kidnapped three Soviet diplomats and a Soviet Embassy doctor on Monday and the body of one, Cultural Attache Arcady Katkov, was found Wednesday in a West Beirut suburb. He had been shot in the head.

In its initial report of the abductions, the Islamic Liberation Organization threatened to kill all four Soviet hostages unless Syrian-backed militias halted their offensive against the Moslem fundamentalist Tawheed militia in the northern port city of Tripoli.

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Improve sharing of evaluations

Undoubtedly, much fascinating reading material has escaped my attention through the years; however, "The Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide" was recently brought to my attention by several of my former students we were "disturbed" and "upset" over the "review" of Exc. Sci. 210, a course which I introduced and continue to teach.

While reading the Introduction in CATE, I could not discern whether this publication was to be a serious piece or whether it was intended to be a spoof. Evidence in support of spoof is found in the statement, "We will not evaluate a course on the basis of a single response, but insist on at least two (emphasis mine) evaluations so that we can present a more complete picture." A bit further along in the Introduction more spoof-support can be noted: "So, as you can see, the summarization of CATE responses is hardly a cold analytic endeavor."

But is the CATE staff, as noted in the Introduction, really "proud to bring you this guide"?

As the thousands of students who have enrolled in my course during the past many years can attest, course evaluations have been shared, voluntarily. It was not necessary for students to ask. What was shared was the "semi-official" instrument. In truth, there is not official course evaluation instrument at this university. My experience tells me our university administration is hoping the problem will somehow go away. Most students are aware of the evaluation sheet I have described and most students of my acquaintance employ a variety of escape mechanisms to avoid completing it.

Just to point out a serious descrepany between CATE and the "semi-official" instrument, I proudly present the evaluations for my Exc. Sci. 210 course for the two most recent semesters. I was on sabbatical leave at the Medical School at the University of Rome, Italy, for the Fally 1984 semester, hence the unavailability of the Fall 1984 evaluation.

Benjamin Ricci

The rating scale is as follows: 1-Hopelessly inadequate, 2-Inadequate, 3-Barely adequate, 4-Adequate, 5-Effective, 6-Very effective, 7-Unusually effective.

The evaluations, reported as means and standard deviations for questions 10 through 21, are too lengthy to report here, but everyone—student or faculty—is invited to examine the computer print-outs.

Questions 10 through 21 deal with the instructor's teaching preparaton and ability—"states objectives, organization, encourages student participation, motivates students, is clear, etc." Question 16 deals with the examinations and their "fair indication of mastery of material." The means for each of the questions, except 16 range from 6.08 to 6.66 (thus my teaching is very effective leaning towards unusually effective). The examinations, question 16, were evaluated 5.66 for 1984 and 4.78 for 1985. somehow my exams are only "effective" or "adequate," but I still insist that students ought to be prepared for life after commencement when ability to think clearly assumes extreme importance.

Not so incidentally, the enrollment in 1984 was 273 and the number of returns was 116, or a 42 percent return. In 1985, enrollment was 251 with 64 returns, or a 25 percent return. A comparison with the CATE "evaluation provided by 13 students of 251 enrolled—or 5 percent, is invited.

Student evaluations are important, but they should be done seriously and without malice. Given the discrepancy, as well as the validity and reliability of the comparative measuring instruments, I conclude that spending $10,500 for the CATE publication strikes me as immoral in this day of serious gaps (really chasms) in the delivery of human services in Massachusetts.

I recommend that the student body (1) divert that handsome sum of money to the Boltwood Volunteers, a student group which has brought and continues to bring great credit to our university and (2) engage in jaw-boning, persuasion, or whatever else is necessary to encourage faculty to share their evaluations with students. The cost of this approach will be minimal.

Can we hear it from the studetns who, incidentally, are not "fickle" as characterized in CATE?

Benjamin Ricci is a professor of exercise science, and a member of the faculty senate committee on teacher improvement and evaluation.

Letters

Column inconsistent with author's views

So, acclaimed Collegian columist Stephen Erickson has decided to speak out against the injustice of Americans under the age of 21 no longer having the right to drink. According to Erickson, this is un-American, the responsibility of our government being to "guarantee our rights, not to hold our hands as if we were children or inmates in a funny farm."

Well, as a big fan of the warden of this funny farm, I'd have thought that Erikson would realize that President Reagan was the one ultimately responsible for this un-American activity. Getting the government off the backs of Americans by eliminating affirmative action is apparently OK, but Erikson seems not to have noticed that it was the Reagan administration which forced the states to raise their drinking age to 21 or face the withdrawal of all federal highway funds. Is this the new federalism, taking control away from the federal bureaucracy and giving it back to the states? Come on, it's about time that Erikson and the rest of the Republican Club started to become aware of the hypocrisy of the Reagan administration.

Withdrawal of strip true to following

I know of the recent censorship of Yeasthead. I know you have your rules to abide by. Jason Talerman has also dedicated his spare time to help the Collegian with photographic and editorial submissions. I do believe that Talerman should be cut, because his comic strip is far above the Collegian's expectation of humor and thought. In other strips, the reader can easily notice the pun intended, similar to watching television as a mere observer.

In Yeasthead though, one has to think as a philosphical reader. I know the Collegian is not concerned about the advancement of the student—just the rights of the students. In recent strips of Gordy, Freaker Patrol, and Bat Brain, we, the observer, have seen characters abusing alcohol, sex, and drugs. I know how the Collegian likes to condone these deviant actions in their comics, but I do not participate in the use of illegal narcotics.

To get back to Yeasthead, if the Collegian feels Talerman's recent submissions were too offensive, the only way Talerman can keep his "following" is to withdraw. This is due to the fact his publication Yeasthead is too advanced for this prestigious journalistic paper. If Talerman wants to attack any racial, ethnic, or religious group, he should first choose to attack the people who are against the First Admendment and freedom of speech.

Attitude of authority

Webster's Dictionary defines authority as the power to command, influence, judge; an accepted source of expert information.

Yet the "experts" of the UMass security department seem to have their own definition of authority. They sent dozens of blue and white uniformed "officers" to the stadium on Saturday to make everyone feel like they were in prison, not at a football game.

Suited up with their guns and billy clubs, the "authorities" proceeded to walk, hands folded and cigarette lit, in gangs, up and down the parking lot, making everyone feel on edge.

I'll be the first to admit that crowd control is important, but the attitudes of these so-called professionals was irksome. I have never seen such an ugly display of power in my life. One sign at the game read "dry tailgate." Is prohibition next?

UMass forces you to grow up fast. The irony is that once you are of age some University employees have this habit of making you feel less and less responsible. Respect should flow on a two way street.

Well, at least one could go inside the game and gain respect, right? Wrong, wrong, wrong. Everywhere one turned, an officer was telling you to sit, stand, turn around, walk faster or slow down until you were too dizzy to watch the game anyway. I guess issuing parking tickets all week game them an extra sense of power to ruin a day in which many look forward to getting together, socializing, and having a few beers. I was waiting for the tow trucks to arrive for the grand finale—who knows how much stock each officer has in Amherst towing?

I have a good feeling about the UMass Minutemen. They are a talented ball club this season. Too bad the UMass police will turn people away from attending. Down through the ages, differing attitudes have drawn people apart instead of together. Unfortunately, Saturday's game made me experience this lesson first hand.

All comic strips, like any submission to the Collegian, are subject to editing to adhere to Collegian standards before being printed in the paper. As has been done with comics in the past, strips are revised by the editor with the consent of the cartoonist, or the artist is given the option of resubmitting them. Jason Talerman submitted three strips that were not acceptable for publication by Collegian standards and he chose not to revise them. He has not submitted any strips since.

The Collegian welcomes letters, column, and cartoon submissions. Submissions should be mailed to the Editorial Editor at the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01003, or they can be dropped off at the Collegian classified ad counter in the basement of the Campus Center. Due to the volume of mail received, individual replies cannot be made.

All letters submitted for publication must be signed and include the author's address and telephone number, which will not be published. Letters must be typewritten and double spaced at 67 characters per line. Column submissions should be between 40 and 60 lines. All submissions are subject to editing for clarity and length.—Editor

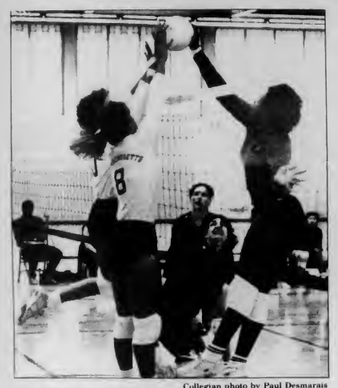
The key word in this week's arts line-up is music. You'll be able to hear everything from fusion to rock to the classiest classics without moving even your big toe from the Happy Valley...

UMass professor Savatore Macchia, contrabassist, will offer 20th-century music for bass at 8 p.m. tomorrow night in Bezanson Hall. Macchia will be joined by Robert Stern, piano and conductor; Lynn Klock, saxaphone; Laura Knock; horn; and David Sporny, trombone; and Martin Kluger, percussion. Said concert is part of the Department of Music and Dance Faculty Recital series, and is free...

Those of you who like a side order of visuals with your music should tear yourself away from MTV on Thursday to catch "Rock and Roll Time Tunnel," a half-hour slide show brought to us by the Governor's Program Council. Said show will be presented at 7, 8, 9, and 10 p.m., in the Student Union Ballroom...

Thursday will also be a big night for jazz fusions fans. Spyro veterans of the Boston Globe and Newport jazz festivals, Gyra will grace the stage at Northampton's Calvin Theater at 7 p.m. Tix are still available at all Datatix outlets, the Fine Arts Center Box Office, and Main Street Records in Northampton, among other places...

Saturday brings the Academy of St. Martin in the Fields Octet to Amherst College's Buckley Recital Hall. Said concert will begin at 8:15 p.m. and works by Brahns, Bennett, and Mendelssohn, all of whom hummed more than aimless tunes. Tickets are $12 for the general public, $10 for senior citizens and students, and can be reserved by calling 542-2195 any morning this week. So get into the groove...



The Hampshire College Chorus and Valley Festival Orchestra have something to sing about. They're presenting two Bach cantatas at 2 p.m. Sunday, at the Grace Church on Amherst Common. Admission to said concert is free. And to prove that classical music can be fun, there will be a Bach look-alike contest at 1:45. First the winner will receive dinner for two at Plumbley's.

Blocks like this helped the University of Massachusetts beat Northeastern in five games on Saturday.

The excitement began in game four. Northeastern jumped out to a quick 6-1 lead. But the spikers, behind the combined hitting and blocking of Guiliotis and sophomore hitter Violetta Gladkowska, tied the score 7-7. The lead would change hands several times until the Huskies went up 14-12 to darken the chances of a UMass comeback bid. But after freshman middle hitter Barbara Meehan's block, the serving that had abandoned the spikers in games one and two returned in full force, causing key Huskie miscues. UMass went on to win game four, 16-14, saving five match points along the way and forcing a fifth and decisive game.

The Minutwomen cruised out to a 10-3 lead, again sparked by the tandem of Guiliotis and Gladkowska. But Northeastern would not die and rallied to knot things up, 10-10. However, another Gladkowska kill stifled the Huskie rally and gave the spikers an 11-10 lead.

UMass would never look back. An Ann Ringrose service ace put the spikers up 12-10. The lead would increase to 14-10 behind a head-turning Meehan kill and another Northeastern error. A Huskie hit sailed out of bounds, completing the dramatic UMass comeback.

Sortino attributed the win as a complete team effort, but also cited the incredible play of Gladkowska, who nailed several big kills to lead the UMass comeback charge.

"We said to Juliet (Primer, the UMass setter) to use Violetta at the end, because she was scoring for us, she always does," said Sortino. "She doesn't hit as hard as some people do, but she gets to the open spots. She sees the court very well."

"If you can control the ball between your opponents' 25 and 35-yard lines, you can control the game," Hixon said. We can do that very well with Donnelly in the middle because she just controls play."

Keeping the ball within the Black Bear end for an astonishing 65 of 70 minutes, the Minutewomen ran play after play continually wearing them down.

Donnelly opened the scoring with 17:00 to go in the first half with a blast that beat Maine goalkeeper Tina Ouellette. Robertson initiated the goal with a corner hit that Donnelly stopped, faked a shot from the top of the circle. Donnelly has scored five goals in two games.

Six minutes later, junior attackman Erin Canniff took a pass on the right wing, and shredded the defense before having the ball knocked out of bounds. On the ensuing corner, junior forward Lisa Griswold sent a shot off the post that bounded toward midfield. Senior forward Chris Kocot retrived the ball, fed to sophomore forward Tonia Kennedy who passed to Robertson who scored her first goal of the year since being transfered from defense to right wing.

from Belkin to give UMass the 2-0 with a minute to go in the half.

Roundtree, has scored six goals this year, three in the last two games.

"It may be a blessing in disguise," Banda said of being scored upon."The monkey is off our backs.We'll do a better job of handling it the next time." UMass has outscored its eight opponents 36-1.

Massachusetts outshot Rutgers 14-2 and now holds a 150-12 shot advantage over its eight opponents.

"It was a very physical game," Banda said, "and the players were just pounding through the water and mud that made up the lower Boyden Field)."

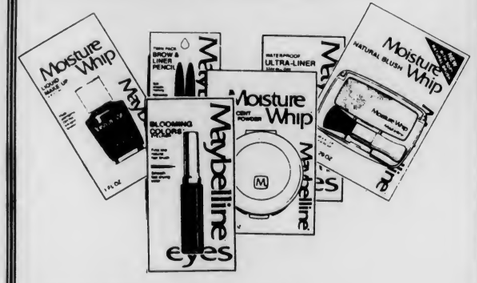
Anders Hedelin broke free from the Huskie defense and fired a shot off of the left post.The freshmen followed his shot and put his own rebound into the net.

At 20:55, Marciano took a feed from F.J.Zwicklbauer, broke in from the right, and blasted a shot past keeper Frank Stockwell's left.Giordano was also credited with an assist on the play.

Just three minutes later, Giordano picked up a loose ball 30 yards in front of the NU net, went left, and beat Stockwell for an unassisted goal.



After a one hour rain delay at halftime,. the Minutemen came out and continued to dominate in the second half. Goals by Zwicklbauer and Giordano completed the UMass offense for the day and the rest was left up to keeper Don Donahue and the Minutemen defense.

The shutout was Donahue's second in a row. The Minutemen have not allowed a goal in four games, have won give straight,and nine of its last ten.

A SERVICE OF THE DEAN OF STUDENTS OFFICE

SPRING 1985 DEAN'S LIST

Congratulations to those of you whose names appear below. You have earned a place on the Dean's List by your outstanding academic performance. This honor is accorded to students who achieve a semester average of 3.5 or higher with twelve or more graded credits. Since fewer than 15 percent meet this high standard, it marks significant accomplishment. Providing the opportunity for academic achievement is the University's highest priority and I am especially pleased, therefore that you made the most of that opportunity. Your success is a source of pride to the entire University community. Congratulations.

Joseph Duffey,Chancellor

PRESS RELEASES

The Office of PublicInformation will issue a press release about your Dean's List achievement to your hometown newspaper if you are a Massachusetts resident. Out of state students please pick up a press release form at 200 Munson Hall.

PARENTS DAY

A special program for the parents of students who achieved Dean's List status for the Spring Semester 1985 and/or Fall Semester 1985 will be held on Saturday, April 12, 1986, on campus. There will be an all day series of academic and cultural activities, providing parents with an opportunity to sample and experience our educational programs. Details will be forthcoming in Mid-March 1986. This event is being coordinated by the Office of Alumni Affairs, 545-2317.

The Dean's List is published under auspices of the Dean of Students Office, and is based on grades provided by the Registrar's Office as of August 27, 1985. (If your name is not listed and you believe you qualified, based on the stated criteria, please confirm your academic record with the Registrar's Office and bring a copy of such record to the Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore Hall, so that your name can be added.)

Alternative college is thriving in its 15th year

By AARON SCHACHTER
Collegian Correspondent

Hampshire College, celebrating its 15th anniversary next week, is already considered to be among the few hundred selective colleges in the nation and a frontrunner in granting students academic independence.

The school began as a testing ground and is unique because it does not give grades for classes completed.

"Letter grades represent a shorthand difficult to evaluate. Each professor has a different view on grades; they wouldn't tell a student where his or her weaknesses were," Russell Powell, a Hampshire spokesman, said.

"We feel that education should be qualitative rather than quantative, it shouldn't be coercive," Powell said."

For this reason, Powell said, Hampshire does not require that students fill a certain amount of credit hours. Instead, students submit a contract for approval by their faculty advisor, specifying what they expect to accomplish in their years of study.

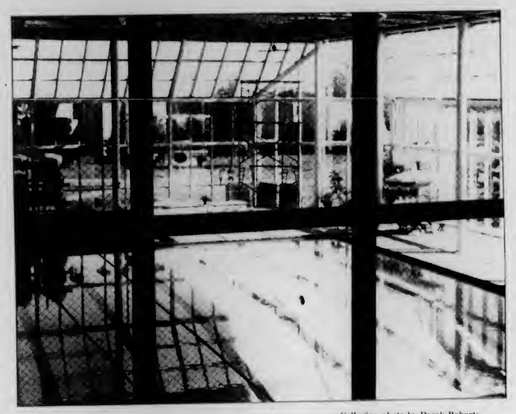
"Because of this," Powell said, "the student-faculty adviser relationship is much greater than in a normal college," Powell said.

"The spirit of the school has to do with a philosophy among the faculty; an emphasis on the principles of getting students not to regurgitate information," Powell said, "but to structure it in a way that fosters or encourages the student to actually think like a professor or scholar in his field."

Joel Meister, a former professor at Hampshire, said: "It is doubtful that the founders of Hampshire had anything else in mind than designing a more appealing means to the same end-good citizenship, a modicum of knowledge, and social and occupational success. Hampshire's aim was to replace the classroom by independent work as the central learning experience."

The quality of professors at Hampshire is high, with over 70 percent holding full doctorate degrees.

"Most of the professors have a fine reputation as teachers in their field," Powell said, "Two of our current professors have been given national awards for excellence in their work."



Hampshire College was first established in 1970 by the four college consortium and a $6 million donation by Harold Johnson, an Amherst College graduate.

Hampshire also gained notoriety in 1977 when it became the first institution of higher education to completely divest from South Africa. Parallel to Hampshire's decision to divest, is the passing of a third world resolution which requires that every student engage in issues of the third world before they graduate.

"Classes in America are significantly culture bound," Powell said, "so this resolution gets students to experience their scholarship from more than a single perspective and acknowledge that one's perception influences the questions one asks and consequently, the answers."

Hampshire began the first cognitive science program in the country, which has recently been copied by other colleges, Powell said. The cognitive program deals with research on how the brain operates.

The faculty places a heavy emphasis on interdepartmental work and interdisciplinary study, which pleases both the students and professors. These innovative programs, Powell said, have been praised by the National Instutite for Education and the Association of American Colleges, and have been recommended by them to other academic instutiions.

Hampshire awarded for energy-efficiency

By Nancy Klingener
Collegian Correspondent

The installation of a pair of cogenerators at Hampshire College, saving an estimated 10 percent in energy costs, has earned the school a $1000 award from the tenth annual Cost Reduction Incentive Awards Program.

The cogeneration project was first recommended in the fall of 1983, said Hampshire College Treasurer Allen Torrey.

"We were looking for ways to reduce our dependence," he said.

The cogenerators provide propane gas-fired electricity for Hampshire's all-electric campus, with a by-product of hot water for the school dining commons and the two dormitories. They can produce 60 killowatts per hour.

Torrey said the cost of running the cogenerators depends on the daily hours used, but he estimated that daily 18-hour usage would cost $30,000 per year.

The entire installation cost of $160,000 was funded with a bond.

Other energy saving measures recently introduced at Hampshire include improvements to Enfield House, a residence known as a 'mod'. The building houses about 200 students and some offices.

With only one building renovated, there was a $16,000 difference between the electricity costs for 1984 and 1985.

"In about two years, we can really tell," Torrey said. "The main thing is we're trying to combat the high energy costs. We're interested in a good, quick payback," Torrey said.

The $3 million is supplementary to money already provided by the state."We have succeeded by support from the Commonwealth," Goldsmith said.

Total costs are estimated to be $4.5 million for the next three years, he said.

The astronomers associated with the observatory are looking forward to applying the grant to develop new, more sensitive detectors. Already, the observatory has detected distant quasars with high resolution.

"One of our advantages right now is a very large telescope with a sensitive detector," Goldsmith said. The observatory is also involved in combined telescopic research with the facilities at UCLA and CalTech. "In the past, we have achieved the highest degree of clarity in these joint efforts," Goldsmith said.

Lightning hits transformer

A lightning bolt reportedly struck a power transformer on Amity Street near Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium at 1:03 p.m. Saturday, police said.

An unidentified pedestrian told police the lightning struck the metal point at the top of his umbrella as he was passing nearby. Police said a small 'pinhole' in the umbrella was caused by the lightning and no one was reported injured.

Also, police reported that a man was rushed to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton at 1:11 p.m. for an apparent heart attack, while attending the University of Massachusetts football game.

BOG approves constitution

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

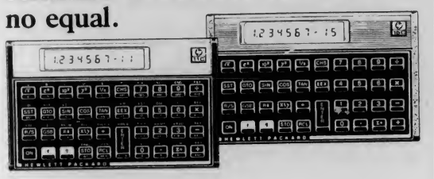
After a delay of several weeks, the Campus Center Board of Governors ratified its 1985 constitution last week after a one- hour debate on whether faculty members of the board should be given the power to vote.

Although the motion was withdrawn before a vote could be taken, if passed it would have allowed the two faculty members of the board to vote on all issues in the executive committee. Since the board's creation, only student members have been allowed to vote. Faculty members, the Campus Center director and the director of the Student Activities Office may express their opinions during board meetings.

Board member John Stefanini proposed the motion because he said he felt the board would have more credibility by having faculty members involved in decision making. "It would be beneficial to have non-students more involved with the board. The board is losing influence in the Campus Center and reorganization has to be done for the board to have more control over Campus Center fees," he said.

Representative of the Graduate Student Senate John Hayes said he opposed the motion because faculty members do not pay any Campus Center fees.

"We can assume the faculty accounts for only 10 percent of the revenue of the Campus Center," he said. "The students should have the power for the administration of fees because we're the ones who pay them."



Speaking in favor of the motion, Gary Kaufmen said, "A gap exists between students and administration. They do things behind our backs and we do things behind theirs. If the motion is approved, the gap will possibly close and we may get appointments to act in their committees."

The board's treasurer, Fran Hegeler, said she considered the board "incredibly naiive" for pondering whether to give voting rights to non-students.

"We will open ourselves "We will open ourselves up for special interest groups (by passing the motion). People can participate in the board without needing to vote," Hegler said. "I strongly oppose giving the right to vote to people if they haven't the interest to show up for the meetings."

After a motion was made to postpone the decision for a week, Stefanini withdrew. The postponement would have also put off the final vote on the constitution. "I would rather have the constitution ratified. Postponing it would hurt our standing, which is not what I want," Stefanini said.

For the student who has no equal– scientific calculators that have no equal.

This year, get a head start on your classes with the HP-11C or the HP-15C. So advanced they don't need an "equals" key. So extremely easy to use, you'll solve even the most complex mathematical problems quickly.

Hewlett-Packard's innovative design eliminates a vast number of keystrokes. That saves you time with hyperbolics and other complex calculations . . . a big plus at exam time.

Get an HP-11C or HP-15C today, and start out the year one step ahead.

Get to the answers faster. With the TI-55-II.

What you need to tackle the higher mathematics of a science or engineering curriculum are more functions – more functions than a simple slide-rule calculator has.

Enter the TI-55-II, with 112 powerful functions. You can work faster and more accurately with the TI-55-II, because it's preprogrammed to perform complex calculations – like definite integrals, linear regression and hyperbolics – at the touch of a button. And it can also be programmed to do repetitive problems without re-entering the entire formula.

Included is the Calculator Decision-Making Sourcebook. It makes the process of using the TI-55-II even simpler, and shows you how to use all the power of the calculator.

Get to the answers faster. Let a TI-55-II show you how.

Ehrhardt completed four passes to All-American tight end Brian Forster during the drive, the bulk of the offense the Rams got from Forster as UM's defensive scheme of playing a deep zone and putting cornerback Duckworth Grange on the URI star worked.

UMass, with sophomore quarterback Bob Williamson making his debut, did little offensively either, being intercepted once and gaining little on the ground in the slop.

Ehrhardt mixed up his offense on the scoring drive, throwing five times for 42 yards and handing off to fullback Dave Morrill (27 carries for 97 yards) six times for 16 yards.

On second and goal from the eight, Pratt made a difficult cut to take the reverse eight yards for the score. Paul Stringfellow kicked the extra point.

Kevin Smellie returned the kickoff 44 yards to the URI 48, two Barnwell carries gave UMass a first down at the URI 38 at the start of the fourth quarter and a chance at winning.

Williamson hit flanker John Crowley for eight yards to the 30, Barnwell's three yard rush set up first down at the 27. Williamson carried for no gain before reserve fullback Anthony Strickland, carring the ball for only the second time all game, fumbled. URI's Todd Tunnell recovered at the 27.

The Rams then went to Morill and the 5-10, 203 pound Natick product responded, carrying the ball nine straight times for 33 yards to the UMass 41.

On fourth and two at the UM 40, Griffin made the toughest call of the game, letting Ehrhardt go to the air. His pass to a sliding Pratt was complete for 24 yards to the 16. Both Pratt and UM safety Paul Platek slipped in the mud, Platek just missing tipping the ball away.

The drive was eventually stopped, with UMass taking over at its two with 2:30 to go. A pair of runs by Al Neri and Barnwell gained two before Williamson hit Crowley for 23 and a first down at the 23.

Statistically, Williamson was five-of-10 for 49 yards, Ehrhardt was 19-of-36 for 194 yards and two interceptions. UM linebacker John McKeown made 14 tackles.

forcing the ball into triple coverage and getting intercepted by Charles Watson at the 44 with 42 second left, ending UM's chances.

Statistically, Williamson was five-of-10 for 49 yards, Ehrhardt was 19-of-36 for 194 yards and two interceptions. UM linebacker John McKeown made 14 tack s. UM punter Dimitri Yavis had a good day, having a 41.1 average on seven kicks.

Soccer, volleyball extend streaks

• Women, 8-0, allow first goal

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The third-ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team extended another streak when they won their eighth straight game over 16th ranked Rutgers by a 3-1 score on a quagmire of a field (lower Boyden) on Saturday morning.

The Minutewomen won their third game in a row over Top 20 competition in the rain and mud, having beaten UConn and Brown in similar conditions.

"When it gets colder and snows, you need good mental toughness. This was a good test of that," coach Kalekeni Banda said.

The Minutewomen, 8-0 also gave up their first goal of the year, a shot off the foot of Rutgers Cathy Bostjowcic with 29:30 left in the game to narrow the UMass lead to 2-1. Miscommunication on the part of keeper Carla DeSantis and the UMass defense and the slippery conditions gave Rutkers the edge she needed to break the streak.

While the Scarlet Knights celebrated as if they had won the pennant, the UMass defenders "got mad," Banda said. There really wasn't a letdown, UMass was able to stay with it and scored with a minute to go in the game.

Catherine Cassady took a Debbie Belkin pass and gave UMass the 1-0 lead with 19:00 left in the first half that UMass dominated. Roundtree took another pass

• Spikers down NU in five games

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The clock was about to strike midnight and the University of Massachusetts volleyball team's dream season was almost just that, a dream.

But the 12th-ranked Minutewomen, after trailing two games to none and facing five match points in game four, orchestrated an electrifying comeback and beat the Northeastern Huskies, 9-15, 6-15, 15-7, 16-14, 15-10. The win keeps the spiker unbeaten streak alive at 15.

"I knew we could come back if we tried," said sophomore middle hitter Marcy Guiliotis. "We just had to get our defense going and start talking on the court. When we do that we're pretty good."

I'm relieved that it's over," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino. "They fought a long hard match to come back and win three in a row."

UMass didn't even closely resemble a team that had won 14 straight decisions in games one and two. The Minutewomen committed several passing and service errors and it looked as though the Huskies were going to depart the hostile confines of Boyden Gym (with a crowd of close to 200) with a sweep over the spikers. "In game one, I thought we were going to be blown right out of the gym," said Sortino. "I was happy to see that they could turn themselves around after starting so poorly and that they held their composure."

UM bogged down by Rams, 7-3

URI runs over UMass in the mud

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Rhode Island beat the University of Massachusetts at its own game: running the football.

The Rams entered Saturday's game as one of Division 1-AA's best throwing teams, but after a pre-game thunderstorm turned the Alumni Stadium field into literally a sea of mud, coach Bob Griffin resorted to the traditional Minuteman standby, slugging it out on the ground.

URI, scoring on an eight-yard reverse by wide receiver Jim Pratt in the third quarter, held on to beat UMass 7-3 before 6,871 Homecoming Day fans.

The loss drops UMass to 2-3 and 0-1 in the Yankee Conference. UMass has lost two straight, scoring six points in the process.

"It's tough to play offense under these conditions," said UM coach Bob Stull. "I was sure nobody was going to score a lot of points, but we had our chances to score and didn't make the most of them, again. This was another frustrating game."

The Rams won the game with a fourth quarter drive that covered 72 yards in 9:22. On fourth and two at the UMass two, quarterback Tom Ehrhardt's pass was batted away, but the Rams accomplished what they wanted, ball control.

"That drive was as good an offensive effort as we've put out all season," said Griffin. "We didn't score, but we kept the ball out of their hands and killed a lot of time."

UMass, playing without nine injured starters, took the lead in the second quarter when Stan Kaczorowski booted a 36-yard field goal with 9:21 left.

The UMass drive started as the RI 35 after the Rams were forced to punt from their endzone after Griffin was hit for two penalties for protesting a call. A series of runs by George Barnwell (25 carries for a season-high 96 yards) put the ball on the URI 21. On third and five, Barnwell was stopped after gaining three. Kaczorowski, the starting left guard, came on and kicked his second field goal of the season for a 3-0 UM lead.

The UMass defense, with the exception of URI's opening drive, didn't allow a first down in the first half and contained Ehrhardt. The Rams drove to the UMass 37 during their first possession before linebacker Paul Manganaro intercepted Ehrhardt at the 17.

Men's soccer goes to 10-3 on season

Minutemen take own tourney,

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

For the first time in the three year history of the UMass Invitational Challenge Cup, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team won its own tournament this weekend.

The Minutemen made a goal by senior Nick Marciano at the 76:16 mark stand up for a 1-0 victory over the University of Hartford yesterday to secure the championship.

Marciano took a pass along the left side line from Tom Giordano. The forward headed toward the corner and fired the ball in the direction of the goal in an attempt to connect with a teammate, but Hartford defensive back Eric Wallert deflected the ball past keeper Rob Sondheim. "I tried to cross the ball in front of the net, going for the near post," said Marciano. "It hit off a defender and went in."

That was all the scoring in the game as neither team could put together any sustained offense. Freshman goalkeeper Sam Ginsburg recorded his third shutout of the season as Hartford could manage only a total of six shots on net.

The win was particularly sweet because Hartford beat the Minutemen last season in the championship game to take the title. The rematch was a physical affair.

"One of our weaknesses has been our play against physical teams, said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "We corrected that. That is the way Hartford plays, a real physical team."

On Saturday, the Minutemen jumped out in front of Northeastern University 23 seconds into the game and never looked back on its way to 5-0 victory.

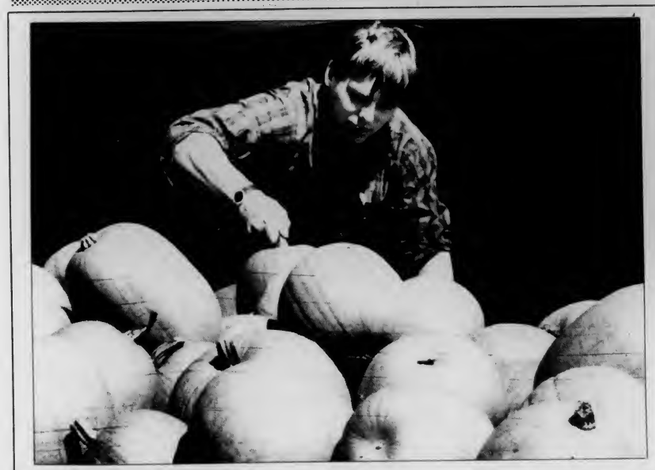
Field hockey beats Maine

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

The seventh ranked University of Massachusetts field hockey team, won its second straight game Sunday, smothering unranked Maine, 3-0, on Totman Field at NOPE.

All-American defenseman Megan Donnelly scored two goals while sophomore right wing Amy Robertson added a goal and an assist to pace the Umass attack.

"It was a one-sided game," Umass head coach Pam Hixon said. "We created lots of opportunities. Even though the ball didn't go in the net too often, we played well."



The Minutewomen dominated every phase of the game, outshooting the Black Bears, 25-3, including 11-0 in the second half and holding the advantage in corners, 18-1.

'Boldest' budget ever proposed

UMass asks for more money

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts administrators yesterday continued to press for their "boldest, soundest budget proposal ever" at the Board of Regents of Higher Education's budget hearings, here.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said the hearings were the beginning of a long process in which the University's budget proposals for fiscal year 1987 will be discussed and debated.

"I'm quite confident that we will have success with these proposals," Duffey said. "We've really done our homework and prepared for what's ahead," he said. Final decisions on the proposals are many months away.

The Board of Regents' vice chancellor for administration and finance, Joseph Finnegan, said, "This is the best budget document we have ever received from the Amherst campus. It's clear and complete.

The administration has proposed to the regents that $259.6 million be requested from the state Legislature for FY 1987. Of that amount, the Amherst campus would receive $18,307,150, but the regents have approved only $241 million of the overall proposal thus far. Duffey said he expects the regents to have final figures in two weeks.

The Board of Regents is the first administrative body, except for the University's Board of Trustees, to be presented with the budget requests. Ultimately, the Legislature must confront the proposal before July 1, 1986, when the 1987 fiscal year begins.

Executive Vice Chancellor and Provost Richard O'Brien addressed yesterday's hearing in Memorial Hall, describing sections of the budget and explaining the need for each line item.

O'Brien noted that the general education proposal for $1,263,400, which he said the regents cut "relatively severly," was important to the process of balancing the curriculum at the University. He offered the regents a counter-proposal, suggesting a "faculty bank" which could be used to exchange and share faculty throughout the commonwealth's system of public colleges and universities.

O'Brien said the proposal could be phased in over the next six to eight years, and would benefit all the public colleges.

Another section which O'Brien described as "especially close to my heart" is bio-technology. The money in this proposal, $770,200, would be used to hire new faculty and make major laboratory renovations in the Morrill Science Center.

The second largest section of the proposal, the amount needed for the University's library system, was for $2,750,800. Duffey noted that an additional $500,000, under the heading of "physical facilities," would be needed for renovatons to the library buildings for fiscal 1987 and 1988. Of the $2.75 million, $2,375,000 would be used for new books, subscriptions, and other materials.

UMass rated a 'best buy' in education

By MARJORIE NAYLOR
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts is one of 200 "best buys" in American higher education, according to Edward Fiske, education editor of the New York Times.

"The University of Massachusetts is a big school with a lot to offer if the student is savvy enough to tap its resourses," said Fiske in his recently published book, The Best Buys in College Education.

In a little under two pages, Fiske describes for the college consumer some of the ins and outs of study at UMass.

The B.D.I.C. program, the honor's program, the departments of English, art, engineering, sociology, microbiology, polymer science and hotel, restaurant and travel administration were exceptionally regarded, Fiske wrote.

Larry Benedict, associate vice-chancellor for student affairs responded favorably to the "best buy" standing. "In general, the enfry is an accurate portrayal of our university's diversity," said Benedict.

Beyond the realm of academia, the author points out that residential areas offer "just one dimension of the social life at the university." He also added that extracurricular activities were abundant, ranging from Passover

"My insurance policy leaves me personally responsible but it's really my insurance company that is responsible."
—Chancellor Joseph Duffey on his alcohol insurance policy"

Despite ban, alcohol still being served

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

Despite the prohibition of the sale of alcoholic beverages on campus, numerous conferees and University of Massachusetts officials have been enjoying cocktails at on-campus events.

All three campuses of the University were banned from selling alcohol at the beginning of the semester because alcohol liability insurance, which covers alcohol-related accidents, was not made available to the University this year.

Yesterday, a conference in the Campus Center was catered by Auxiliary Services and it featured a wine and cheese reception and a cocktail hour, both on the 10th floor of the Campus Center.

Auxiliary Service Director Ashoke Ganguli said, "The conferees paid for their own insurance to cover us. This is only a one-shot deal."

"However, if other people want to pay for their own insurance, we'll let them. It's a very expensive proposition, though," he said.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, confirming rumors that liquor was served at the Board of Trustees meeting in Memorial Hall last week, said that he has his own personal alcohol liability insurance policy. The policy allows the chancellor to serve alcohol at events which he hosts and attends.

After the trustees meeting, the chancellor hosted a tour of the new University Career Center. During the reception after the tour, wine was served.

"My insurance policy leaves me personally responsible, but it's really my insurance company that is responsible.

Student Government Association co-President Dan Burgess said, "I think these events are inconsistent. The alcohol policy should be uniformly enforced."

Yesterday's conference in the Campus Center, titled the International Geoscience and Remote Sensing Symposium, was held in the Campus Center Auditorium, but was moved to the 10th floor for the reception and cocktail hour.

Rotting wood caused collapse

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

An Amherst building inspector has determined that rotting wood caused the collapse of an outdoor deck Sept. 21 that injured seven people at a North Amherst home.

Inspection Services director Chester Penza said the rotten timber used to build the deck was clearly visible after he inspected the ruins of the deck which collapsed and sent 35 people plunging to the ground two weeks ago.

Penza said it collapsed after rotting floor joints allowed one of the supporting posts to separate from the deck of the house located at 180 Market Hill Rd.

"The deck was built over 20 years ago," Penza said. "At that time there was no building code in the town of Amherst." A permit was issued for the house more than 20 years ago to comply with the town's zoning ordinances.

Also, the deck was not built with pressure-treated wood which is now the recommended building material for construction, Penza said.

Amherst's inspection services only inspects new homes, additions or alterations on houses. "We don't have the staff to inspect existing houses," Penza said. "People who have decks should take a good look at them to make sure they're sound."

The fraternity and sorority houses on campus that are under the town's jurisdiction are inspected once a year as are public buildings such as theaters, churches and schools.

The condition of Amherst's 3,500 houses is good, Penza said, according to the minimal fitness standards for human habitation established by the state Board of Health.

"If you told me to condemn six houses tomorrow, it'd be tough," Penza said.

University of Massachusetts student Michael Butcher, 20, remains in satisfactory condition at St. Vincent's Hospital in Worcester. He broke a vertebra when he fell from the deck two weekends ago.

Street riots in London leave one police officer dead

LONDON (AP) — Police threatened yesterday to use tear gas and plastic bullets against street rioters, after some of the worst urban violence in Britain since 1981. One policeman was stabbed to death and 232 fellow officers were injured.

Twenty civilian also were hurt when more than 500 youths, some armed with shotguns, machetes and staves, battled police Sunday night and early Monday in the racially mixed north London district of Tottenham.

Police Commissioner Sir Kenneth Newman told a news conference the riot—the fourth major outbreak of urban violence in Britain in a month—was the first in mainland Britain in modern times in which guns were used and a police officer was killed.

Newman said he sent tactical squad officers armed with plastic bullets and tear gas to the scene at the height of the violence but the riot was contained without using them.

"But I wish to put all people of London on notice that I will not shrink from such a decision should I believe it a practical option for restoring peace and preventing crime and injury," he warned.

British police have never used plastic bullets in riots outside Northern Ireland, and tear has has not been used since the 1981 disturbance in the Toxteth district of Liverpool. Except for Northern Ireland, where all police patrols are armed, police in Britain traditionally carry only night sticks and go into riots protected by body-length plastic shields.

Home Secretary Douglas Hurd, the Cabinet official in charge of the police, said he fully supported the use of plastic bullets "if police find themselves being attacked by petrol bombs."

The rioters, blacks and whites, appeared to be aiming at police, whom they blamed for the death of Cynthia Jarrett, a 49-year-old woman who collapsed and died of an apparent heart attack during a police search of her home on Saturday night.

Mobs burn two blacks to death

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Three leading Sunday newspapers portrayed President P. W. Botha as failing in a campaign to convince the country that he is sincere about racial reform, and police said black mobs burned two blacks to death.

The English-language Sunday Star said that Botha suffered from "poor timing and even poorer marketing" in recent speeches to his governing National Party while parts the country remained under a state of emergency and blacks continued to die.

Police headquarters in Pretoria said one black was burned to death Saturday in a heap of flaming tires in Langa township, near Uitenhage in eastern Cape Province.

In Soweto, near Johannesburg, witnesses said mourners at a funeral vigil for a riot victim became aroused Saturday by anti-apartheid speeches and burned a black police officer to death in his home.

Palestinians hijack Italian ship, 400 people on board

PORT SAID, Egypt (AP) — Palestinians hijacked an Italian cruise ship with more than 400 people aboard off the Egyptian coast yesterday, demanded the release of prisoners held in Israel and threatened to blow up the ship if attacked, port officials reported.

They said the ship had been bound from the Egyptian coastal city of Alexandria to Port Said, entrance to the Suez Canal, and headed out into the Mediterranean Sea after the hijacking, its destination unknown.

The threat to blow up the cruise ship Achille Lauro came from the hijackers' leader, identified only by the name of Omar, the Egyptian officials said.

Leading the list of prisoners demanded in exchange for the ship was a Palestinian named Samir Konaiterry, they said.

It was not known who the hijackers took control of the ship, which they seized about 30 miles from Port Said, where it was scheduled to dock at 9 p.m. 4 p.m. EDT.

An SOS was sent when the hijackers made their move, and was picked up by an amateur radio operator in Sweden, said ANSA, an Italian news agency.

ANSA and other Italian agencies quoted the Foreign Ministry in Rome as saying 454 people were aboard the 23,629-ton liner, but Egyptian officials put the number at 500.

Palestinian sources in Nicosia, Cyprus, said Giulio Andreotti, the Italian foreign minister, had appealed to Yasser Arafat, to ensure the safety of the passengers and crews.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the Palestine Liberation Organization chairman was consulting aides at PLO headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia.

Prime Minister Bettino Craxi, Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini and Andreotti also were in constant touch with Egyptian authorities, the Italian news agencies said.

Sexual violence prevention group formed

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is lacking both in services for men who are potential perpetrators of sexual violence and programs which effectively educate those who are ignorant to issues of sexual violence according to members of the Sexual Violence Prevention Network.

The network, made up of representatives from various campus offices including the Office of Human Relations, Department of Public Safety, Dean of Students Office, University Health Services, and the Everywoman's Center, held their first meeting yesterday with the primary goal of indentifying campus needs and highlighting resources already available.

"I see that there is a missing link on this campus and that is programming for males who are perpetrating the violence," said Pat Barrows, coordinator of the Counselor Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center.

Barrows said the campus administration should "take a lesson from the state of Massachusetts" in regards to the commonwealth's drunk driving law enforcement.

"When the state decided they wouldn't stand for it (drunk driving) anymore they didn't make more beds for victims or teach people how to drive so that they would stay out of the way," Barrows said.

Barrows explained, "We can't continue to put the oweness on the victims for them to come out abd tell us about it. It (sexual violence) is a reality."

Robert Bureau, coordinator of Men Against Violence Against Women (MAVAW) cited a total lack of funding for this organization which he said makes it difficult for him to do outreach and recruitment. At this point, Bureau said he is the groups only member.

Echoing the need for "some kind of referral program for men," Physical Plant Storekeeper, Jonathan Tuttle said he has encountered situations where men he works with have had problems relating to women, and though they want to come to grips with this fact, they have nowhere to go.

University Ombudsman, Howard Gadlin, whose office mediates campus disputes said, "We need to train people who can work with men who do the harrassing. They are very hard to develop skills. We need to send our people somewhere where it's being right or develop (the system) here."

Gadlin added, "All we can get now is some kind of acknowledgement of wrongdoing."

Susan Allen, a program coordinator for the Residential Education Program added that programs that are around, "don't touch the people who need it the most." She said she "would like to see a 3-credit course required for all undergraduates" which would address issues such as acquaintance rape, and sexual harrassment.

With such a course, she said, "Women could understand when they were being sexually violated and men would know when they were perpetrating such violence. Right now we don't even have that baseline," Allen added.

Gadlin and Coordinator of the Working Woman's Program at The Everywoman's Center, Myra Hindus stressed that within the revision of the university's sexual harassment policy, it will be suggested that there be a campus-wide central office to refer people to what they said can be the sometimes confusing services available in regards to sexual violence.

Re-elections for seats in SGA senate today

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The commuter area senate and governing board seats, which were nullified in last week's election, will be decided in today's re-election from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Student Union Building entrance of the Hatch.

Last week's commuter election was invalidated by the Undergraduate Student Senate because of SGA election rules that were allegedly broken. Campaign leaflets were seen being handed out within 50 feet of ballot boxes, which is in violation of election rules.

Twenty-eight senate seats and 13 governing board positions are up for contention at today's election. 25 candidates are running for the 28 senate seats, with about a dozen write-in candidates, said John Crowley, governmental affairs committee chairman. In addition, Crowley said, 17 people are running for the 13 positions on the area's governing board, which is the most competiton in years.

"I just want to get it done," rowley said of the repeated election. "I'll be there all day and I'll be counting them (results)." Many of the candidates, Crowley said, have been handing out campaign fliers and the competition and involvement have been high. "I'm kind of glad a lot of people are running for the governing board," he said. "More involvement usually means more (campus) events."

With less competition, Crowley said, "There are fewer people and there are less hands" to get things accomplished. For this reason Crowley said he anticipates a greater showing at the ballot boxes today.

At last week's election, a shortage of polling workers caused a candidate to staff the polling area in which he was running, which Crowley said will not occur again because he has enough help.

Of a potential problem occuring in today's election, Crowley said "I sincerely hope not for my case. Thank God it's over," he added.

UMass student assaulted

An 18-year-old woman student was allegedly assaulted by a 23-year-old man in Washington Tower Saturday night, University of Massachusetts police said.

The woman was taken to University Health Services where she was treated for cuts and bruises and released, police said. Police issued a trespass notice to the man who was not a student.

In other police reports:

A 20-year-old man was injured when the car he was riding struck a light pole on University Drive early Sunday morning, police said.

The driver of the car, a 20-year-old man from New York, was arrested and charged with leaving the scene of a personal injury accident and driving under the influence of alcohol.

workshops to the parachuting club.

"UMass students tend to be rather motivated and self-possessed people," said Fiske.

The Five-College program is highly emphasized by Fiske as offering UMass students "an incredible deal since through the five-college interchange program one has access to courses, libraries and dining halls at all five campuses."

According to Benidict, Fiske places too heavy an emphasis on the five-college "deal." Benidict pointed out that "more students from the neighboring campuses come here to UMass than UMass students go there."

Benidict, though pleased with the "best buy" standing, was a "little disappointed that schools like the University of Rhode Island and the University of Maine are listed because we have better quality programs and a better, more diverse student body than those schools."

Overall, Benedict agrees that UMass is a good buy for the money. Says Benedict, "We aren't cheap, but we aren't as expensive as most schools with which we compete."

Former member of United Nations to speak

Second speaker in series

By CARYN BOWERS
Collegian Correspondent

The former Assistant Director-General of the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organiation (UNESCO), Richard Hoggart, will be visiting the University of Massachusetts to give a lecture called "Between Two Worlds: Public and Private Discourses."

The lecture will be given at 8 p.m. tomorrow in room 120 of the School of Management.

Hoggart is the second guest speaker in a four-part series titled "Boundaries of Discourse." The series is sponsored by the Coordinating Dean for the College of Arts and Sciences, and the Institute for Advanced Studey in the Humanities.

The basic issues of the series are evaluations of current intellectual development in the various disciplines of the sciences and humanities.

Hoggart said his lecture would focus on the problems and challenges of shuttling between the academic and the public life. That tells you something about the boundaries of discourse, about the state of the language, about the state of thought and the enclosedness of much academic careers.

"My excursions into the big world reached a peak when I became an assistant director-general at the UN, but I never ceased feeling that my academic background was relevant," he said.

Hoggart is the author of "Uses of Literacy," a book about popular culture, lifestyles, reading materials, working class people, and how they changed during the post-war period.

Claire Hopley, assistant to the coordinating dean of the college of arts and sciences said, "the objective of the series is to get very distinguished people to discuss what worth there is in talking about knowledge and what culture does for our society."

The remaining two lectures in the series include "Speaking of Heterogenity" by Catherine Stimpson, a professor of English at Rutgers College and director of the Institute of Research on Women, and "Crisis in the Media" by Tom Wicher, a political columnist for the New York Times.

The first lecture was given by William Julius Wilson, a sociologist at the University of Chicago, with an honorary doctorate from UMass. Wilson spoke about his research on social conditions concerning welfare dependency.

Bostonian art is fun

Boston, WOW!
Student Union Art Gallery
Through Oct. 18

By ROB SKELTON
Collegian Staff

Boston Wow is a collaborative show by five Boston and New York artists which, while somewhat out of the ordinary, does not immediately merit a "wow!"

When the viewer realizes, however, the energies which went into producing these works, (many and varied) and the underlying irreverency which permeates the show, the event takes on greater artistic relevency and even makes for a good time.

Three of the five displays involve complex collage; it is more an act of modelling layers of materials built up to three-dimensional images of puppet-like figures, cartoon vacation scenes, and animated montages familiar to most children.

The two more "traditional" artists displayed, Lou Schellenberg and Libby Ramage, lent an air of normalcy to the show.

Schellenberg showed a series of dark futuristic paintings made soft with purple and pink pastels, colors which an ultraviolet light might have made explode had there been one there. They had an eerie glow but were pleasant to look at.

Libby Ramage works with greeting cards, or what might be or might have once been greeting cards. They are painted, complemented by illustrations, and mounted in frames.

And then there was the third artist in the collage theme, but this was quite different—admirable complex, multi-dimensional, original, and, even . . . cute.

Flex Eller—even the name arouses interest—created—and it must have been painstaking—the most likeable art from this exibition. In the gaudy of a fifties postcard from a tacky spot like the eighties Hampton Beach the artist uses multilayered tin cuttings and creates the image of groups of happy people mustering in a vacation spot.

At first it's a jumble of painted paper cut-outs; next thing one realizes this stuff is not delicate, it could break windows. And despite its cute colors and yay-holiday appearance, it is strong work because it took so much work, and came out right.

This is not a bad show. It made me wonder, "What is art?" People should go and have a look at what the artists did.

Revealing radical cause

Ron Berutti

A startling revelation has just been transmitted to me. Apparently, there is a mask being worn by many students on campus. In the daytime, during the week, these students remove their masks, put it in their knapsacks, and hide it under a jumble of books, papers, and writing implements. After classes and on weekends, however, many of us are seeing faces that we don't see in class. I learned all of this when talking to my news source, Milton Fullaschitz.

"It's like this," he told me, " first, one of these people will turn on the Grateful Dead. The music brings these people back to a happier time."

"You mean the 1960s?"

"Yes, the 60s. Well, once the music starts playing, the students puts on a tie-dye shirt, torn blue jeans with bandana patches on them, and a frisbee helmet on their head. When all of that has been done, they then kick off their shoes, and pull the mask out of its hiding place."

"What does this mask look like, Fullaschitz?"

"It is the mask of the radical! It can be seen all over campuses across the country. They are people holding up signs that say 'Peace Now,' or 'Make Love, Not Bombs.' They will be listening to the Dead, Arlo Guthrie, or Jefferson Airplane. They are the ones wearing this mask."

"Why do they wear this mask?"

"That's not as easy to answer, but I infiltrated the radical information center and found out why these people are radical.

"Apparently, radicals are not being radical for the interests of others, as they would like you to believe. They are our for their own interests. They are protesting behind this mask for money. The reason that they protest for peace is because they want the federal government to spend money on welfare programs. They are not really concerned with all welfare, but just certain programs."

"Which programs?"

"First of all, they want more government loans to students. This keeps them in school and protesting. This is how these masked creatures get publicity. Secondly, they want a national health care plan, very much like the one that Ted Kennedy proposed. Their reasoning is that they will be able to get patched up for free, when the police beat them up with billy clubs."

"What happens when they get out of school?"

"That is what they are mainly protesting for. They want unemployment and general welfare insurance for all those out of work, because they realize that when they get out of school, nobody will give them a job. Who wants to hire someone who only knows how to scream and shout? Freak shows are a thing of the past. So, you see, all these radicals know they will be poor."

"Won't they have learned anything else from their classes to enable them to get a job?"

"No, because these are the same people who go to political science classes and do nothing but yell at the professor insisting that Walter Mondale really won the election of 1984."

Ron Berutti is a UMass student.

On women and the Bible

Rusty Denton

Recent UMass doctoral graduate Valerie Yound has found that professional women feel like frauds unless they know almost 100 percent of their jobs, whereas men are comfortable if they know just 30 or 40 percent. Young labels these feelings among women the imposter syndrome, and has held workshops to deal with them. I find her research very interesting.

For one thing, it suggests women might have a stronger drive for competence than men do. For another, Young's work is academic evidence supporting the embattled biblical position that women are "weaker vessels," more vulnerable than men psychologically. Young recommends awareness and support groups as a remedy. I think it's instructive to examine the biblical prescription for "weaker vessels."

The prescription is not, as some local feminists contend, to keep women from positions of influence. In ancient Israel, a succession of judges guided the nation before it had any kings. The judge was a combination of prime minister and supreme arbitrator of the nation. A woman named Deborah (who was married, by the way) distinguished herself as a judge in the Bible, and is still celebrated for her prophetic and poetic gifts. Obviously, the woman had authority.

Deborah is just one example of biblical women engaged in business outside the home. The book of Proverbs describes the "excellent wife." Her activities included textile production, buying real estate with money she earned, raising crops, a brisk wholesale business in garments, feeding, clothing, and educating her household. She makes a name for herself and her husband. I have the great fortune to be married to such a woman.

If a woman is encouraged to do all these things, it is clear that the Bible does not mean "inferior" when it says "weaker." Why, then, does it prohibit women from teaching or ruling men in the congregation, and insist on wives submitting to their husbands? It is certainly not because men have nothing to learn from them, or that men are naturally wiser or holier—they're not. According to the Bible, men have certain exclusive privileges in the home and the worship place because they are supposed to be protecting the natural vulnerabilities of women and children. I will now pause for 10 seconds so feminists can snort, stomp, and grind their teeth before they finish this column.

The Bible states that a wife is the glory of her husband, and he is to protect and honor her the same way he would protect the weaker parts of his own body. He is supposed to be her support group when she is assailed by self-doubts. He is supposed to be her security so that even if a venture fails, they will be provided for. He is supposed to recognize her unique abilities and different emotional needs. A few of those needs can only be met by him, a few only in having children. In other words, he is to be strong for her, and yet tenderly listen and be available.

Scripture states that a man is held accountable for the spiritual condition of his family, and that God does not heed the prayers of a man who dishonors his wife. Therefore, leadership in the church is limited in the Bible to men—specifically to only a few men, each of whom must have a happy and well-adjusted family. A family demonstrates whether a man's commitment is to building others up, or to enjoying life at their expense.

There are those who will never believe these arguments, who will go to their graves believing that the Bible was written to preserve partriarchal power. But others will discover that the Bible is a provision for a life-long, live-in support group for women.

Pouncey's joke inappropriate

On behalf of the 25,000 students at the University of Massachusetts, I would like to voice my criticism of a statement made by Peter Pouncey, president of Amherst College, at President Dunn's inauguaration ceremony at Smith College. Before an audience of 2,000 individuals, comprised of Smith students alumnae, visiting college heads from around the country, corporate leaders, and prominent individuals of the Pioneer Valley, Pouncey jokingly "referred to the Five-College community as 'the big elephant and the four little beauties,' in reference to UMass and the remaining small private colleges."

If Mr. Pouncey's statement was in fact meant as a joke, which apparently it was, it was done so in very bad taste and with total disregard for academic professionalism given the position he holds. Over the past 20 years, this university has worked extremely hard to promote a positive image both on a state and national level. Today, it prides itself in the recognition it justifiably receives as one of the top ranking state universities in the country. Surely Mr. Pouncey could have thought of a more suitable way of describing the University to his audience than an analogy to an elephant.

As for the snobbish belief that only Hampshire, Smith, Mt. Holyoke and Amherst are the beauties of the Five-College community, I suggest Mr. Pouncey think again. The University of Massachusetts is the biggest "beauty" of the Pioneer Valley, as well as the state for that matter, offering the most of everything to everybody. Mr. Pouncey, this University, its faculty, and its student body take pride of this fact and welcome your apology.

And another sad parking story

Once again, upon the whimsical decision of a top brass official, the little people must pay the consequences. I guess I really shouldn't complain, but for four years not I've been ticked off, bothered and frustrated by a system that keeps proving to everyone it does not work. I've had this nightmare before, but I guess it is fitting that it had to happen my last semester at school.

Did you ever come home late from studying, tired of reading, so lost in all your studies so that all you want to do is go to sleep? You drive your car into the parking lot in front of where you live, glad to use the lazy mobile permit you spent so much money on, only to find no spots, less the handicapped ones. But over there, to your left, since some cars have parked so close, what remains is half a spot, but enough to park your little car in.

Well, what I found when I pulled into my lot was a huge sign askewed to the left of the spot that says, RESERVED FOR . . ., well, for some director of a sort. I looked closely at the spot and finally concluded that there should be no problem for anyone to park in this spot in the morning.

The phone rang at 8:30 a.m. and a friend from downstairs told me that my car was leaving the lot, without a driver! I jumped out of bed just in time to open the shade and wave goodbye to the tow truck. I guess the big shot didn't have enough room to park, or did he/she? They certainly found room in one of the other three open spots that were available that morning, but I guess none looked as inviting as 'their' spot. I wonder about people like this, maybe they sit in 'their' office and count all that is 'theirs.' Perhaps they are insecure and need their own spot, and of course a sign to tell them where it is or to warn others of the power such a person has. Thanks B. Brass, I really could use the aggravation. Heck, the semester is still young!

Groups interacting: a response

In reference to the Collegian article "Black students have problems with Africans," on Oct. 1, I would like to say that the purpose of black American students and black African students getting together on campus to improve relations should be clarified.

Not only do black American students share a common interest (i.e. education) but also the majority of black American students are descending of Africa. I don't think that African students and black American students have any problem socializing with one another, but they may have a problem in organizing with one another for a common cause.

We should consider that black Americans students have been ripped away from their original homeland and have adapted to the culture of Europeans, therefore, there are many differences between Africans and Afro-American students. Interaction between our fellow students should take place to enhance, edit, and reinforce that we are Africans of Diaspora, and, in turn, consider the many benefits that Africans can gain from black American students. I think this relationship is quite important when we consider the current conditions of blacks in the U.S. and the state of emergency in African countries, especially South Africa.

Nothing but the truth

ELVIS AND ME
By Priscilla Beaulieau Presley
G.P. Putnam's Sons
320 pgs, $16.95

By Brian Stacey
Collegian Correspondent

Four times sent Priscilla's manuscript back. They wanted more sordid details. Reluctantly and minimally, Mrs. Presley complied. In her epilogue the star of television's Dallas states, "Some will find that I have left out many important dates, specific facts, and countless stories." The book can be read more quickly than an Elvis movie can be watched. Before page one Mrs. Presley quotes Elvis, "Don't criticize what you don't understand, son, you never walked in that man's shoes."

Heavily ghostwritten, we cannot fathom Priscilla herself ending a chapter with, "I looked over at the bottle of pills near the bed and realized I still had competition."

Three-quarters of the book details the seven-year courtship of fourteen-year-old Priscilla. Unarguably, Elvis Presley was among the world'd most celebrated men and he could and did have any woman desired. All that's new is Priscilla's pleading for the consummation of her love and Elvis' fulfilled vow for a virgin wife. Also developed is the Oedipal-like relationship between Elvis and his mother; the subject of another book.

The real story here is Priscilla's triumph; she's a survivor from an addictive relationship. This is her psychoanalysis. Best of friends at the time of Elvis's death, remarriage was a possibility. She still loves Elvis and states unequivocally that Elvis remains the greatest influence of her life.

Presumable Priscilla would have us believe that she adopted all the magical qualities from "this man who contributed so much to our culture through art and music" and discarded all his faults. We have no reason to doubt this. Apart from the astonishing beauty that Elvis found so endearing, Priscillas vulnerability is gone.

On September 24,1985, Curtis and Lisa Sliwa, National Directars of the Guardian Angels spake ta a crawd of appraximately 500 people in the Campus Center Auditarium. The Sliwas explained why the Guardian Angels were created and the many activities the Angels have participated in. They stated the reasans why they feel crime is sa widespread in the United States taday, and why police, politicians, and the like da not support groups like the Guardian Angels. Lisa Sliwa feels part of the problem is that people want ta see how much they can get away with. "Every ane in America daes it whether it's an inner city pimp or a vice president of E.F. Huttan." She said, "It's easy ta point at poor inner city people but we all da it. Whether it's cheating on our incame taxes or ripping someone off." Ms. Sliwa , calling this attitude a "criminal mentality", feels this is one averwhelming reasan there is such a high crime rate in America today. Citing statistics, she stated "seventy-five percent af all crimes cammited in the United States are commited by people under the age af 21." Anather reasan for the high crime rate among yauth that she painted aut was a lack of positive role madels far yaung Americans today. Ms. Sliwa pointed out that mast af the role madels young people have today are either fram the sports or entertainment world. Such role models tend to be pretabricated images the public is duped into believing. Among these were thase of Brooke Shields, Madanna, and Sean Penn. Ms. Sliwa mentioned the lack of positive role models for Black and Hispanic males. In using Prince as an example she said, "try and get a jab with purple eyeliner, gold chains, make-up, and high heels an.

People, she feels, want ta da something positive with their lives and make an impact without changing their daily lives. That is where she says the Guardian Angels come in. With aver 5,000 members in the U.S., Canada, and Mexico, volunteering between eight to ten hours impact, and still live their daily lives. Ms. Sliwa then relinquished the podium ta her husband, the founder af the Guardian Angels, Curtis Sliwa.

Curtis Sliwa told the audience, that when the Guardian Angels were farmed in February 1979, he was a manager far a McDanalds in the Sauth Branx. "Drugs ran rampant throughout the neighbarhood." There was a train nicknamed "the muggers express" and peaple came off of that train mugged, stabbed and rabbed every day". Sliwa claims that the police and local paliticians did nathing. Mayar Kach did nathing. Sliwa and thirteen friends got together ta farm a graup ta patral the streets and the subways in the hopes af making them safer. They called this graup the Guardian Angels. Fram 1979-1981 the Angels grew but they did not achieve natianal praminence until 1981.

In 1981 the Guardian Angels were asked to came ta Atlanta, Geargia at the invitatian af Black churches which had heard about the Angels through New York sources. This braught the Angels nationwide publicity, and helped the graup expand ta its present size of farty-seven cities and 5,000 members.

The Angels have expanded to almast every major city in the U.S. Mr. Sliwa said that though he has been in Birmingham, Alabama; Selma, Alabama; Memphis, Tennessee; Jackson, Mississippi; and numerous other cities throughout the Sauth Baston is the worst city he has seen as far as racial relations. He went as far as ta say, "Baston is the most racially polarized city I've ever been in".

The Sliwas stated the Angels are completely non-profit. They rely completely an donations. Their headquarters was donated by the Amsterdam News a Black newspaper. One activity the Angels are presently involved in is praviding supplies such as food, and clathing to the earthquake victims in Mexica. The Sliwas hope the Angels will be able ta continue to grow and increase their capacity to help aut in emergencies.

Hispanics lead in SAT scores

by Chris Allen
Nummo Staff

Hispanic students led the strangest gain in average Schalastic Aptitude Test scares far more than twa decades this year, a surge hailed by some educators as evidence that reform is taking hald in public schools. College Board president George H. Hanford said at a news conference recently that nationwide average scores rase five paintson the verbal partion af the test, to 431, and faur points in math ta 475.

The combined gain of nine points kon the twa part exam, taken annually by abaut a millian college bound high school students, boasted the average math-verbal scare to 906. It was the biggest increase since 1963, when scares also gained nine paints before sliding steadily far the next twa decades.

The SAT is scared on a scale af 200 ta 800, with a combined math-verbal scare af 1600 being perfect. It is an entrance requirement at virtually all the natian's selective calleges and universities.

Scores in the ACT, a rival test administered by the American College Testing Program in Iawa City, Iawa, and taken by abaut a million students mastly in the West and Midwest, also rase in 1985 but anly slightly.

Hanford said that this year's SAT upsurge was a praduct af steps taken by schaals in the 1970s ta stress basic skills, as well as the more recent education refarms af the 1980s.

In Washington, Educatian Secretary William J. Bennett hailed the SAT gains with a "Bravo!" but cautioned against letting up in the push for educatianal excellence. He called this year's results "further evidence that American secondary educatian is an the mend."

Hanford also warned against camplacency. "Despite the gains af the past few years, we are still a cambined total af 74 paints behind the scares af 1963, the last high paint in this SAT saga. We still have a long way ta ga."

He added that it might not even be reasanable ta expect average scares ta ever equal 1963 levels again - 502 math and 478 verbal. Mare students take the test naw, he said, including many more minarity students who traditianally have traublewith standardized exams.

President Reagan last year set a goal af trying ta wipe aut half the 22-year SAT scare decline by 1990. Ta achieve that would require average combined math-verbal gains af seven points annually.

Mexican-American and Puerta Rican students registered the best gains af any ethnic graup. Puerta ricans' verbal scores rase 10 paints ta a 368 average, and their math scares were up six paints ta 428. Mexican-Americans gained six paints on both math and verbal scares, averaging 426 and 382 respectively.

Hanford said he had na explanation far the strang shawing by thase twa groups, but said minarity graups in general seemed to be performing better on the SAT in recent years. Black students' scares impraved faur points on the verbal, and three paints on the math. White students' scoresrose by four paints an bath math, up to 492, and verbal, 449.

Hanford said it was disturbing that the percentage af blacks taking the test went dawn, indicating that fewer blacks were considering going to college.

In 1985, he said, 8.9 percent af the test-takers were Black,campared to 9.1 percent in 1984. That meant 2,000 fewer Blacks taak the SAT.

The College Baard also reported a continued rise in the percentage af high scarers, thase wha scare over 600 an either part of the SAT. Nearly 77,000 students did so an the verbal half af the SAT and 167,000 an the math sectian.

Bus hike may affect UMass community

by Chris Allen
Nummo Staff

Peter A. Picknelly Jr., senior vice president af the bus firm, said recently that the hike would represent the first fare increase since 1982. Increased operating costs, including rise in the costs of insurance, maintenance and fuel are the reasan the campany seeks a price hike.

The Pioneer Valley Transit Authority will hald two public hearings on the issue taday. The first will be held at 5 p.m. in Room 218 of Springfield City Hall. The second will be held at 7:30 p.m in the Narthampton Council an Aging Office, located at 240 Main St. in Narthampton.

Peter Pan Bus Lines Inc. has praposed increasing fares by about 18 percent on routes run in conjunction with the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority, according to a bus campany official.

By law, fare changes within the transit district must be approved by the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority Advisory Board.

Although Peter Pan has not increased its fares within the transit district,it did,in 1984,raise fares on other routes it aperates in Massachusetts.

The routes expected to be affected by the hike are Springfield-Amherst,with the rates expected to go from $2.50 to $3, the Springfield -Eastfield Mall, from 90 cents to $1, and from $1.75 to $2 far the Springfield-Westfield route. The Springfield-Eastfied Mall rates will apply on Sundays and holidays only.

Picknely said that a majar reason for the proposed hike was that the Company's insurance rate have more than daubled since 1982. "I cant give you a reasan as to why, because I don't work for a insurance company," he replied when asked why rates have increased; adding that "it's a common problem in business today."

The hike will affect a large population of the UMass community as aver twenty percent of the student population use this means af transpartation.

"But you don't look like a freshman." How often have we heard - nay, even uttered-this nonsensical phrase?

What is a freshman supposed to look like anyway? Is this the creature who talks loud, always walks with a herd of its fellow beings, always walks with a herd of its fellow beings, and wears a permanent look of confusion and wonder at the complexity of college life on its face?

Is it that breed of college student that checks its mail everyday, is on time for every class, and arises early in the day to perform rituals little-known to college kind, such as ironing its clothes and curling its hair?

I suppose the sophomore sophisticate (who, by the way, probably has 30 hours and 10 minutes of credits and probably had as much trouble during registratian as the low life) thinks he's doing the freshman a favor by telling him he looks older.

Why is it that no one ever says, "Funny, you don't look like you're a sophamore," or "Really! I would never have guessed that you were a sixth-year senior."

Is there some sore of physiological change that accompanies the accumulation of credit hours? If you fail or drop classes, do you start to look younger? Of course not.

We all know tht freshmen don't really look any different from upper-classmen. Some of them do have distinguishing characteristics, though freshmen are individuals too.

Some freshmen, on campus for the first time are no more lost than graduate students who are also here for the first time. Other freshmen, who have visited the campus numerous times while they were in high school, exude the same confidence that seniors do.

Last year the lack of freshmen participation seemed to be a major concern of Student Government leaders. They wanted freshmen to get involved with extracurricular activities.

From what I have seen, though, freshmen seem to be sufficiently involved in extra-curricular activities. The way I see it is, if a student is the type who is willing to get involved, he will begin as soon as he hits campus. And if a student doesn't plan to get involved in anyway -being a junior isn't going to stop him from sitting inside his room all day long.

Nummo News held a drop-in recently for interested students. Of the 25 or more who came, over 90 percent were freshmen. This was not a rare occurance, I guarantee you! Each year, organizations depend on freshmen to boost their enrollment.

If you think about it, life at college would be pretty dull without freshmen. Who would the guys in ..... gawk at? Certainly not the same old "merchandise" from last year.

Who would organizations try to recruit? And what would conversation be like without freshmen to talk about? Most importantly, who else could we blame every time things go wrong, and who else would volunteer to be the butt of all the college jokes? Certainly not the sophomores.

If it weren't for freshmen, sophomores couldn't walk around campus giving free advice on college, truth, and the meaning of life.

South Africa; their future?

by Hollis Cotton
Nummo Staff

Although the media has focused on South Africa for at least a few months now, it is most certainly not a new story. The story is one of years of oppression, which has taken its toll upon generations of peaple of color in South Africa and neighboring countries. Along with the years of oppression, racism and destruction, have come years of passionate struggle for freedom in the country.

The fact that the media has focused upon this issue is a testimony to the years of struggle which has involved people of all ages and all walks of life throughout the country. However, we must recognize that the media has been tardy in giving attentian to an issue which the Afro-American community has focused upon for years.

One person whose contribution to the struggle has been recognized is Nelson Mandela, now being held in Robben Island Prison. Mr. Mandela has been held by the South African authorities since 1962. He has been recognized leader of the country since 1916. Along with Mr. Mandela, there are other prominent figures such as Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, leader of the six million Zulu people in the nation.

In addition to Mandela and Buthelezi, Rev. Allen Boesak, along with Bishap Desmond Tutu and Winnie Mandela make up the core of leadership which is recognized by the Western Media. Of course, without the masses of people supporting major and revolutionary change in the nation, the leaders would be ineffective.

The United Democratic Front, headed by Rev. Allen Boesak, has a membership now of 600 groups. This umbrella organization was formed in 1983. Many of the UDF leaders, including Boesak, have been jailed and are waiting for their trials. Others have been killed. The African National Congress, led recently by Oliver Tambo and Nelson Mandela, is a "banned" organization, even though it comes to mind as the most prominent group. Membership in the ANC therefore is forbidden. The group cannot publicly hold meetings or organize in any fashion without violating the law. Also, South African journalists cannot publicize any information about the ANC.

Winnie Mandela, wife of Nelson Mandela, has been banned from attending public meetings under South African law; under these laws, she cannot speak to more than two people at a particular time. Hundreds of others have suffered a similar fate under banning laws.

In addition to these repressive banning laws, South Africa has declared a "state of emergency" which prohibits political resistance to the regime. This is most clearly evident in the law, which forbids people from gathering at public rallies, and forces them to use funerals of those killed in the rebellions for political expression.

The police have not been selective in the violence they have imposed upon the black people of South Africa. Their victims have been men, women and children alike. Even babies have died. One of the most graphic images of violence must be the picture of a whip coming down on a South African child's back. The children have, at the risk of their own lives, taken up leadership roles in the struggle for justice. They, by their spirit alone, give new energy to an ageless struggle. They have reignited a torch which was lit by earlier generations. They also have a new strategy, they do not hesitate to express anger and frustration which the older generation previously left pent up inside of themselves. The demands of the youth are not much different than the demands of the country as a whole. They include better education, no passbooks, and an end to apartheid with no compromise.

In 1964, during his last statement before being carted off to jail, Nelson Mandela told the court about "an ideal for which I am prepared to die." Like Mandela, the children of South Africa are ready to give the supreme sacrifice for that ideal.

Where Were You?

by Chris Williams
Nummo Correspondent

Disgusting! This is the most appropriate word to describe the lack of Black students at the Anti-Apartheid rally and demonstration on September 20th.

The demostration began at Amherst common. From this location a group of approximately 150 people, mostly white students, marched to the University. Once the procession arrived at the University some Black students managed to latch onto the march for a brief moment. Most of the Black participants were from Smith College. They, along with faculty members, administrators, and students should be congratulated for sacrificing their time and energy. At the close of the demonstration many individuals asked: "Where were the Black students and their organizations?" No clear or concrete answer was given, except for a collection of excuses. I shall begin with these.

"We didn't know about it," they all cried. This sounds like a valid argument, but let's analize it. How is it possible for Black students to be informed about a poorly advertised party or to hear about the cancellation of a party? The answer is simple the word gets around. Now parties are fine; infact they are wonderful for socializing and are an excellent catharsis, but they do have their place. Unfortunately, they are placed high on most of our lists. Infact they may be too high, which is too high for our own detriment. A balance needs to be implemented by everyone to set goals and priorities, which are social, intellectual, academic, physical, and spritual. Balance is a fundamental concept in African philosophy, and we should learn from it.

Even if one was not informed about the Anti-Apartheid Demonstration verbally, it was announced in The Collegian. But I guess that you don't read The Collegian? All students read The Collegian, inspite of its questionable articles. One of the reasons why people attend college is that they can get better job offers than those with high school diplomas. Now if you don't read your campus newspaper, the local or national newspapers then you will not be informed about the job market.

The next excuse is, "We all had classes." Now, I do not advocate that Blacks should skip their classes because we are all here to attend classes. However, it is hard to believe that 99.5% of the Black students at UMASS had classes from 10:30 a.m. until 2:00 p.m., with no break. That is just impossible. This becomes more evident when one recalls that Friday classes are also given on Mondays and Wednesdays, and that particular Friday was a very hot day. Even if a quater of the Black student population showed up it would have been fine, but there is no excuse whatsoever for a mere handful of Black students showing up. I'm pretty sure if Tina Turner, who has performed in South Africa, made a special appearance most of us would have managed to get there.

Many have asked: "why are the Black students so apathetic?" The answer is complex, but not unanswerable. A close study of the Black student population would reveal that some of us have an identity problem. More and more of us are trying to assimilate into the dominant white culture. Some may have some success at this, but they will never assimilate fully; their brown skin becomes their handicap to achieve complete assimialtion.

Finally how do we overcome this? First, it is important that we understand who we are; where we are' how we came here; and where are we going. We should develop our minds and ask questions; constructive questions. Talk to students, faculty and administrators in order to understand the dynamics of the University and the world. All of this is part of education too. And most importantly we should learn from our history, so that we won't repeat the mistakes of the past.

SGA Business

with David Moore

On October 3, 1985, there was a Student Government Association (SGA) Judical Hearing. At this meeting the speaker of the Undergraduate Senate, John Ruddock, was served with a 'Writ of Mandemus.' A Writ of Mandemus is a mandate that requires one to take action.

The writ was filed through the SGA Attorney General, Scott McCracken, from the Northeast Area Government president, Michael Cerrato. Michael filed this writ because he felt the speaker was not taking appropriate action on a motion that was passed by the student senate on April 10, 1985. That motion was to place a United States and a Commonwealth of Massachusetts flag on the poduim from which the Speaker speakes starting on April 17, 1985.

Senator Cerrato's complaint was that this flag was not present as the senate had agreed upon and he stated that he had approached Speaker Ruddock on two occasions to place the flag on the podium and it was not done. Throughout the entire meeting the two major objectives of the Judicial hearing were: 1. To determine who is responsible for the placing of flags and 2. To determine who will pay for it once the flags are obtained.

At the end of the three hour meeting Senator Cerrato and Speaker Ruddock made the following closing statements. Senator Cerrato claimed "This is nothing personal against you J.R." and later said "John Ruddock should be bound by the rules." John Ruddock replied "This is only putting icing on something that is much deeper."

The final decision made after deliberation was to have two flags plalced on the podium by Octaber 16th (the next senate meeting) and if not he would be served with a Writ of Mandemaus. If not further action would be taken.

Dr. Charles Richard Drew was an achiever. He was born in 1904 in Washington D.C. He attended Amherst College where he was the star halfback of the football team, and also the captain of the track team. However, he didn't limit his achievements to athletics. At Amherst College, Drew received the Messman Trophy which was presented to him for bringing the most honor to the school in his years there.

After graduating from Amherst College in 1926, Drew went on to receive his M.D. degree from McGill Medical College in Montreal, Canada in 1933.

In 1935, Drew joined the faculty of Howard Medical College. Also in 1935, he was awarded a General Education Board Fellowship to Columbia Universirity Medical School. This Fellowship enabled Drew to do research on and important project, concerning the preservation of blood and its use for transfusions.

In 1940, the British government requested that Drew work on the "Blood for Britain" project. It involved collecting and drying blood plasma to be used for transfusions on the battlefield. This project was the first blood bank in England. Drew's techniques saved innumerable lives during World War I. While warking on the "Blood for Britain" project, Drew was granted an honorary Disc degree from Columbia University.

In 1941, Drew served as the director of the American Red Cross Blood Bank, the assistant director of blood procurement for the Natianal Research Council, and as chief Surgeon of Freedmen's Hospital in Washington D.C.

In his time, Drew perpetually disputed any scientific basis that indicated any blood differences according to race. It was later proven that blood has absolutely nothing to do with the transmission of hereditary materials. Therefore it can't be used to delegate a racial type.

Dr. Charles Drew was killed in an auto accident in 1950. He was in North Carolina driving to a professional meeting. He wasdriving in order to avoid the public accomodations in the South. After the crash he was brought to a segregated hospital. Ironically, he died because the hospital was unable to give him any blood plasma.

In 1976, Drew's house was named a National Historic Landmark by the Department of Interior. Charles Drew was a great man his accom lishments will be remembered by all peoples. Due to his work, many lives have been saved and many more lives will be saved. He was truly one of the world's leading hematologists.

St. Patrick Ewing he's not, rich he is

Patrick Ewing, saying he is nat St. Patrick, let alone a franchise savior, signed a contract recently with the New York Knicks that makes him the highest-paid rookie ever in pro basketball and one of the richest ever in professional sports.

The value and length of the contract were not disclosed by Ewing, or the Knicks or ProServ Inc. the Washington-based agency that handled the negatiations far the 7-faat center from Georgetown University. Estimates ranged from five to seven years and from $12 million to $15 million.

But at a Madison Square Garden news conference announcing the signing. Donald Dell Chairman of PreServ, said Ewing "will be the highest-paid rookie ever in the NBA."

Ewing regarded as the best defensive center to came out of college since Bill Russell in the 1950's, said he felt na pressure to turn around the Knicks' fortunes by himself. New York finished 24-58 last year and earned the right to draft Ewing No. 1 in the National Basketball Associatian's June draft by winning a lottery amng the seven warst teams in the NBA.

In his four years at Gorgetawn, the Hayas went to the finals of the NCAA Championship Tauornament three times, winning the title in 1984. He averaged 14.6 points and 9.2 rebounds a game as a senior.

"I have nothing to be worried about." Ewing said."All I can do is play as hard as I can. I don" consider myself a savior.I'm nat Jesus or even St. Patrick."

Dave DeBusschers, the Knicks' vice president in charge af basketball operations, called the signing "a significant day in the histary of New York we all look forward to seeing the great attitude and determination of this yaung man."

Training camp for the Knicks this past Saturday.

"I feel great and I'm glad it's over," Ewing said "I can get dawn to what I da best and that's playing ball. I left negotiatians ta my lawyers because I didn't want ta pressure them. I spent my summer preparing myself to play."

The previous high NBA rookie salaries, to Ralph Sampson and Akeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets, were for close to $1 million a piece the last two years

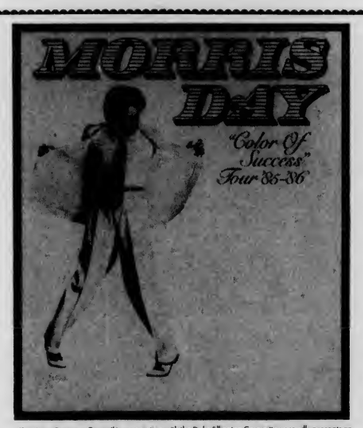
The only other rookies in American sports who signed contracts that may have been worth more than Ewing's were three football quarterbacks. Steve Young signed a multi-year pact worth an estimated $40 million with Los Angeles of the U.S. Football League John Elway a five-year contract worth about $1 million each season with the National Football's league's Denver Broncos, and Bernie Kasar a four-year contract with the leveland Brown of the NFL worth about $1.4 million each year

Knicks Coach Hubie Brown said Ewing will play both center and power forward for the Knicks rotating at those positions with Bill Cartwright, who was injured all last season, and Pat Cummings.

Sports Parade

with Julian Tynes

Welcame to another week of Nummo Sports Talk. Baseball is the main facus as the pennant race gets tight. All you Yankee fans, sorry! It looks like the "Bronx Bombers" are going to get bombed right out af the race. The Bluejays are for real! Of course the Yankees, Billy Martin and Ed Whitson are sa close.

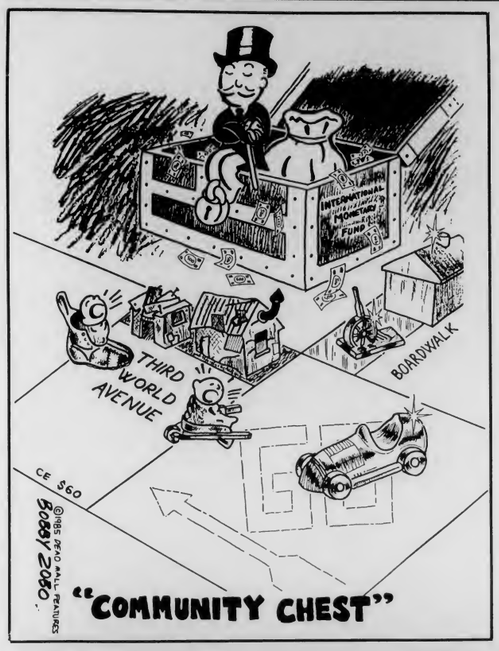


The Mets and the Cards look like they will be playing for the National League East title all the way to the last day. Bath teams have more power. The Cardinals are faster on the base paths and hit for a higher average. The Mets will win by ane game (I hape). The Dadgers have loacked up the Natianal League West.

Meanwhile, in American League West, the Kansas City Royals and the California Angels compete in the least publicisized race.

In the Natianal Football League anly twa teams are left in the undefeated ranks, the Las Angeles Rams and the Chicago Bears. It looks like this could be a good year for the Bears. Last year their defense was rated second overall in the league, (San Francisco 49ers were first) with all pros Richard Dent and Dan Hampton on the defensive line and Mike Singletary backing them up as linebacker, the Bears had the most physical defense in the N.F.L. Now with the addition of their first raund pick, All American defensive tackle, 6'3 320 pound William Perry, a.k.a. "The Refrigerator", the Bears may have the roughest, hardest hitting team in all of football. Their previous weakspot, offense, also has improved. All pro Walter Payton leads the running attack, while Jim McMahon passes deep to speedster Willie Gault and opens up the field with passes to fullback Matt Suhey with Paytan caming aut of the backfield. Watch the Bears!

N.B.A. Watch: Watch the Lakers. Rumor has it that they are making personnel moves to secure their shat at a secand consecutive Natianal Basketball Association title. Among their mare shacking maves has been the release of vetern farwards Jamal Wilkes and Bab McAdaa, and the signing of ex Pheanix Sun farward, Maurice Lucas. The Lakers and the rest of the teams in the N.B.A. will be spotlighted in Numma's pre-seasan laak at the N.B.A. later in the year.



Baxing Upsett Michael Spinks, in a big upset, defeated Larry Holmes to become the first light heavyweight to ever win the heavyweight championship. Now Marvin Hagler wants a shot at Spinks for his light heavyweight and heavyweight championships. Hagler hopes to become the middleweight, light heavyweight and heavyweight champion. Indebtedness to capitalist countries is a problem in many Third World countries today

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

The problem of indebtedness in Third World countries has increased dramatically over the years. It has increased so much, that Third World courtries owe large amounts of money in the range of billions of dollars.

"Third world countries as a collective debt owe a trillion dollars. Out of this total, Latin america and Caribbean countries owe 360 billion dollars. Most of this money is owed to official government agencies and multilateral loaning institutions," said George Mekunzie, a Social Thought and Political Economy (STEPC) student.

According to him, developing countries have economical needs which have to be met which can't be fascilitated by domestic economic activities."

"Whether talking railroads of the United States railway system, either electrical plants or other electrical generating units, manufacturing plants, and facilities, countries seeking to acquire technological means which they don't possess, tend to borrow to facilitate such transactions," he said.

The present wave of indebtedness can be said to have occurred largely because of two factors.

"As dependent economies, Third World countries tend to specialize in the production and export of primary materials, be it agricultural or minerals and the structure of the international market as it relates to the export of such primary products and import of finished manufactured products creates what is often called balance of payment deficit," Mekunzie stated.

The term balance of payment, deficit means that Third World countries export and receive for their export less than what they pay for their import.

Mekunzie said, "When this happens, borrowing is often resorted to enable Third World countries to import enough to meet their domestic needs. "The phenomena we're dealing with is what is called declining terms of trade."

Declining terms of trade means Third World goods exported to developed countries have a value added than developed countries export to Third World countries.

This trend has been going on for quite some time. Recognizing these unfair terms of trade, Third World countries banded together within the framework of the United Nations, expressing concern over what economists generally term as the increasing gap between the developed and underdeveloped world.

"Eleven years ago, the United Nations overwhelmingly resolved that for this process of relative increasing underdevelopment to be reversed, there was a need to implement the New World International Order (NEIO). What the order called for was the establishment of mechanisms for the free flow of technology from the developed to the undeveloped countries. It also called for mechanisms to insure more favorable means of trade and additionally, it called for a complete restructuring of the international financial system," Mekunzie stated.

Prices have also played a major role in the Third World indebtedness. "Between 1975 and the present, the developed economies have been shifting backward and forward from recession to recession. The latest recession, back in the early 1980s, brought about the economic jargon stagflation."

"The existence of stagflation heightened national consciousness to the fact the capitalist world economy exists in a constant state crisis. To life the U.S. economy out of its tag flated state, the Reagan administration employing supply side monetary policies, have created a condition in which the U.S., while having one of the largest deficits in the world, was able to attract the inflow of dollars from other parts of the world through artificially high interest rates," Mekunzie said.

"To make matters worse," he continued "We have a situation in which the International Monetary Fund (IMF), created as a result of the 1945 Brentwoods conference whose preview is to supervise the international financial system, operates in a manner which can be best described as suspect in its dealing with Third World countries."

"It is commonly held by Third World countries who have had to deal with the IMF that their policies are not only inappropriate because of its mechanistic approach, but that in general, the IMF tends to do the bidding of the developed countries whose voting power in the IMF, based on their financial contribution to the fund, far outstrips that of the Third World community of nations." he said

In the 1970s, the international banking community found itself in possession of an overflow of petrol dollars or Eurodollars as it is called in economic terms, following the increase of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) oil prices.

St. Joseph's (Pa.) defeated NU 3-0 in the consolation game. The Huskies were outscored 8-0 for the tournament.

The Minutemen are still perfect at home with a 7-0 record. UMass has won five straight, nine of ten, and have not given up a goal in its last four games. Goalkeepers Don Donahue and Sam Ginsburg have each had two of the shutouts.

Going into the weekends action, Massachusetts was ranked second in New England behind the nationally ranked University of Connecticut. The Minutemen and the Huskies clash on October 16 in Storrs.

UMass' next action is this Saturday against the University of Rhode Island at Boyden Field at 2 p.m.

will be the third guard, and a good one having prepped in summer games with Magic Johnson and his buddies in Michigan.

The Celtics frontcourt can not be matched up with by any NBA team with the addition of Walton. Boston potentially could play a lineup of Robert Parish at center, Walton and Kevin McHale at forwards and a backcourt of Dennis Johnson and Larry Bird.

Take Parish or Walton out, move Bird to the frontcourt and Danny Ainge moves in. Scott Wedmen, Vincent, Greg Kite and someone from the Rick Carlisle-Sly Williams-David Thirdkill group add quality depth.

Red, after losing to the hated Lakers, didn't sit still. he's added the best available players to his team. The Knicks won Ewing on the virtue of a lottery and have done nothing else to help themselves.

I feel almost bad for New Yorkers. The subway series is but a dream, the Rangers and Islanders are fading fast and the Giants and Jets are, well the Giants and Jets. Now the Knicks, despite the addition of Ewing, will fail.

The Celtics, for some reason, have a quality about them that doesn't permit them to lose. K.C. Jones is a class coach, Gaston, Cohen and Dupree are caring owners and Red is a legend.

So New Yorkers, watch as the Green rule the league again and cry some more. There are two great teams in the NBA, the Celtics and the Lakers. All the rest are pretenders to the throne.

The Red Sox may be out of it by every July 4th, the Patriots will never get anywhere and the Bruins glory days are past, but the Celtics carry Boston's heart with them everytime they go on the court.

Basketball season is here, finally. The first time I see Ewing complain to the officials, Hubie stomp up-and-down and Cartwright mistime a jumper, I'll be content knowing I'm a Celtics fan.

Ueberroth to take drug action

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth says he is "going to take action" in the near future against baseball players who have recently admitted taking drugs.

"I'm not going to prepublicize it," said Ueberroth, "but I'm going to look at all the information. I'm going to meet with each one, and I'm going to look at them eyeball-to-eyeball and the detrimental effect this has had on baseball."

Ueberroth made his comments in response to urgings to take actions against such players as Cincinnati's Dave Parker and Dieth Hernandez of the New York Mets.

Offense stumbling for battered Minutemen

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Two games, six points. Something's wrong with the University of Massachusetts offense.

Head coach Bob Stull doesn't like to make excuses for his football team, but there are excuses to be made.

For starters, there are the starters. Nine Minuteman regulars missed Saturday's 7-3 loss to Rhode Island, including quarterback Dave Palazzi.

It's becoming more than a coincidence that since Palazzi separated his shoulder in a 27-3 victory over Holy Cross UMass has gone from a team that averaged 26 points-per-game to one that averages three.

The blame can not be placed on the two quarterbacks that have replaced Palazzi, Jim Simeone and Bob Williamson. The fault, if any exists, is with the offense in general. UMass has lost its concentration: missing handoffs, fumbling in key situations and failing to capitalize in key situations.

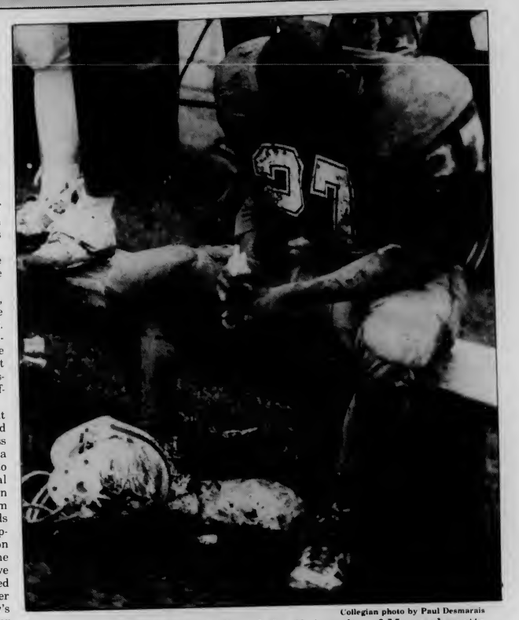
Stull came to UMass as a reknowed offensive coach, but has built, with the valuable help of defensive coordinator Jim Reid, one of the toughest defenses in division 1-AA.

The UMass defense has played well enough to win five games, allowing a mere nine-points-per-game and less than 100 yards a game on the ground. The defense has given the offense good field position and put UMass in a position to win.

Against Harvard and Rhode Island, the Minutemen had the ball late in the game, trailing by a touchdown or less, but failed to score. The Minutemen are two short scoring drives away from a 4-1 record.

In both the Harvard and Rhode Island games, the UM offense gave the ball away deep in enemey territory, throwing away a chance to win the game.

The defense will face a different kind of test on Saturday against Northeastern in Boston. The Huskies, a 3-0 loser to UMass last season, are playing the wishbone



The Huskies are 0-3 and despite the wishbone, should be easy pickings for the UMass defense.

The wishbone, with its multiple options, can confuse a defense but UMass should be able contain it and go back to .500 at 3-3.

After that however, UMass gets back into Yankee Conference play, facing Maine and Boston University at home, two must victories if the Minutemen want to seriously contend for the league title, their self-professed goal.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: About 30 minutes before Saturday's scheduled kickoff, a bolt of lightning hit a pole across the street from the staduim, sending out a ball of light and causing reporters to wonder why they were sitting in metal chairs high above the stadium. . .freshman linebacker John McKeown leads the team in tackles with 60. . .John Crowley leads in receptions with 11 for 164 yards. . .opponents have only scored one touchdown on the ground, URI's reverse on Saturday. The defense has allowed just 424 yards in five games (84.8 yards-a-game). . .Stull pointed out the play of long-snapper Craig Wagner and punter Dimitri Yavis in Saturday's sloppy game . . . Field hockey out of slump, at NU

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Field hockey fans can breathe easily again now that the seventh ranked University of Massachusetts field hockey team has reestablished its regional dominance.

With rejuvinated confidence, the Minutewomen, 6-2, tackle Northeastern, a team playing below .500 this season, today at 3:30 p.m. in Boston.

A week ago, the team was reeling from an unnerving 2-1 overtime loss to an outclassed Springfield College squad. The loss dropped the Minutewomen three places in the national rankings to their current positon but more importantly it indicated that UMass would need to work much harder to achieve winning results, UMass coach Pam Hixon said.

After destroying Yale, 4-0, Thursday in New Haven and Maine, 3-0, Sunday at Totman Field, the Minutewomen demonstrated that the determination to win had paid off and that they had reaquired their missing concentration.

"We're playing more like a team now," Hixon said, referring to her team's victories since losing to Springfield.

In pounding an ineffective Maine squad, UMass, as it had done all year, controlled the tempo and outshot its opponents by an eye-popping margin. But as it had failed to do in its previous two losses this season, UMass was able to capitalize on its opportunities, tallying goals instead of just impressive shot margins.

The Minutewomen have been hot behind the scoring of senior All-America defenseman Megan Donnelly who has five goals in her last two games. The Minutewomen will have to take the scoring burden off of Donnelly if they expect to win. Sophomore defenseman Amy Robertson, recently swiched to right wing has been impressive according to Hixon.

Sorry New Yorkers, but Celtics will rule

The University of Massachusetts is an interesting place for a sports fan.

For every Red Sox, Bruins, Celtics or Patriots fan, there exists a Yankee, Met, Knicks, Rangers, Islanders, Giants or Jets fan.

New Yorkers, because of the lack of decent colleges in that state, flock to Massachusetts' schools and bring their sporting opinions with them.

Peter Abraham

Which brings us to the age-old question: the Celtics or the Knicks, who's better?.

This born-and-bred Eastern Massachusetts kid is here to tell you that, once again, the Celtics are the class of the NBA and with little trouble will pound the hapless Knicks.

"Patrick Ewing" New Yorkers are screaming. Granted, even I will admit, Patrick is a great player. However he can not do it without a supporting cast.

The Knicks have nothing to help their new star. High-scoring Bernard King will miss at least 40 games and the ineffectual and overated Bill Cartwright will miss much of the start of the season.

Who's left? Louis "Ghandi" Orr is holding out, the backcourt is feeble and the starting small forward is Ernie Grunfeld. Depth is non-existent and Hubie Brown, despite all his claims, is not the best coach in the NBA, far from it.

The Knicks, as good a defensive team as they are, are still a few players away from respectability, so put that in your Mercedes and take it back to the Island.

The Celtics, however, will reign the Atlantic Division again. Quinn Buckner, Ray Williams, M.L. Carr and Cedric Maxwell did not play in the final game of the 1985 championship series, they are gone.

In their place, Red Auerbach has put Bill Walton, Sam Vincent and Jerry Sichting.

Red, as he has done many times before, has stolen the league blind again. Maxwell wasn't going to play hard for the Celtics again. Walton, who when healthy is the best center around, expressed a desire to play for the Celtics and is a Celtics type of player. Sichting will provide shooting off the bench while Vincent

Scoring picks up for men

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team suffered key injuries a week ago to Andy Bing, the club's leading scorer, and hard-working midfielder John Shannon, coach Jeff Gettler voiced the need for more offense from his forwards.

"I am hoping the forwards will put some goals in the net", said Gettler three games ago. "The midfielders have been doing the scoring, so now the forwards have to get on track."

In those three games, the Minutemen have scored a total of eight goals, all coming from the forward position.

This resurgence of offensive output from the UMass front line has been led by Tom Giordano (three goals, two assists), F.J. Zwicklbauer (two goals, three assists), and Nick Marciano (two goals).

After Massachusetts rolled over Northeastern University 5-0 in its opening game of the UMass Invitational on Saturday, Gettler's main concern for Sunday's championship match was his team's attitude.

"I am just worried we will be too cocky," said Gettler on Saturday. "We are a lunch pail team, we do it with hard work, and if we get away from that we will be in trouble."

But the coach was happy with the clubs effort on Sunday. "Playing Hartford was a real incentive," said Gettler. "They beat us in the final last year."

The Minutemen outscored its opponents this weekend 6-0 and outshot them by an astounding 36-10 margin.

Defender Matthew Cushing was rewarded for his contribution to the two shutouts by being named the tournament's Most Valuable Player. The sophmore sweeper was all over the field, keeping the ball away from the UMass net and controlling the tempo of the game.

Along with Cushing; Bing, Marciano, and Giordano were picked to the all-tournament team. An odd selection was Northeastern keeper Frank Stockwell.

Regents ok new policy

Affirmative action

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON—After a heated debate, the Board of Regents of Higher Education voted 9-3 yesterday to approve a report that outlines a new series of affirmative action policies for the state's public colleges and universities.

The report from the regents' Affirmative Action Office, titled "New Direction for Affirmative Action," was openly criticized by regent Edward T. Sullivan who said he had "great objections to this report, if it's serious."

Sullivan began his argument by reading sections of the report and repeatedly saying, "I don't understand this." He said some of the wording in the report was too vague, noting the use of verbs like "enrich, strengthen, fortify...These are advertising terms. Next we'll see 40 percent bran in the report," he said.

As he argued against the policy initiatives outlined in the 25-page report Sullivan was at odds with most of the other regents. Board member Mary Lou Anderson said, "It will be a sad day for the commonwealth and the board of regents if we do not approve this affirmative action document," she said.

Science experts convene

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is playing host this week to more than 450 top scientists and engineers from around the world who are partaking in the 1985 International Geoscience and Remote Sensing Symposium.

UMass engineering Professor Calvin T. Swift, who headed the conference's technical programs committee, said that the main purpose of the symposium is to allow engineers and scientists in this field and other related fields to meet and exchange ideas and new information.

"There are 350 papers being presented on many different topics some of which include sea ice studies, image processing for remote sensing, and studies with microwaves and laser probing in the atmosphere," Swift said.

One of the biggest projects being addressed during the three day conference is radar images of the earth that were taken from the space shuttle using new techniques.

"The images were taken only one year ago and already 32 papers have been written about them and they are being used by scientists to observe the earth," Swift said.

Swift said that many of the topics being looked at can be mainstreamed into everyday life.

"Some of the new microwave processes that we are looking at can be used in taking weather pictures that are seen on the news," he said explaining that by using a remote sensing technique microwaves can penitrate through clouds during both the day and night to pick up images. In the past, the clouds did not allow clear pictures of the earth to be taken.

Thus far, 455 scientists and engineers have registered from 12 different countries. Many of the people attending the conference are rated tops in their field and hope to gain additional knowledge in their area of interest.

E. Reyna from the Johnson Space Center in Houston Texas who is doing research in radar sensing in forests said, "it is important to keep up with new information being discovered. A symposium such as this allows me to learn from what other people are doing."

Commuters finally elected

More people vote

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The commuter area elections, which were nullified last week by the Undergraduate Student Senate, ran smoothly yesterday with about a 20 percent voter turnout.

John Crowley, governmental affairs chairman, said the turnout was "much better than last week," and "there were absolutely no problems with this election."

Competition for the seats, which Crowley said was heavy compared with previous years, explained the high voter turnout. There were 43 candidates for the 28 senate seats and 18 candidates for the 13 governing board positions.

Last week the commuter elections were nullified by the student senate because of a violation of SGA election rules after some senators said they observed campaign leaflets being handed out within 50 feet of the polling box located outside the Hatch. Also, an "ethical violation" was brought up when a candidate was seen staffing the ballot box for the election he was running in. The election was invalidated after the senate debated for nearly two hours on the degree of the violations.

In yesterday's election, "both sides (ideologies) had voting lists and were campaigning heavily," Crowley said. However, he pointed out that no violations were observed by either group.

"I feel that it is time to get onto other things other than our own elections," he said. "We can't have an active senate without getting this over with."

Crowley, who was at the ballot boxes checking for any violations, said he was "relieved" that the elections were finally over.

Graduate senate against URF

By Sean Casey
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate formed an ad-hoc committee last night to investigate the possibility of graduate students amending the Universal Resource Fee (URF), which many students protested last year before its implementation.

Graduate students in most departments find the fee, which encompasses among its components the debt service fees for University buildings such as dormitories and dining commons, unfair to all off-campus students since they do not use these buildings.

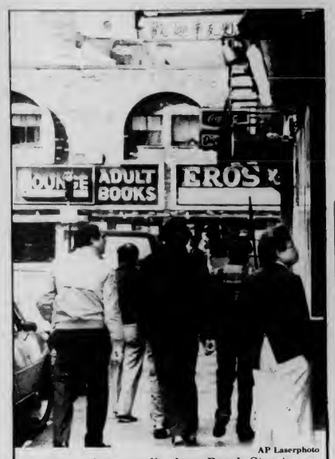
The ad-hoc committee will attempt to construct an effective response to the fee from the varied suggestions put forth by many different academic departments.

Several senators stressed that any action taken must be severe enough to convince the administration of their commitment and unity. A boycott of the fee by graduate students in the German Department will be advised against by the senate at least temporarily to consolidate graduate student action.

"We have to tell them(the administration) that we are going to do something big that hurts them, do it and then tell them we'll do it again," said senate Vice-President George Claxton. Senate Executive Officer John Haves said that since most graduate students' bills are due October 11th or 16th it would probably not be possible to organize any action directly involving the bills this semester.

"Maybe we will have to swallow our pride this once, but we will actively resist it (the URF), and to do this we need a cooperative action," Hayes said.

Some of the ideas presented by graduate students through their senators were a bill-paying strike in January, a possible TA/TO walkout, or a simultaneous failure to turn in grade sheets, although this last suggestion was criticized for possibly hurting undergraduates, who would not be the intended victims.



"We also have to stress that this is not only for us, but that unfair fees will make it harder to attract graduate students here," Hayes added.

Asians take on Combat Zone

BOSTON (AP)—Marlene, an admitted prostitute, said she had just stepped out of a Chinese restaurant when a score of Asians flashed lights in her face, yelled "She's a hooker!"and began rolling video cameras.

The videotaping of pimps, prostitutes and their customers early Sunday morning was the latest skirmish in a battle between Asians and prostitutes over Chinatown, which borders the red-light district known as the Combat Zone.

Marlene says the campaign is unfair.

"Guys like to come down here, enjoy themselves," she said. "This is ours. Why should they take it all away?"

Members of the Asian community say they want to turn the videotapes over to police to drive out the X-rated trade spilling onto their streets, making them unsafe and hurting business.

"The ordinary family will not pass through the Combat Zone to go to Chinatown to eat," said Suzanne Lee, who helped organize the taping. "It's a total disgrace to women and children, or anyone for that matter."

But those who work the streets say shooting pictures of prostitutes won't make them move. "Girls are still going to hustle. Nothing's going to stop them," said one, who refused to identify herself.

Named for fights among soldiers and sailors who visited ladies of the night, the Combat Zone became the center of the sex trade in the early 1960's when a previous red-light district known as Scollay Square was razed during an urban renewal project.

Hormone found to help arthritis

CAMBRIDGE (AP)—A chance observation during a cancer experiment has led to the surprising discovery that injections of the hormone interferon seem to relieve the pain and swelling of rheumatoid arthritis, researchers reported yesterday.

Preliminary studies show that the hormone, made through gene-splicing techniques, works in about two-thirds of people who are unhelped by conventional treatment.

It is still too soon to know whether this natural body chemical will play a role in treating rheumatoid arthritis. But if it does, it could provide a large, unexpected new market for genetic engineering's mass-produced human hormones.

Although interferon has been shown to be effective against genital warts, most of the testing until now has examined its possible use in cancer. The homone's apparent power against arthritis was first notice about a year and a half ago during one of these cancer studies at Bioferon, a German subsidiary of the biotechnology firm Biogen.

"They incidentally noted in a few patients who had both cancer and rheumatoid arthritis some improvement in the pain from arthritis," said Dr. Seth Rudnick, Biogen's vice president for pharmaceutical development.

Alcohol program teaches students about drinking

Course is confidential

By RHONDA SWAN
Collegian Correspondent

Alcohol consumption is a popular activity with many students but it can sometimes lead to undesirable drinking habits that bring on physical and emotional problems.

To prevent these habits, the Student Opportunity Program (STOP) will begin again this month to educate the University of Massachusetts community about alcohol related issues.

The program is designed for students who have questions regarding their drinking habits but who are not necessarily trying to quit drinking, said Carlene Riccelli, coordinator of alcohol education at University Health Services.

"STOP is an early intervention program. It tries to stop problems before they get serious," Riccelli said.

Riccelli said that students who are aware that they have a serious drinking problem would be better off seeking help from some sort of abstinence program such as Alcoholics Anonymous.

The purpose of STOP is to "provide information about alcohol, its effects on the body and the signs and symptoms of problem drinking," said Riccelli. Students like STOP because it is an education, not a treatment program,she said.

"It is a very open kind of program and a very good diagnostic tool. It lets people figure out the extent of their problem and decide where to go from there."
—Carlene Riccelli

The program, which begins Monday, Oct. 21, consists of a series of five sessions and is strictly confidential. No records are kept unless students feel that documentation of their participation would be to their benefit.

According to Riccelli, the above is usually the case with students whose drinking habits have caused problems in the residence halls or with authorities. In such cases, students join the program as a "good faith gesture" to show that they are willing to get help.

Students in the STOP program develop their own goals relating to their drinking behavior. Each student keeps a drinking log that records when, where, with whom, and how much they drink. These personal diaries are helpful because students can "get a profile of their drinking behavior" and can compare it with people who have problems and see where they stand, she said.

"It is a very open kind of program and and a very good diagnostic tool. It lets people figure out the extent of their problem and decide where to go from there,"Riccelli said.

Initial interviews for people interested in participating in STOP are now being held at University Health Services every week.

Delays rapped

Senate eyes own rules

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Prompted by slow-moving Undergraduate Student Senate meetings a motion to amend by-laws in senate procedure as a way of reversing the order of events will be on tonight's senate meeting agenda.

The motion, sponsored by Bill Collins, "would replace an obsolete section of the (SGA) bylaws," Collins said. "It would actually outline the procedure for the agenda." Collins said he sees the amendment "as a rules reform to bring more power to the individual senator."

A senator's power would increase, Collins said, because senator's proposals from prior weeks would come up for debate as "unfinished business" before the senate officer's reports, which usually have taken up most of the time at meetings. The result, he said, would be that any unfinished business would be dealt with right after the call to order and any announcements.

"It (the amendment) makes perfect sense and I could guarantee passage," Collins said. "Since I'm a regular senator it's put at the bottom," and for this reason Collins said he doesn't think the senate will get to it tonight.

The senate this semester has been unable to debate old business on the agenda because of "petty bickering," said senate Speaker John Ruddock.

"I really think it (rules amendment) falls short of the objective that the senate should be dealing with," Ruddock said. "There are other ways of dealing with the problem," he said, including getting rid of redundant debate, following parliamentary procedure, and eliminating grandstanding on the part of senators"I think the student government has the potential of being one of the strongest voices on this campus," he said. By being less than fully efficient the senate "is doing students a disservice."

Graduate student suspected of setting off false fire alarm

A graduate student will be summoned to Hampshire District Court as a suspect in yesterday's false fire alarm in Marshall Hall, University of Massachusetts police said.

Police said the student became a suspect from a taping of his voice.

In other police reports:

• An excavation pump, valued at approximately $1,500 was reported stolen from the Waste Water Treatment Plant. The pump is the property of the School of Engineering and was stolen within the past two weeks, police said.

• A car was reported vandalized in lot 71 Monday afternoon. A parking decal, valued at $125, was also stolen, police said.

• A graphic equalizer, valued at $100, was stolen from a car parked in fraternity-sorority park last weekend. Police said the dashboard of the car was ripped up.

—JEANETTE DEFORGE

Anderson noted that the report was "supposed to be about policies, not strategies."

The report outlines the key issues and problems in affirmative action efforts in the state's public higher education system. The three main problem areas, according to the regents' report, are: 1)administration of affirmative action, 2)outreach and recruitment for staff and faculty, 3)student recruitment, enrollment, retention, and progression.

Sullivan said his greatest objection to the report was that it places most of the burden of ensuring equal opportunity on the labor unions, by proposing that affirmative action policies be implemented in the collective bargaining process.

"How can we try to implement affirmative action in collective bargaining when we decide who's going to be in the unions by hiring them?" he asked.

The regents' Affirmative Action director, Bruce Rose, said, "Both the regents and the unions have a commitment to ensuring equal opportunity for for all union members."

Regents Chairman David J. Beaubien said, "The document isn't perfect, but it's only the first draft of a policy document, not a strategy initiative. And it is a beginning."

Secretary has puzzling hobby

By CHRISTOPHER MARAK
Collegian Correspondent

Some people are stuck on Miami Vice, others hide away in the steamy world of Harlequin Romances; Gertrude Lashway is a fanatic about jigsaw puzzles.

Lashway, a secretary for 25 years in the home economics department at the University of Massachusetts, said she has tried other methods of relaxation such as solving crossword puzzles but has now found her niche.

Unlike many people who find jigsaw puzzles frustrating, Lashway said, "they have a tranquilizing effect on me. " Her favorites are the 500-700 piece puzzles because they are quicker and take up less space than 1,000 piece puzzles.

Many of Lashway's colleagues also take part in her hobby. "I often find people in the lunch room sitting at the table putting some pieces into place."

She usually completes a puzzle every week. Susan Stern, another department secretary, is also an avid puzzle fan and five of her and Lashway's puzzles are on display on a bulletin board in Skinner Hall. Both agree that their favorite puzzle is the one featuring different types of food.

Lashway has been scouting out spots to find new jigsaw puzzles. "I find most of the puzzles at tag sales for as low as 50 cents. When I finish with them, I usually trade them with other people who spend spare time working on them."

Recently, Lashway found two puzzles at a tag sale that are made of wood and were actually cut from a jigsaw. This has inspired her to begin collecting jigsaw puzzles as well as solving them.

Alcohol's adverse effects

Steve Fundakowski

I'm writing this column as a result of an incident that took place this past weekend in my home. It was Saturday night and there were several parties in our courtyard here in Puffton Village. It was about 11 p.m. and I was heading out to meet my wife, who was out with several of her friends who were visiting for the weekend. I was coming out of out kitchen when I heard our door open. I walked around the corner expecting to see my wife and her friends, thinking that they decided to come home instead of staying out, when I was met by two young men who were complete strangers to me.

They started to walk past me, heading toward our bedroom when I stuck my arm in front of them to stop them. The first man said that it was OK and that they were just going out the back way (we have no 'back way') and started to push past me. I then pushed the first man with my arm slightly more insistently than I had the first time. He stumbled backwards, tripping over our barbecue by the door, and landed on his back half in and half out of out doorway.

He then got upset that I used force on him (I believe that a sober person wouldn't have fallen in the same situation). I got equally upset that he hadn't even knocked on our door before walking in. It's not as if we were in some way part of the parties going on and he might have thought he was welcome. Later I got even more upset when I thought about what might have happened if the situation were reversed and it was my wife who was home alone when these two intruders entered our home.

I can see why the University is trying to cut down on the drinking going on — some students are just not responsible enough. I understand their situation — I consumed my fair share of beer when I was an undergraduate. I don't want to be a party-pooper. I am very tolerant of the loud music, the boisterous crowd and the mess the morning after; however, when someone just walks into my home — no way!

I realize that many people think that this is just two students out of hundreds, but it is more than that.

It is an attitude that a large part of the drinking student body has — one of inconsiderate disregard for other people. I can't think of anyone that I used to drink with who would even consider doing something like this. These guys weren't that drunk that they didn't know what they were doing; they knew full well. The attitudes of some students will have to change if they want the University to consider them responsible adults who should be allowed to drink. Otherwise, incidents like this will constantly send a message to University officials that the University should go dry.

Before the bottle bill was passesd, Sunday morning meant having to navigate your car through the broken bottles in parking lots. Since then, demonstrations of this peculiar fetish (breaking bottles) have nearly disappeared. There is an old phrase that can be modified to apply here — instead of 'drunken stupor' in is 'drunk 'n' stupid.' More than once, I've heard people on the Monday morning bus bragging about something equally stupid (e.g. 'You should have seen Jack throw that cinder block through their window'). Whether these stories are true, exaggerated, or complete fiction is immaterial. The fact is that the responsible party's friends are condoning these actions by laughing at them, saying that they wish they could have seen it or just by listening to it.

Until the frequency of incidents comparable in irresponsibility to this one decreases I will side my opinions with the University that many students should not be allowed to drink on campus. Unfortunately, I live off campus and would probably be exposed to more of the same — the again, maybe some people would finally get the message.

Whose 'discovery' was it?

Stephen Erickson

A warm December breeze blew off the Gulf Stream as a burly, bearded seafarer gazed out at the open ocean from atop a ridge. All was now ready for the ensuing winter, as cabins had been built and the steer set to forage on the island's vegetation. The land and sea would support them nicely, for the fish were plentiful, the ground never froze, and the area abounded with wild grapes, which had prompted them to call this place Vinland (Wineland). The year was 1003, and so, almost 500 years prior to Columbus' 'discovery' of the New World, the Vikings were settling down to spend winter in America.

I have always celebrated Columbus Day under protest. Although my ancestry may indicate a bias, it has always puzzled me why we should give a national holiday to Christopher Columbus. When he arrived in America, Columbus mistook it for the East Indies and called the native Americans 'Indians,' whom he proceeded to enslave and bring back to the King and Queen of Spain as a sort of show and tell. Indians and trinkets were not all he brought back, however, as his crew had contracted syphilis and presented that as a gift to the European community as well. Sure, Chris Columbus brought to Europe the news of the New World, but he was not the first European here, by some 500 years.

During the Dark Ages of Europe, the skill and technology of Norse seaworthiness was unsurpassed. The Vikings penetrated much of Europe, settling deep within Russia, Germany, and France on lands they conquered or were granted as ransom. One can follow the progression of Viking colonization westward from Scandinavia to the British Isles, to Iceland, to Greenland, and finally to the North American mainland itself.

In the year 1002 Lief Eriksson, Son of Erik the Red (who had settled Greenland), learned of western lands from the Viking merchant Bjarni Heriulfsson who had sighted them after his ship had been blown west in a storm. The following year, Eriksson set out with a crew of 35 sailors to explore Bjarni's claims. They set sail not in the better known Viking Longboat but in a larger ship, capable of carrying livestock and supplies, which was customary for longer ocean voyages.

Eriksson first struck land at a barren place which today is called Baffin Island in Northern Canada. The second region visited was described as heavily wooded and is, no doubt, present day Labrador. The third and final place Eriksson landed, he named Vinland. The location of Vinland remains a mystery, but most scholars place it at or near Cape Cod. Here the Viking expedition spent the winter of 1003-1004, after which it returned to Greenland.

According to Norse legend, during the following years, many subsequent voyages were made to Vinland. The first European to be born in America was reportedly given birth to there. A lively trade developed with the native inhabitants, but apparently there was some conflict between the Vikings and the American Indians, which may explain the eventual abandonment of Vinland. The Viking settlement in Greenland also disappeared but it is thought that this occurred as a result of isolation from Europe and cultural assimilation with the local people.

Despite the mystery that surrounds the Viking presence in America, it is widely accepted that the Norsemen were here quite some time before the Spaniards. So, this Columbus Day, when you hear talk of the Nina, the Pinta, and the Santa Maria, give some thought to the lone Viking vessel plowing through the icy waters of the North Atlantic.

Faculty evaluation access

Kathleen Offenhartz

The students of Professor Benjamin Ricci's class who did not like the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide's summary of his course are wishing for the impossible: a student-opinion guide which accurately reflects their opinions without their own input. However, even though their complaints are a bit late, they are not without merit. In the two years I have been working on the Course and Teacher Evaluaton Guide, I have often thought how much better the Guide would be if more students would respond. In addition, it would be helpful if those professors who handed out their own evaluation forms, as Benjamin Ricci does, would send them into the Guide to be published instead of writing the Collegian later with the results.

Two summers ago, I worked on the CATE Guide as a staff member. I was then hired to be the year-round coordinator. My goal was to get a larger student response to the Guide and to help make the production of the Guide a more organized, professional endeavor. To this end, I worked with Whitmore's Student Affairs Research Organization to improve the form and to send more out to each student, with cover letters to explain what we were all about. When I counted the responses coming in in May and saw that it was about the same as last year—only about seven percent, I was ready to throw in the towel.

But the rest of the staff and I went ahead and worked (and worked and worked) on the Guide, chocking up the lack of improvement in that area as a lesson learned, and going on to improve other areas of the Guide (readability, a clear statement of methodology, and more). This year, as the new CATE coordinator begins her/his work, I hope s/he'll think of a way to improve the response rate. I would like to see CATE give up on mass-mailings altogether and work instead on polling students as they come out of classes or as they stroll down the halls of the Campus Center.

This method would take tremendous person-power, but would cost less money than a mailing. In addition, I would also like to see another challenge of the ruling that says that teachers are not required to have evaluations that have been filled out by students be available for students to look at (and/or publish). As it stands now, it is only through the CATE Guide and the kindness of such professors as Ricci that students get to see the evaluations other students fill out.

Finally, as the cost of printing goes higher and the Student Senate has less money to give to student groups such as ours, I wonder how many Guides we'll be able to print up. Will we have to start selling them (at no more than 50 cents per copy, I hope), as the adminsitration has already done with issues of the Course Catalog? I certainly hope not. We have started selling ads in the Guide, and perhaps by also no longer doing a mailing, we will have enough to offset printing costs. The summer staff hours have been cut drastically by the Senate. The yearly salary I cut myself, knowing the money was needed elsewhere.

I hope I haven't bored people much with this tale of the mystery and intrigue of putting together the CATE Guide and its finances. And, yes, I am proud to have been one of the folks who brought you this Guide.

For those of you who missed your chance to get a Guide, there will be more handed out before second semester, and probably a table on the Campus Center Concourse during Counseling Week. And, thanks to those loyal students who sent us their forms last year.

ed any professional insight. From an artistic standpoint, it was a joke. From an arms standpoint, every weapon is either inaccurate or ficticious. The action scenes are so poorly constructed they lack any credibility or excitement.

There is a subplot that involves the only woman in the film, a tough-guy named McGuire (Melissa Prophet). She's a reporter who just so happens to be at the scene of most of the terrorist attacks sheerly by accident. She is hostile towards Chuck for most of the film, but as soon as they start showing affection for each other, she disappears.

Chuck (who co-wrote with James Brunner, based on a story by Brunner and Chuck's son Aaron) created the most ludicrous situations and witless quips, like 'I'll give you so many lefts you'll beg for a right.' Chuck also seems to be suffering from Stallone's Syndrome. The major symptoms are numerous close shots of his face and placing him in scenes simply because he's the star. Chuck is the same character in all his films, which is the portrayal of his id. He's desperately trying to be a hero.

The first 20 minutes we see the plot slowly constructed while we cut back to Chuck for twenty seconds doing nothing. The invasion turns out to be nothing more than an oversized gang war. The film is really about Rostov using a band of terrorists to eliminate the invincible Chuck.

The film ends in a ridiculous battle in which the terrorists are trapped in a police station where Chuck is being held. They then confront the National Guard in a struggle which parallels Chuck's fight with Rostov.

Nausea results from overexposure to this (yawn) excitement.

Movie Review

This time Chuck Norris is Matt Hunter, a semi-retired mercenary employed by 'The Company' or 'The Agency,' whichever you prefer. He has a grudge against Mikhail Rostov (Richard Jaeckel), a Russian who keeps changing languages. Chuck is living peacefully in a swamp when Jaeckel storms in, kills his friend, and blows his house up.

Then Chuck gets mad and jerks his cheek muscle.

From that point on the movie consists of action scenes showing the terrorists blowing things up. The victims include mall shoppers, churchgoers, and families decorating Christmas trees. They are each given scenes in an attempt to build sympathy for them. The attempt fails; they are just anonymous casualties.

Joseph Zito (Missing In Action), who directed this garbage heap, has no understanding of cinematic construction. From a technical standpoint, the film lack-

THE BEST PEOPLE

Everyone wants to hire the best people. The creative people—with bold ideas. But few, if any companies, have had as much success as Hazeltine at bringing the best on board. And there are some very good reasons for our success.

It all begins with our environment. It tends to be more supportive than most—especially when it comes to helping new graduates make the most of the skills they've acquired and the talents they've been born with. From our open-minded, progressive management to our superb in-house training and 100% tuition reimbursement programs, everything at Hazeltine works together to help the best work better. Minutewomen riding high, are at UNH

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Last year, as a freshman, Cathy Spence came off the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team bench and was "Instant Offense" as coach Kalekeni Banda liked to say.

With a late-season flurry, including five goals in the last three games of the season, Spence was the team's leading scorer with 11 goals and eight assists for 30 points.

However, all that scoring drew a lot of attention to Spence. Perhaps too much as the Minutewomen, ranked third in the nation, travel to Durham this afternoon to face the unranked University of New Hampshire at 3:30 p.m.

"They're (opponents) looking for Spence," Banda said. "They know her number, they're marking her one-on-one."

As the opposition worries about bottling up Spence, UMass' leading returning scorer and holder of three NCAA tournament scoring records, another freshman has taken off.

Forward Beth Roundtree has been a grateful recipient of the tough coverage on Spence and UM's All-American midfielder, Kristen Bowsher. She has scored three goals in the past two games, including the game-winner in a 1-0 victory over the University of Connecticut.

"Beth is more used to being marked one-on-one from high school," Banda said. "She goes after people." Roundtree, with her recent flurry, has assumed the scoring lead for the undefeated (8-0) Minutewomen.

Roundtree has scored six goals with four assists for 16 points. Sophomores Monica Seta (6-3-15) and Carolyn Micheel (4-7-15) are close behind.

So what is the role for Spence? She's still coming off the pines, but assuming the role of a starter.

"We've told her to be patient, hold the ball and be tough," Banda said. "She has to work hard in practice on being a starter, but coming off the bench."

Today's game with the Wildcats begins the second half of the UMass season, during which they will face four Top 20 teams, including four-time and defending national champion North Carolina on Saturday at 11 a.m. at Boyden Field.

Field hockey ties, 1-1

Donnelly scores at 0:01

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

BOSTON—The University of Massachusetts field hockey team went as far as they could before pulling out a last-second miracle in senior Megan Donnelly's goal as time expired to boost the seventh-ranked Minutewomen to a 1-1 tie with Northeastern here yesterday.

The Minutewomen, 6-2-1, had been outplayed and outshot by the spirited Huskies, who scored early in the first half on the turf at Parsons Field.

"We were absolutely flat. Our offense was non-exsistent," said UMass coach Pam Hixon.

The Minutewomen had just five shots in the second half, down 1-0, and only four penalty corners, two in the final minute of play.

Donnelly's shot with 19 seconds to go went wide, but UMass struggled to get another penalty corner with 10 seconds to go. Sophomore Amy Robertson raced to get the ball down into position for a shot.

With four seconds left, Robertson hit the ball to the top of the circle to junior Lisa Griswold who stopped the ball with her stick. Donnelly hit the ball with one second left, hitting the back of the net with no time left and the horn blaring. "It was a good corner," Donnelly said. "Amy got is right on target and Griz (Griswold) made a good stop. All I had to do was hit it."

Donnelly, an All-American and U.S. National team member, scored a goal of a penalty corner with three seconds to go against Old Dominion in the Final Four two seasons ago to send the game into overtime, where UMass lost, 2-1.

There was overtime yesterday bercause both coaches didn't agree on it prior to the game. The NCAA doesn't require overtime in the regular season.

"You have to give Northeastern credit," said Donnelly. "They were beating us to the ball. They were flying."

Northeastern outshot UMass, 20-13 as Minutewoman goalie Katherine Rowe was forced to make 14 saves.

"We got here and we just weren't ready to play," said Hixon. "We can't play like that and be in the Top 10. We need to play with intensity and enthusiasm, and we'll have it if I have to beat it out of them."

Northeastern scored on its first penalty corner with 24:09 left in the first half as Sharon George sent a rocket by Rowe. The Huskies (3-2-3) entered the game unranked, but unbeaten in its last four games.

"Our team is good," Hixon said. "Mentally we just weren't in it until we were going to lose it. We have to put opponents on their heels we have to come to play every day."

Volleyball coach Elaine Sortino hopes to keep her team undefeated tonight against New Haven.

Volleyball undefeated

UM puts streak on line

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It's been a rough couple of weeks for the University of Massachusetts volleyball team. The 14th-ranked Minutewomen were flat in a three-game sweep of Mount Holyoke College last week and had to manufacture an unbelievable comeback effort to beat Northeastern last Saturday.

The road ahead doesn't get any easier for head coach Elaine Sortino's unbeaten spikers. The University of New Haven, ranked second in the Northeast behind UMass, invade Boyden Gymnasium for another in a series of critical matches for the Minutewomen, 15-0.

"New Haven is more of an offensive team than Northeastern," said Sortino. "They have a more balanced attack and a couple of outstanding players." UMass and UNH met earlier this season for the Central Connecticut Tournament championship. UMass swept UNH for first place honors.

"We were psychologically ready for them at the CCSU tourney," said Sortino. "We had just come off a great semi-final match against Northeastern and we got to rest before the match. We had great momentum. New Haven's semi-final match went on for about an hour and forty-five minutes, so they were pretty tired."

UMass will need consistent performances from key players to dispose of UNH. New Haven plays a style of volleyball similar to that of Northeastern defensively, but carry a little more offensive punch.

"They are much more disciplined than Northeastern and more orthodox in style," said Sortino. "For that reason, I think they're a bit easier to play than Northeastern."

Sophomore middle hitter Marcy Guiliotis and sophomore hitter Violetta Gladkowska dominated the net against the Northeastern with timely hitting and blocking and will be looking to do more of the same against New Haven. Both Guiliotis and Gladkowska, along with senior co-captains Ann Ringrose and Sally Maher, played a major role in the spikers win over the Huskies.

Freshman middle hitter Barbara Meehan, freshman setters Juliet Primer and Ann-Marie Larese, and sophomore defensive specialist Debbie Cole will also have to be in top form to stop New Haven's potent outside hitting attack. Overall, UMass will have to get out to a quick start and not fall behind as they did against Northeastern.

"We've got to be able to get through that stick point where we get out to a big lead and let teams back into the match," said Sortino after Saturday's win over Northeastern. "That stuff has got to go. Somebody is going to break our backs over it."

Tonight's match figures to produce more of the same edge-of-your-seat excitement that about 200 lucky fans witnessed at the Northeastern match. Both teams feature exceptional defenses as well as explosive offenses.

Women's tennis downs Wellesley

By LAURA KAUFMANN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team scored an impressive victory over a tough Wellesley College last week, 5-4, to go to 4-2 on the season.

Second doubles players Jill Nesgos and Ann-Marie Mackertich won the match for UMass, winning 7-4 in the tie-breaker of a very exciting see-saw match as darkness fell.

Mackertich won at third singles, 6-1, 2-6, 7-5. Others winners included first singles player Chris Frazier, a senior, and sixth singles player Laura Morgan, a junior.

The Minutewomen travel to the MAIAW's this weekend to face various teams and players among area colleges.

The Minutewomen then go on the road for three games, playing Holy Cross, Dartmouth and Smith away before the season finale, the New England championships.

New draft submitted on smoking

By MINDY A. ANTONIO
Collegian Staff

Recent increases in campus complaints have prompted the University Health Council to submit a new draft of a public smoking policy to the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate.

Warren Schumacher, chairman of the council, said the council's aim was to formulate a specific policy that would designate smoking and non-smoking sections in all public areas.

The draft attempts to summarize several smoking policies that are already in existence as part of the University conduct code and state law.

The new policy states that smokers must be provided with a smoking area apart from those who choose not to smoke. Smoking would be prohibited "in classrooms, public areas, auditoriums, food service areas and individual work sites, except in designated smoking spaces or as agreed to by occupants, consistent with appropriate fire and safety regulations," the proposed draft states.

The committee formulated the draft in response to requests made by the Faculty Senate, graduate senate and the personnel office. Recent research studies of the hazards of tobacco smoke also prompted the draft proposal.

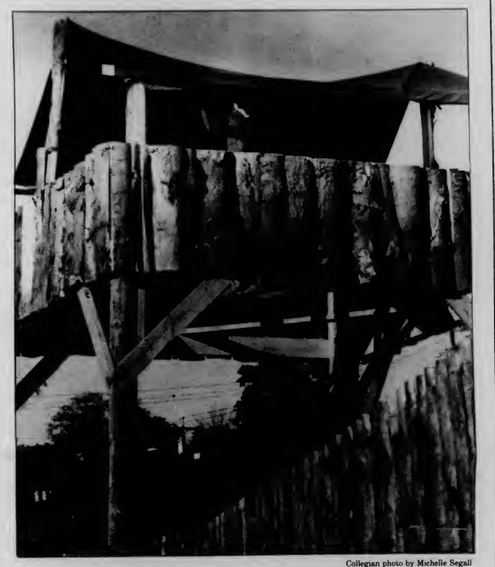
Schumacher said most complaints were coming from secretaries who were being annoyed by people smoking in their offices.

"The health council did not intend to create a new policy, but rather, wanted to highlight and bring together the already-existing policies that have been promulgated in the past," Schumacher said.

"What this policy does is it puts a pressure on the administration to enforce the old policy that states the rights of both the smoker and non-smoker," Schumacher said.

The draft also stated the dangers of tobacco smoke mising with chemicals in work and study areas such as chemical laboratories.

With the recommendation and support of Provost Richard O'Brien, the council is bringing the proposal to the Faculty Senate and is hoping it will discuss and respond to the request that the administration and faculty carry out their obligation to enforce the policy.



"What the policy is saying is that everyone has rights. If a person wants to smoke, space should be designated for him to smoke," Schumacher said.

"Non-smokers have the right to be able to breathe smoke-free air and this should be provided for them too," he said. "Nobody is trying to make a war. We're just saying that rights should be respected."

"This policy will put pressure on people in administrative posts to designate appropriate physical space for each of these groups to respect these rights," Schumacher said.

Miscommunications pose risks

Creation of center aims to reduce war

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

The United States and the Soviet Union can reduce the threat of accidental nuclear war by establishing "crisis control centers" throughout the world, an author said last night at Amherst College.

Dr. William L. Ury said the greatest risk posed by the world's nuclear weapons is war created by "a series of incidents and miscommunications." He attributes this to the current lack of efficient communication between the superpowers.

"By focusing on the risk of inadvertent, accidental nuclear war, one would be focusing on the main danger, rather than the marginal danger (of intentional nuclear war)," Ury said.

Installing worldwide control centers, linked by telecommunication systems would be only one aspect of reducing nuclear disaster, he said. Ongoing talks between defense ministers of the two nations are an essential part of Ury's recommendations for reducing the risk of war.

"Right now U.S. and U.S.S.R. military machines are constantly interacting," he said, "yet the leaders of these military establishments almost never communicate."

Ury said creating crisis control centers is politically feasible, citing a unanimous vote for such a measure by the Senate in June 1984. Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev responded to the idea positively when it was suggested to him last month, Ury said.

"We're like two mountain climbers on a precipice," he said of the two nuclear powers, "we're tied together to a rope, and if one falls, the other falls."

The U.S. assumes that "we're playing a game which one side will win and the other will lose" and that "if you don't like someone you don't have to deal with them" must change before dialogue can be successful, Ury said. He added that negotiations which concentrate on arms reduction are not effective enough.

"Not that weapons aren't important," Ury said, "but we also need to think about the human factor."

Ury is director of the Nuclear Negotiation Project at Harvard Law School and author of Beyond the Hotline: Controlling a Nuclear Crisis. He has lectured to the U.S. State Department and the Pentagon.

Last night's lecture was the first of four in a series on "New Approaches to Peace and World Security" presented by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies.

Acid rain researchers at the University of Massachusetts will embark this month on a 10-year study designed to chart further damage to state streams and ponds.

The study, phase three of the Acid Rain Monitoring Project, conducted by the Water Resources Research Center, will be a statewide effort, with nearly 500 volunteers collecting more than 2,500 samples from about 750 lakes and ponds.

"This is the most extensive project of its kind," project director Paul Godfrey said. "Our first two studies told us where we are. Phase three will tell us where we are going."

Volunteers from across the state will collect water samples from local lakes and ponds. The collected samples will be analyzed in 23 local laboratories and sent on to UMass for further analysis, Godfrey said.

Sampling begins Oct. 20 with water bodies previously sampled by state agencies, because of their importance as fisheries. In April, more than 500 water bodies will be randomly selected, in an attempt to get a balance based upon water body characteristics representative of the state.

Although the results of the first two phases of the project were comprehensive, Godfrey said the third phase will establish long-term acidification trends.

"We are looking for a trend," Godfrey said, "but it takes some time to evaluate a trend." Researchers hope to use the information to draw predictions about the nearly 5,000 bodies of water in Massachusetts.

Water bodies to be sampled by the project are evaluated on watershed size, proximity to communities and soil characteristics. Godfrey said the primary goal of the study is to "characterize the sensitivity of the water bodies."

Godfrey said they would also run tests to determine whether there are any correlations between various metals and minerals in the water and the water's ability to withstand the effects of acid rain.

Results from the first two studies indicate that 6 percent of the state's water bodies are "acidified," meaning that they can no longer support acquatic life.

In addition, 18 percent are termed "critical," and another 70 percent are "highly sensitive" or worse, meaning that at current acid rain levels these water bodies will acidify. Godfrey said water bodies are evaluated by their ability to neutralize acid.

"We have a pretty serious problem," Godfrey said. "The only real solution is to reduce acidic emmissions."

Acid rain is precipitation with a high concentration of acids from sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxide and other chemicals introduced to the atmosphere by the burning of fossil fuels. Godfrey estimates that 50 to 90 percent of the acid rain in Massachusetts is produced by industrialized Midwestern states. He said three-quarters of sulfuric acids are emmitted by electric generating facilities.

Godfrey estimated that 18 percent of the critical water bodies will be acidified within 10 years. "Even if we were to reduce emmissions by 50 percent today, it would still take 10 years to clean up. We'll still lose the ponds."

Godfrey said the project should be able to issue its first long-range projection within a year.

Hijackers kill American on Italian ship

PORT SAID, Egypt (AP) — Palestinian hijackers of an Italian cruise ship gave up yesterday, ending two days of terror for more than 500 hostages, but Italian officials said the pirates killed an American and threw him overboard.

Prime Minister Bettino Craxi identified the dead passenger as Leon Klinghoffer, 69, of New York City, who was traveling with his wife Marilyn, 58,

"Unfortunately I have to give you mournful news," he told a news conference in Rome. "In the course of this aggression, an American citizen was killed. The captain of the ship told me this a few moments ago, when I spoke with him. He was apparently killed and thrown into the sea."

The Achille Lauro's captain had said earlier that no one was injured. About a dozen Americans were aboard, and earlier unconfirmed reports had said two were killed.

The Foreign Ministry said the terrorists surrendered to representatives of the PLO. They were taken to the Port Said Naval Base.

"The hijackers, who number four, will leave Egypt," Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel-Meguid said. "The ship will go to Port Said harbor. There were no demands." He did not say where the hijackers would go from Egypt.

Company spokesmen said the cruise would continue, with the next stop Ashdod, Israel, and the passengers who had left the ship could rejoin it if they wished. Some had already been flown from Egypt to Rome.

Mental patient captured in Holyoke

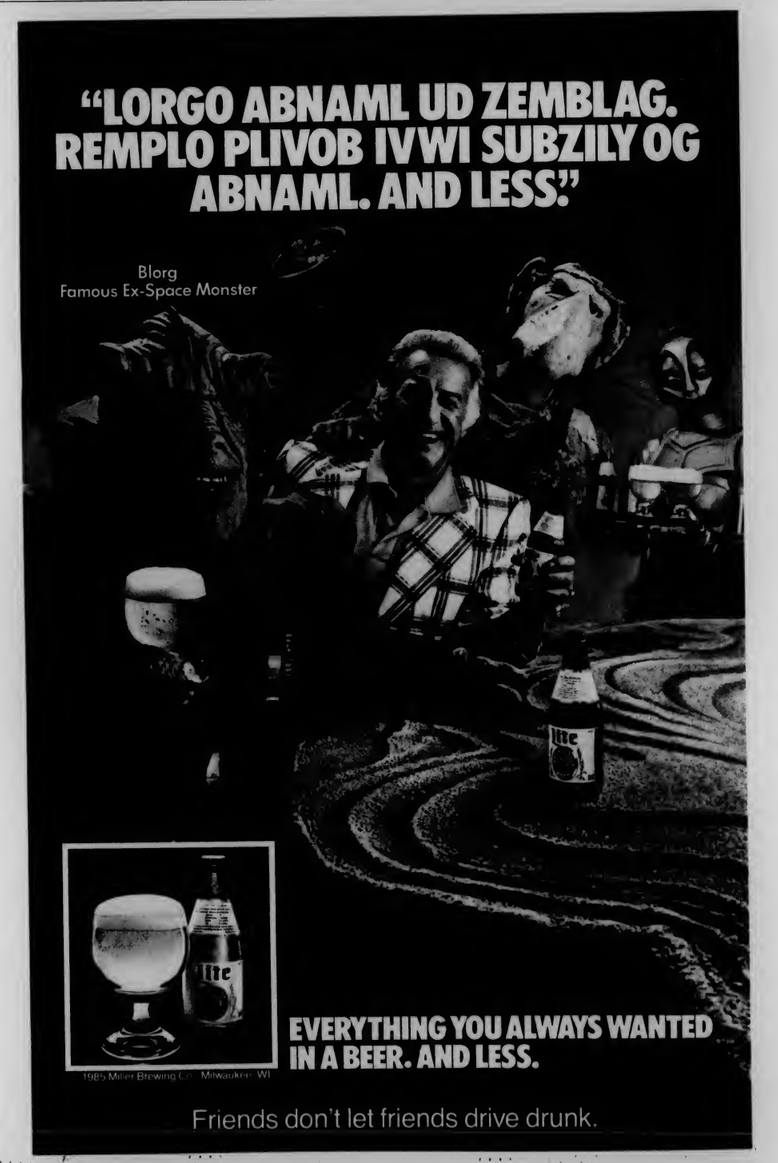
HOLYOKE (AP) — A mental patient charged with child rape who bolted during a hospital-sanctioned excursion to a Northampton movie theater was captured yesterday by the police chief, who was driving to work.

Arthur J. Chouinard, 57, formerly of Chicopee, was apprehended by Chief Harold Skelton about 8:30 a.m. Skelton said he spotted Chouinard walking on a Holyoke street and apprehended him after a brief struggle.

Chouinard was taken to Holyoke Hospital for a checkup after complaining of chest pains and then to Hampden Superior Court in Springfield, where he was scheduled to be arraigned on escape charges.

Chouinard, who was being held on $50,000 bail pending trial, escaped after a Northampton State Hospital attendent took him and another mental patient to the movies, according to Louis Berman, the state mental health department's assistant commissioner for hospital management.

Berman said yesterday that the department has launched an internal investigation into the incident. "We are concerned about the thought processes involved in making the clinical decision to allow him off the grounds and whether enough common sense was used," he said.



Berman said Chouinard had been allowed to leave the hospital grounds to attend a movie "on at least one other occasion."

Irate prosecutors have issued subpoenas for state mental health and hosptial officials to appear at a Friday court hearing to explain their decision to allow Chouinard off the hospital grounds.

Hampden County District Attorney Matthew J. Ryan said Tuesday he was "outraged" by the action.

"It is apparent something is sadly lacking when someone being held on this amount of bail is taken to the movies. Someone has got to be held responsible for this," Ryan said.

William W. Teahan Jr., assistant district attorney, said yesterday that he planned to request that Chouinard not be returned to Northampton Hospital if he was found to need psychiatric care.

Local men's organization explores women's issues

By SALLY DEANGELIS
Collegian Correspondent

Although they have no funding, and members who, over the years have mostly become inactive, a local men's organization continues to explore women's issues from a different perspective.

Affiliated with the Everywoman's Center, Men Against Violence Against Women (MAVAW) explores "men's changing roles and expressions toward women's issues through workshops and counseling in the area," according to Robert Bureau, the group's only coordinator.

Bureau voiced concern over what he sees as the campus' lack of services for men who want to learn more about sexual violence issues. At this week's meeting of the newly formed Sexual Violence Prevention Network, participants came to the conclusion that the campus is lacking in this specific service. Bureau said he hopes to widen accessibility this semester with funding and support from the Student Government Association and the administration.

"Men's participation in the women's movement has become more openly apparent. Men have to decide and define what is important to them, what they value and how they express themselves," Bureau said.

In an effort to expose some of the myths about rape and physical abuse against women, workshops, open to men and women have been held in the dorms and at the Bangs Community Center. Bureau said they continue with the purpose of "providing dialogue in a respectful way about issues of sexism as it manifests itself in society and ourselves."

Short term individual counseling is also available to men whose friends, lovers or family members are survivors of sexual assaults, harrassment or abuse. Bureau said group members are trained for counseling through the Everywoman's Center.

Bureau said he will change MAVAW's name in hopes of attracting more members toward the organization.

"The name is not positive, it's confusing and unclear."

Steven Bodkin, a founder of MAVAW, who is no longer an active member said, maintaining continuity is difficult because the campus community is so transient.

"We should all come to a consciousness against violence. Men Against Violence Against Women is just one example of the men's movement," he said.

Bureau remains hopeful about his efforts being successful. "One person becoming educated in the issues has an echoing effect. There is a transfer of this knowledge and sensitivity."

Guatamalan rights reviewed

The Faculty and Staff for Peace in Central America are sponsoring a talk about the Guatemalan Health Rights Support Project at noon tommorow in Campus Center room 168.

Curt Wands, coordinator of the project, will speak about the newly formed Washington-based organization, the purpose of which is to "maintain a primary health care program that helps meet the on-going needs of displaced and war-ravaged Guatemalans who lack many of the basic elements for human survival with dignity."

The project maintains that out of 30 countries in America, life expectancy the third lowest by the United Nations. More than 200 out of 1000 live births in Guatemala end in death before age five. Added to these statistics, the project claims 79 percent of the people live in poverty and illiteracy in some areas reaches 80 percent.

According to the its statement of purpose, the project proposes to train and supply health workers for the Guatemalan Health Movement, a group that was created as a result of "government and military policies that do not allow for community -based projects which deal with the basic causes and prevention of diseases."

Senate approves referendum to ask increase in student fees

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate last night approved a referendum that will ask for student approval in raising the Student Activity Fee $12 per year.

The activity fee provides resources for the Student Government Association to fund services, activities, and advocacy to the student community. The referendum, which will send the issue out to students for approval, is "the biggest concern in the senate in six years," said Jordan Rosener, budget committee chairman.

Rosener and SGA Treasurer Diane Rossi made a presentation to the senate, which showed that far too little activity funding is projected for fiscal year 1987. The $12 activity fee increase would "get the senate by for the next two years," they said.

"I just wanted to give some background to the issue," Rosner said of the presentation. "This issue is so big and so mighty that the students have to decide it."

The major reason for the fiscal problems is the increase in professional payroll, which will raise the payroll to 75 percent of the total SGA budget for fiscal year 1987, Rosner said. The problem began last year, when he said the professionals got a new contract calling for increases.

One professional present at the meeting, Katja Hahn d'Errico, director of the Economic Development Office, said, "If the jobs we are doing for you are important at all, set your priorities."

That's exactly what the senate will do according to Rossi, who said that a plan to educate the students on the fiscal problem will be underway. The problem, she said, "affects all the RSOs (Registered Student Organizers)," and therefore, since there are 500 of them, most students become directly involved.

The referendum is scheduled for Oct. 29 on the Campus Center Concourse and will require a 7.5 percent student vote and approval in order to be sent to the Board of Trustees.

At the start of the meeting, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey fielded questions from the senate regarding the concern of alcohol being served at two recent campus events and several other current issues.

Anti-apartheid rally will be held today

A Five-College anti-apartheid rally and teach-in, sponsored by the South African Organizational Project, will be held from 3-5 p.m. today in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College.

Guest speakers include former Boston mayoral candidate Mel King, white South African Derek Kotze and University of Massachusetts Afro-American Studies professor Michael Thelwell. They will discuss the issues of apartheid and divestment as they relate to the Five-College community.

According to South African Organizational Project member Suzinne Pak, the purpose of the rally and teach-in is to raise the level of awareness about South African issues in the Five-College area.

The event will be instrumental in "creating and developing a network of support for the anti-apartheid movement between the five colleges. The event will also express the solidarity of the members of the community with blacks in South Africa," Pak said.

A question and answer period will be held at the end of the rally and teach-in after which a resolution calling for divestment from all five colleges will be drawn up, Pak said.

As it now stands, the University has sold its stock in compliance with its investment policy while Smith, Mount Holyoke and Amherst Colleges retain investments in corporations doing business in South Africa. Hampshire College also remains divested from the country.

alto saxophonist Andre Goudbeek has a startling cadenza that revives the memory of Eric Dolphy. There are so many marches, growling brass and tongue in cheek flourishes going on, that when the band drops out for Goudbeek, it sounds as if time has stopped and held its breath. The latter composition recalls Frank Zappa's extended instrumental works. We hear quotes of "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," cowboy and Indian themes and an r & b ostinato figure played in unison by the horns, behind Breuker's screaming tenor.

The humorous edge that runs through much of their music is in boldest relief here.

"Sylvia's Proposal" is the only introspective piece among the seven selections and is a feature for the leader's emotive clarinet. It has the feel of Gil Evan's melancholy classic, "Where Flamingos Fly," except Breuker inserts a plaintive, speech-like clarinet statement. Again, the comparison with Dolphy's sound is obvious. Dolphy was a prime influence on this generation of the Dutch jazz community, having played with Mengelberg and drummer Han Bennick, fathers of modern jazz in Holland. "Kontrafunkt," as the title implies, contains some not quite straight ahead boogie.

The concluding number, "Sond of Mandalay," one of two Kurt Weill originals on the album, is a plate-balancing vaudeville romp, featuring a breakneck soprano sax solo by Breuker.

Gustav Mahler was quoted a ssaying "The symphony should be like the world; it must contain everything." It is a statement Willem Breuker and his Kollektief have taken very much to heart.

The album is simply entitled, Willem Breuker Kollektief. It has been released on a label called "About Time"—to which we can all say "Amen."

U.S. sanctuary idea naive

Peter Dow

The sanctuary movement is a growing force in America, particularly among the churches of this nation. Indeed, many refugees have been brought to this campus and to cities throughout Massachusetts to describe their ordeals, in the hope of inspiring the audience to actively oppose U.S. involvement in Central America.

The refugees and the movement's activists relate terrible stories of government torture in El Salvador and Guatemala, and, as a result, have convinced thousands of Americans to violate Federal Immigation law as "public witnesses" to "evils" of U.S. foreign policy in the region. Tragically, however, these faithful have naively accepted a movement which has deliberately misrepresented reality, and have become, in Lenin's words, "useful idiots."

The sanctuary movement's key organization is the Chicago Religious Task Force (CRTF). Its director, Renny Goldman, recently proclaimed that the flow of Guatemalan refugees "will only stop if our governments stops giving weapons to the Guatemalan government—the people's killers." Goldman is obviously an expert at stimulating sympathetic emotions; yet she is not an expert with accurate information, since she conveniently ignored the fact that the U.S. has not supplied weapons to Guatemala since 1977, when President Carter suspended all arms sales to that country.

The Sanctuary movement also claims that illegal aliens deported to El Salvador face torture and death upon return, and then buoy this claim with the personal experiences of one or two unidentifiable refugees. These claims of "certain death" have been repeated so often and with such emphasis that the absence of evidence goes unnoticed.

Currently, there are approximately 500,000 Salvadoran illegal aliens in the United States, despite the efforts of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. And, according to a study done by the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress, "70 percent of the Salvadorans apprehended by the INS return to El Salvador under a 'voluntary departure' agreement rather than a deportation order." Obviously, these aliens have no fear of death upon return to their native country. Furthermore, apprehended aliens fill out an INS asylum questionnaire if they want asylum in the U.S., and the vast majority have cited economic considerations as the primary reason for their asylum, not the "fear of death."

Not only do the sanctuary activists ignore these facts, but they also fail to provide any solid proof that those who have been deported have suffered human rights abuses upon their return. In 1982, the CRTF printed "Basta! Sanctuary Organizer's Nuts & Bolts Supplement, No. 1," and claimed that: "as of August 1982 . . . 30 percent of all refugees forcibly returned to El Salvador from the U.S. and Mexico have been tortured, maimed, or murdered upon their return."

The CRTF claimed Amnesty International as their source. Yet in June 1983, Amnest International disclaimed the quote (no doubt reluctantly), stating that "none of the facts or figures published by CRTF are accurate." In fact, contrary to CRTF claims, no Salvadoran human rights organization has reported any case of a deportee being killed since 1981. In addition, a 1983 study by the leftist ACLU, undertaken to document human rights abuses against deportees, could not establish one positive identification between and a human rights victim.

The hypocrisy of the sanctuary movement's leaders is also evident. While concentrating on Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugees, they purposely ignore the far worse plight of Nicaraguan and Cuban aliens in the Miami area, or the Nicaraguan refugees in Costa Rica and Honduras (who happen to be products of repressive communist governments).

The points made here can only lead to one conclusion—that the primary goal of the sanctuary movement is not humanitarian, but political. The goal is the undermining of American foreign policy in Central America and our national security; the tools are the well-intentioned but naive congregations in U.S. churches. It is time for American to wake itself up and see reality, before it is too late.

"Americans seem to be brimming with self-confidence when they travel abroad. They feel that everyone else is jealous of them and cannot understand why anyone would want to live anywhere else but the U.S.A. I do admire the way they are able to stand up and talk out loud without worrying about it.

"I wish your government would stop talking to the Russians in such childish language. America is no more or less evil than the Soviet Union in the way they behave in the international arena."

Kathy R., 28, cook

"I would love to live there because your standard of living is so high. My family, which is middle-class, would probably have a nice house with a swimming pool in the backyard.

"Some Americans take us as being stupid—like we are all peasants or something. They think they are big-shots but they are only giving themselves a bad name."

Albert S., 18, bartender

"I spent two years in the United States and, to be honest, didn't like it much. Of course, it probably would have been nicer if I weren't with my American relatives all of the time. They drink too much."

"We are very happy for your business but I think your attitude often leaves a bit to be desired. The Irish are a soft-spoken lot and I'm afraid Americans tend to be a bit, well, loud.

"Even though his treatment of your South Americans neighbors is awful, I like Ronald Reagan and not just because he has Irish blood. He is a very sincere man and has a lot of courage to stand up for what he believes."

"You are all crazy to freely elect a man like Ronald Reagan. He is very bad news for us because he wants to do to Europe what he has done to the United States, in terms of defense policy. All he will really accomplish is to totally split Europe in half. This is already happening."

Tony O., 33, unemployed

"It makes me angry to think that the next time your country decides to get in a war, it will poison all of us and there is nothing we can do about it."

William H., 47, fisherman

"All I know about the States comes from what I read but it appears to be a nation of great opportunities for young people. Of course, it is a very powerful country—perhaps a bit too powerful."

CATE better than nothing

Mark Rubin

After reading Dr. Ricci's column on the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide, I am really surprised that he failed to realize that his own arguments were actually in support of CATE.

Ricci's pertinent criticisms of the CATE guide can be summed up as follows; it is unscientific in it's analysis, it receives too low a response to be taken seriously, and, worst of all, it has less than favorable things to say about Exercise Science 210.

I will hand Ricci a victory on all three points. He has carefully and copiously shown us that the CATE Guide is less than efficient in evaluating his course. Ricci's next point is even better—I thoroughly applauded his brave and noble deed in opening up his University evaluations to all who want to view them. I also wholeheartedly endorse his recommendation that a reliable and accurate policy be drawn up to address the problems which affect the official evaluations.

Ricci's logic is also sound in pointing out that the "semi-official" truth of the University Evaluations are certainly better than CATE's. What Ricci completely overlooks, is that CATE knows it.

It would certainly be great if the CATE book contained the University's Evaluations; scientific, more accurate than CATE's, and definitely necessary. In 1980, CATE sued the University to try to get access to these documents—they lost. So what does a student do?

I read the CATF Guide. Not because it is the gospel of truth, but because it is all we've got. As the CATE Guide states "given that we haven't the resources or funding to perform a scientific survey, we must somewhat subjectively interpret the results . . ." There is no reason to take CATE as a farce—they state right away what their limitations are.

Allow me to elucidate on the most important limitation. Students pay professors part of their salaries and they are public employees who are responsible to us. Our check on them is our ability to judge their effectiveness. This is a large reason why the University provides a copious evaluation service.

Now, imagine the ludicrous 1980 court decision that denies thi information to students. Instead, the court left the decision to make the evaluations public in the hands of professors; either the proud ones like Ricci or the uncooperative "Dr. Refusal."

To make matters worse, given the concerned competitiveness in landing a class, just how will professors be in realising bad evaluations to a few pain-in-the-neck students? Let's face it, it does "Professor Refusal" no justice to not only be called a stiff, but to release it to over 20,000 students.

CATE's strenght is that it enters where our elite faculty refuses to yield to democracy, truly being responsible to those whom they are accountable to. And yes, Ricci is correct in his criticisms of CATE's methodology. But as soon as the anti-CATE discussion turns to voluntary evaluation disclosures, the case for CATE strengthens because it is the only sure thing we students have.

If people want to do away with the less than adequate CATE's, open up the University evaluations or increase CATE's funding. Otherwise, leave our 50 per student investment alone.

Mark Rubin is a UMass student.

How much should we pay?

Roth/Burgess

"Since the late 1960's, the Amherst Campus (UMASS) has had a critical need, but not the funding resources, for a multipurpose arena with large seating capacity which would simultaneously meet the requirements for implementing a quality program for intercollegiate hockey and basketball and provide the indoor seating capacity for major University events: convocations, concerts, and a rainy weather alternate for commencement excercises."

The above statement, written by Chancellor Duffy in September of last year is still true today. The University of Massachusetts at Amherst could certainly use a large multipurpose facility: skating is fun, concerts are great and a few new squash courts would help too.

The Cage only holds 5,000 people, not really enough to support first rate bands or provide a rain alternative for commencement. It is clear that the proposed facility would prove immensely useful to UMass. However, the issue at hand, as usual, is money.

One year ago the proposal called for student fees to support the project at $95 per student per year. Former Student Trustee Jim Keller spoke against the proposal on the basis of significant fee tuition increases in the recent past and offered alternate funding sources such as the state alumni and ticket revenues.

This project is being discussed again, only this time the fee is $160 per student, $65 dollar increase! Where do the financial planners think students will get this kind of money? Certainly not from the federal government. Is UMass experiencing gentrification? Are we going to maintain our accessability and diversity? These are essential questions that must be asked.

A recent referenda question resulted in a clear mandate that students do not support construction under the existing circumstances. A majority felt that students should not pay for this project at all, while many students felt like $20 or $50 would be appropriate. The building is for the students and it is clear what students are, and are not, willing to pay. $35 million is a tremendous amount of money for this project. Students are not infinite "funding resources" and the administration and the trustees need to recognize this.

Our job is to represent students. We feel very strongly that students are not, and should not be treated as, a source of endless amounts of money.

UMass/Amherst is the state's star institution. Quality must be sought after of course, yet we are a state land grant institution. Accessability is as equally important as quality. The state, trustees and administrators cannot ignore this responsibility if we are to be faithful to our mission. There is a delicate balance that must be achieved.

In light of our jobs as students representatives, the recent referenda, and our own personal perspective, we feel compelled to resist the proposal as it presently exists and to support the quest for alternative sources of funding.

We seek your input, reactions and ideas and encourage you to share your presepective with the administratgors and trustees as well.

Stacy Roth and Dani Burgess are the SGA co-presidents.

The different types of hugs

Herb Ramy

A much-ignored ability of the average human being is the hug. Today, I would like to discuss the different aspects of the hug, along with the ways hugs are used and abused. Hopefully, by the end of this article, people will see that hugging deserves a special place with other bodily functions such as eating, sleeping, and procreating. There are presently three types of hugs in existence, each serving a specific purpose.

The first of these hugs is the passionate hug. Although this is the first hug I am discussing, it is more than likely the least important one because of its sexual connotations. During the act of love making, the passionate hug is merely a tool by which each partner gets a better grip on the other. A passionate hug is also a very selfish hug. Each person is trying to get more out of it than the other. As we will learn, this goes against the very nature of the hug.

Our second hug is the social or relative hug. The name of this hug is fairly self explanatory. It is given to relatives or acquaintances when it is expected to be given. A family reunion is usually a hot bed of social hugging. Here you migh meet Aunt Agnes, the one who wears entirely too much makeup. Instead of a social kiss, a social hug would be much more appropriate.

The main problem with this type of hugging is that it is done more as a chore than for enjoyment. From your own experiences you should be able to see that there is lack of feelings when hugging in this manner. The only exception to this rule is the hugging of close relatives such as parents, grandparents, and siblings.

Our final type of hug has never been named, because mere words cannot capture its true essence. I refer to it simply as "the hug because someone needs a hug." The difference between this hug and the others is that there are no selfish motivations, whatsoever. This statement only gives a part of what this hug is all about. To explain it more clearly, I will try to give an example.

A friend (male or female—it doesn't matter) walks by your room, and you notice that this person has quite a somber look on his or her face. Before even asking what is wrong, you go over and give this person a hug. This may seem a bit forward, but it is usually appreciated.

As you can see, this type of hug is very simple and can be accomplished with little or no forethought. Surprisingly enough, this hug benefits both the hugger and the huggee—the reason being that no one can hug or be hugged too often. In other words, there is not way to overdose.

The idea of hugging a friend in today's society is almost unheard of, but I think that it's time for a change. I've presented the facts on hugging as clearly as I could. It is now up to you to weigh the value of hugs, and see if they are worth trying. Hopefully, you will give them a chance. They are well worth the effort.

Bible is oppressive to women

In response to Rusty Denton's column, "On Women and the Bible," I feel I must comment on a few points. Although Denton seems some-what understanding of woman's rights, he missed a few important statements in the Bible. In my opinion, the Bible oppresses woman from page 1 of Genesis.

In Genesis 1:26 it states, " . . . and God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over cattle, and over the earth, and overy every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth."

Think of that for a while. This statement shows man as the all-powering and domineering individual who has been given power over human and animal life. This oppresses woman. It's obvious. It's amazing how the Bible has had persuasive influence over contemporary thinking.

In Gen. 2:22, it states, "And the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man."

In Gen. 2:18, it states, "And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone . . ."

To me, these sections in the Bible show women as serving men and being beneath them. It states that woman was created for man's pleasure and to serve him since he is the dominant superior being of the earth. Surely this oppresses women and brings false images of gender roles into our society.

I hope people were aware of these facts before they read Denton's column. To me, oppression is written everywhere in the Bible. Trying to make any sense of gender equality out of the Bible is very difficult. Nice try, but no cigar!

Yet, there is still another point I must make aware to people. I hate to disappoint Denton and his perception of feminists, but I am not "snorting, stomping, and grinding my teeth." As a feminist myself, I am not irrational as Denton indirectly stated. I read Denton's column with interest and want him to realize that there are many people out there who have never read the Bible. I hope they realize that the Bible is full oppressive sections and must be continually explored.

Newspaper's need for accuracy

The article entitled "Indebtedness to capitalist countries is a problem in many Third World countries today" Oct. 8 represented a genuine attempt to inform the campus community of the devastating position in which Third World nations find themselves. Unfortunately, however, the article contained numerous errors. Not only were there inaccuracies, and improper and incomplete quotations, a number of other problems, such as the misspelling of my name, detracted from the general clarity and thrust of the piece.

The problem associated with the article can and should be viewed within the context of a major problem which confronts the Collegian. Without trying to impune the character and question the professionality of the staff of the Collegian, it is very obvious to those of us who take the time to read the paper that the quality of the reporting and proofreading of articles is less than what it can and ought to be.

Recognizing that the Collegian is both a training ground as well as a communication medium, I would like to humbly suggest to the management and the editorial board of the Collegian that some concerted effort be directed toward training reporters and copy editors so as to improve the readability of the paper. Looking at the article in question and numerous others, it is very evident that some work needs to be done in this area.

To those who read the article and were unable to make sense of what was being communicated—please keep your eyes attuned in the upcoming week for a more detailed and concise discussion of the problem of Third World indebtedness. This is a most pressing problem which confronts two thirds of the world's population; indeed most deserving of our attention.

A frequent saying of those who support and defend the "Military Industrial Complex" is, "for the past 40 years we have managed to preserve world peace." They base this statement on the fact that no nuclear weapons have been used since WWII. However, when the history of the past 40 years is examined, we come to see that another form of warfare has been effectively under way, nonetheless, a war in which wholesale hunger and deprivation have become internationalized as well as institutionalized. That is the socialization of poverty, sanctioned by international financial organizations such as the Club of Rome, the Paris Club, and the Trilateral Commission; presided over by multi-lateral financial institutions such as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. This wholesale proliferation of proverty is also promoted and defended by the Pentagon.

Yes, 'nordic awareness,' but . . .

Congratulations to Steven Erickson for his brilliant "nordic awareness" column. Lord knows we know far too little about this greatly oppressed people, and the column certainly opened my eyes to this forgotten tidbit of our history. One thing still puzzles me anyway—how can a continent be discovered when there are already several thousand people already living there? People who had been living there for millenia?

America was first inhabited by the Teotihuacan peoples who crossed the frozen Bering Straits from Siberia in the ice age, thousands of years before Christopher or even Leif were twinkles in their fathers' expansionistic eyes.

Being one eighth "Indian," I too protest Columbus Day, not to celebrate another "discoverer," but rather to celebrate the marvelous cultures already in existence in America. By the way, most of those cultures have since been destroyed by European exploitation and disease, such as smallpox. Remember the case of Jeffry Amherst? He, in his drive for "Indian" land gave the "Indians" of western Massachusetts blankets infested with smallpox (a disease they had no immunity to), and wiped them out completely. Aren't you glad you live in this town? Happy Columbus Day.

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

Well in case you missed it, last Tuesday was mountain day. This is the day when all classes at Smith and Mt. Holyoke are cancelled so that the women have one last chance to go to the mountains before hunting season starts. Once you've recovered from this fascinating piece of information you can get on to the rest of the week.

Today is an extremely busy and exciting kind of day. Bo Diddley will be at Pearl Street tonight. Hearing his early records makes ot clear just how he could really rock 'n roll and how much he was ripped off by the Who et. al.

Across town at the Iron Horse, Maria Muldar will be playing two sets. And if that isn't enough, Spyro Gyra, veterans of UMass spring concert, will be at the Calvin Theatre. Tickets are still available for all these events.

Paul Young will be coming to UMass. Tickets went on sale yesterday.

Friday June Millington will be playing at Pratt Hall chez Mt. Holyoke. Saturday there will be three great bands at the Zone in Springfield: Miracle Legion, Starkraving and Pat on the Back.

On Sunday the great Ruben Blades will be playing at the War Memorial in Holyoke. Les Quebecois, Le Bottine Souriante, will be playing at the Iron Horse that day as well. Ray Charles will be at Bushnell Auditorium in Hartford.

George Winston will be playing at Smith on Tuesday. That same day Cris Williamson will be at the Iron Horse.

Dutch musician a 'magician'

Willem Brueker Kollektief (About Time)
Willem Brueker Kollektief

By GLENN SIEGEL
Collegian Correspondent

As a well known troupe of European zanies are fond of saying: "And now, for something completely different . . ." This is not a review of another Miles Davis record. Instead, it is about an obscure Dutch interloper by the name of Willem Breuker and his Kollektief (Collective).

The Kollektief is as much a reflection of European roots as Basie and Ellington were of Afro-American beginnings. Just as Black musicians in this country have adapted African polyrhythms to a new set of realities resulting in the blues and jazz, the Kollektief has advanced the evolution of the marching band, beer garden om-pah-ing, European classics from Mahler to Weill, dance musics and all manner of jazz styles.

Breuker is such a monster on soprano and tenor saxophones and clarinet, that one begins to wonder about the source of such talent. Add to that the bottomless drawer-full of tricks, devices and voicings he has at his disposal as a composer and arranger, and this bearded sound magician starts to take on mythic proportion. Although Breuker formed his Kollektief in 1973, word from Holland has spread slowly. With this release on an American label, the band will reverberate on both sides of the Atlantic.

One reason for the slow pace of recognition is their place of origin. Jazz is a distinctly American art form, and with the exception of the Belgium-born guitarist Django Rheinhart, European jazz musicians of the first half century tended to slavishly copy New Orleans, swing and bop styles. Despite the impact of Europeans on the jazz scene in the last fifteen years

*April 8-12
In Shakespeare's glorious galaxy of heroes and heroines, Bertram and Helena are two of the most fascinating. UMass crews open season

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's crew teams opened their season at the Textile Regatta last weekend.

The race, held on the Merrimac River in Lowell, saw the Massachusetts women's junior varsity eight come in second with a time of 18:50 over the three mile course.

The UMass women were just a second behind the Boston University entry that turned in a time of 18:49, just edging out the UMass shell.

Other UMass results included the men's junior varsity eights taking eighth with a 17:03.

The women's varsity eight was fourth, covering the three miles in 18:10. The men's varsity was third, turning in a speedy 16.01 clocking.

Finally, the men's four was third with a 20:28.

This coming weekend, the women's crew team will be at the Mount Holyoke Regatta on the nearby Connecticut river.

The UMass men will also be on the Connecticut river, but further south, competing in the head of the Connecticut races.

Win streak ends at 15 for UMass volleyball

Spikers swept by New Haven for first loss

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The match was almost everything it was billed to be, with the exception the outcome. A highly touted University of New Haven team, ranked second in the Northeast, walked into Boyden Gym and handed the 14th-ranked University of Massachusetts volleyball team its first loss of the season, sweeping the Minutewomen 15-9, 15-11, 15-12. The loss ended the spiker unbeaten streak at 15.

"We came in as the underdog," said UNH head coach Deborah Chin. "They are in a very good team, but we think we have a very good team also. They (UMass) played an outstanding match."

UMass came out storming in the infant stages of game one, jumping out to a quick 9-0 advantage behind the serving of senior hitter Sally Mahar and the blocking of sophomore middle hitter Marcy Guiliotis and freshman setter Juliet Primer. At that point it looked like the rout was on.

But New Haven had other ideas. The Chargers went on to tally 15 straight points and beat a bewildered UMass team 15-9 in game one.

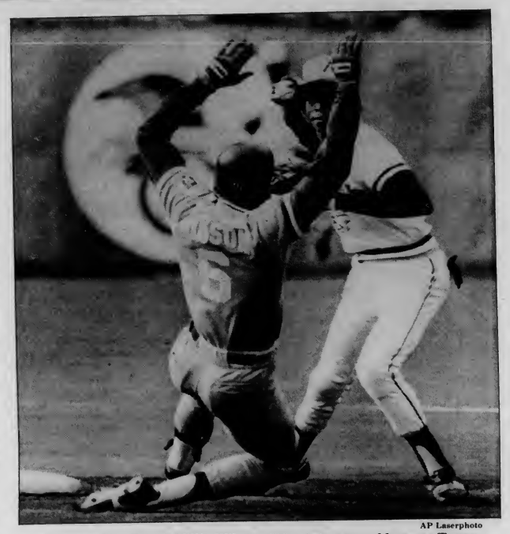
"We obviously didn't play well," said UM head coach Elaine Sortino. "We got out to that quick lead, and then we stopped playing. Ten of the 15 points they scored were off our mistakes."

The Minutewomen seemed to regroup in game two. UNH led 5-3, but UMass came back to tie the score 5-5 thanks to a Guiliotis roof block and a New Haven miscue. UNH then put together another scoring spree, this time racing to a 13-5 lead.

However, the spikers put together a streak of their own and closed to 13-10 paced by two more Guiliotis roof blocks and several Charger errors. UNH gained a 14-10 lead on a UMass mistake, and went on to take game two, 15-11.

"We were very timid after that run in game one," said Sortino. "We certainly can't play like that. It's just not our style to play tentatively."

The Minutewomen led 5-3 early in game three. UNH closed to 5-4, but the spiker lead bulged to 7-4, keyed by a Barbara Meehan block. New Haven tied the score at 7-7 before another Guiliotis block gave UMass a one point advantage, 8-7.



The UMass lead would grow to 12-10 behind a Violetta Gladkowska block. Again, UNH closed the gap, knotting the score at 12-12. New Haven then capitalized on crucial UMass miss-hitsand came away with a 15-12 game three victory to complete the sweep.

A glaring factor in the match was the presence of New Haven middle hitter Shirley Bacon. Bacon was a dominating force in the middle of the UNH attach both offensively and defensively.

"Having her back made a difference," said Chin. "Unless you're able to do something out of the middle in volleyball, you're just putting your outside hitter against two strong blocks. You can't win like that."

"She hurt us on some points and side outs," said Sortino. "But I can't blame her for the way we played."

"I don't feel bad about the loss," said Sortino. "I just feel bad that we didn't play. Losses will happen in this game."

Booters topple Wildcats

DURHAM, N.H.--Defending NCAA champion North Carolina is next for the undefeated third ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team after they disposed of unranked New Hampshire 4-0 here yesterday.

The second seeded and four-time National champion Tar Heels face UMass at Boyden on Saturday at 11 a.m.

UMass, 8-0, registered its seventh shutout of the year."It wasn't the prettiest win in the world but we won," UMass coach Kalekeni Banda said."UNH played us tough with what skill they had."

Fullback Debbie Belkin scored her fourth goal of the year to give UM the 1-0 lead with 13:40 gone in the first half. Belkin headed in a corner kick from Carolyn Micheel, her eighth assist of the year.

Then Belkin teamed up with freshman foward Beth Roundtree for the fourth time in three games. Roundtree gave UM the 2-0 lead with 7:40 to go in the half. Belkin assisted on Roundtree goals against UConn and Rutgers (2).

Goals by Cathy Spence (Sue Bird assist) and Michele Powers (Cathy Cassady assist) finished up the scoring. UMass outshot UNH by a 19-3 margin and UM's Carla DeSantis stopped three shots, all in the first half.

Wildcat coach Margie Anderson, who played for UMass and Banda in 1981 and 1982, didn't have any comment on the game.

Water polo drops three

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts water polo team had a tough time last weekend at its first league tournament, leaving Harvard University with a 1-3 record.

All three loses were by one goal with another going into overtime. In a match against Brown, leading scorer Mike Hoover was lost for the season with a broken hand.

In the first match of the tourney against 11th-ranked Brown, UMass played tough but was hurt by Hoover's injury and another top scorer, Bill Feeney, fouling out in the first quarter.

However, two player came on for UMass to take up the scoring slack. Both Jim Flannery and Owen McGonagle played well as UMass tied the game at eight with two minutes left. The game went into overtime.

The teams continued through a second overtime and into sudden death, thanks to the solid play of UMass goalie Fred Marius (15 saves). Brown received a free shot after a UMass penalty and converted, to win the game.

UMass also lost to Yale (9-8), to Harvard (6-5) but defeated MIT, 6-2.

A columnist returns with a few questions

Russ Whinnem

The much-maligned baseball season is moving into the playoffs, the NBA and NHL campaigns get underway soon, and the NFL is starting to hit high gear. In no time at all, the four major sports will be running into each other simultaneously, creating quite the sports page jam. Before all this happens, it seems like a good idea to throw some points out for serious discussion.

How many baseball fans are still having trouble accepting the Toronto Blue Jays as division champions? It almost seems unAmerican to root for a Canadian team to win a baseball championship. Hey, take off you hosers, eh?

Was it my imagination, or was that Brian Brennen, former Boston College star receiver whom the Patriots bypassed in the draft two years ago, making a variety of incredible catches against New England Sunday for the Cleveland Browns?

And isn't that also John Tudor, who was given up on in Boston, starting in the first game of the National League championship series tonight for St. Louis, after having a Cy Young caliber season?

Is it a coincidence that both the Patriots and Red Sox owners have the same last name? Are they really related in some way? Do they simply think alike? So many questions.

It seems that Oil Can Boyd could become a great pitcher if he only tones down the frequent emotional outbursts. He also has to stay away from the death wish confrontations with Jim Rice in the clubhouse.

Saw that Marvin Webster called his own press conference to announce that Patrick Ewing will have to beat him out for the starting center's position on the Knicks. Sure Marvin, whatever you say.

Islander star John Tonelli ended his contract holdout yesterday, saying that significant progress was being made. In this case, significant progress means the season is starting and Tonelli doesn't want to lose his job.

When the Hartford Whalers front office puts you on hold, they play a highlight tape while you wait. It consists of one highlight. Remember that goal?

John Mugabi, Marvelous Marvin Hagler's next toy for destruction, claims he stepped aside for six months to allow Thomas Hearns to fight Marvin first. Does Mugabi realize he has made a good career decision? He has delayed his retirement from boxing by about six months.

Watching Michael Spinks dethrone Larry Holmes brought some questions to mind. Does Leon have his drivers license yet? When will the town of Brockton hold a parade in Holmes' honor? When will Larry Merchant get a new tuxedo? Does anyone really think Holmes' will go down in history as a great champion?

(Russ Whinnem is a Collegian staff writer returning after a semester as an intern as WNEV-TV. A sports columnist before his departure, Russ will continue writing columns for the newspaper this year).

UMass teams rolling this fall

Ohio State, UCLA maybe, but the University of Massachusetts a sports factory?

The five major UMass fall teams (football, field hockey, volleyball and men's and women's soccer) are a combined 41-8-1 (not including last night's volleyball game).

Few schools, if any, can boast of such a combined record. The women's soccer (8-0 and ranked second nationally) and volleyball (15-0 and ranked 12th nationally) have led the parade of success.

The men's soccer team (10-3 and ranked second in New England) is on the verge of a national ranking while the football team (2-3) was ranked 17th at one point.

The field hockey team, currently ranked ninth in the nation, has slid a little lately, but are still 6-2-1 and could make the NCAA tournament.

The University of Massachusetts a sports factory? Seems that way this fall.

UM profs running on third party

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts professors are working in one of the nation's poorest cities in an attempt to lay the groundwork for a third major American political party.

"If and when the major parties in the United States abandon the major concerns for social justice, we hope to show that we can establish a major third party," Economics Professor Richard D. Wolff said in a telephone interview yesterday.

Wolff, 43, is running on the Green Party's ticket for mayor of New Haven. UMass Labor Studies Professor Frank Anunziato is running on the ticket for the position of New Haven City Clerk.

Incumbent Democratic Mayor Biagio DiLieto, and University of New Haven political science Professor Caroline Dinegar, a Republican, are also running for mayor in the city that the U.S. Department of the Census ranked as the 7th poorest in the nation in 1980.

"Earlier this year a large group of people were deeply disturbed that the local democratic party in New Haven had moved substantially to the right," Wolff said.

Wolff, a 22-year resident of New Haven, said the city's democratic leaders have tried to reverse the economic

Academia vs. Accuracy:

Duffey to debate

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey will lock horns Monday with a member of a group advocating the monitoring of professors.

Duffey will debate Reid Irvine, a member of Accuracy in Academia, at 11 a.m. on Cable News Network (CNN). The group, formed by the Washington-based Accuracy in Media, has targeted the University of Massachusetts as one of several colleges requiring monitoring by students. In a September interview, Executive Director, Les Csorba III, said the group was formed "to combat the dissemination of misinformation," in colleges and universities across the country.

"We are looking for misinformation in the classroom, whether its coming from the left, right or center," he said. "It just so happens to be that all our information is that the threat is coming from the left."

Csorba said he is asking students in classrooms to record professors' statements and send them to the group which will determine their correctness. He said the professors will be asked to acknowledge alleged errors and if they don't, the statements will be published in a monthly newsletter.

Csorba said his group has received more letters about UMass than he has about most schools. "Apparently, from what we've heard, the economics department doesn't always provide a balanced view," he said.

Duffey was invited by CNN and will travel to New York for the debate.

UM prof sees famous comet

By SANDY BAILEY
Collegian Correspondent

Halley's Comet, which makes an appearance once every 76 years, is scheduled to appear early next year but has already been spotted by a University of Massachusetts professor, making him the first American to spot the famous comet.

Peter Schloerb, associate professor of astronomy, spotted Halley's Comet several weeks ago using a radiotelescope at the National Radiosastronomy Observatory in Greenbank, West Virginia.

Last seen in 1910, the comet will be observable with the naked eye as early as December, said Schloerb, noting that best viewing will occur in late March and early April of next year.

Schloerb and colleague Mark Claussen began tracking the comet in July with a radiotelescope which detects weaker radio signals emitted by molecules breaking up as the comet is warmed by the sun.

"Comets typically appear very suddenly so we have little chance to coordinate observation," said Schloerb. Halley's comet is important because it is a periodic comet and scientists can plan ahead for it, he added.

Because Halley's is so well-known and is one of the brightest of the periodic comets, scientists have prepared an extensive range of experiments. Schloerb and William Irvine, director of the Five-College Radioastronomy Observatory, are leading the International Halley's Watch which involves 900 astronomers and 100 observatories in 47 countries.

"This is a good example of collaboration," Schloerb said. "Together we make a much stronger experiment than as individuals."

Smith raps apartheid

By BRION MCALARNEY
Collegian Staff

Divestment was the message sent by a group of guest speakers and faculty to the Smith College Board of Trustees yesterday at the Five College Anti-Apartheid Rally/Teach-in at Smith College.

The rally, held at John M. Greene Hall with about 120 in attendance, was an attempt to educate the student body on apartheid in South Africa and create a network of communication in the Five College area said Suzinne Pak, chairman of the Ethical Investment Committee at Smith College and coordinator of the rally.

Apartheid is the system of law which limits the rights of blacks in white minority South Africa.

"We want to have all five colleges attend the trustee meetings," she said, referring to a student meeting scheduled with trustees Oct. 26.

Among the speakers yesterday was Mel King, state representative and head of the Boston Rainbow Coalition.

"You must know corporations would not be there if it was not an exploitive labor situation," King said. "The minute the dollar sign shows that they are in the red, they will leave.

"If Smith College has money tied up in these corporations, they are saying that these are the values we are perpetuating,"he added.

King criticized investors who claim they are helping South Africa by investing in that country.

"I would ask the Trustees to be bold in their beliefs and go to South Africa and say something out loud to end apartheid, put their mouth where their money is," he said.

King urged students to "take the movement back to your dormitories, streets, get on airwaves, so people know why its so important we struggle...to change policies at Smith."

Michael Thelwell, professor of Afro-American studies at the University of Massachusetts, criticized President Reagan's approach to apartheid.

"Oppression in South Africa is made possible by western participation, by their trade and investment...if Reagan had an ounce of intelligence, morality, he would take the lead on this issue," Thelwell said.

Professor kept CIA money

CAMBRIDGE (AP)—An investigation was underway at Harvard University yesterday into a report that a professor broke university rules by keeping all of a $50,000 grant from the Central Intelligence Agency.

Nadav Safran, director of the Center for Middle Eastern Studies, told the student newspaper The Harvard Crimson the CIA gave him the money for a closed conference next week on Islam and Muslim politics.

Under university rules, professors must clear government grants in advance and pay Harvard two-thirds of all grant money to cover such overhead costs as researcher salaries. Faculty guidelines also prohibit secret or classified research on campus.

Faculty Dean A. Michael spence said in a prepared statement the matter was "of serious concern to me," but refused furthr comment until he had finished his investigation.

"He has nothing at this time to add beyong the statement," his assistant, Betty Woodward, said yesterday. Safran declined to discuss the matter until the university had finished its inquiry.

Safran told The Crimson Wednesday he kept the money because he arranged the conference on his own rather than on behalf of the Center for Middle Eastern Studies, even though, according to the newspaper, invitations went out on Harvard newspapers.

"I did not do it through the center because of the 60 percent...and all the red tape," Safran said. "I don't think it is a 'serious concern.' I'm not blind to the fact that some people think the CIA is a leper."

Reagan: 'turn over pirates'

ROME (AP)—Soon after President Reagan demanded that four Palestinian sea pirates be turned over for prosecution; a plane carrying the hijackers was escorted last night to a NATO base by U.S. military aircraft officials said.

Further details were not available.

Two Reagan administration officials said they believed the four hijackers, who were accused of killing the elderly American passenger aboard the Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro, had been sent to an airport outside Cairo in early afternoon EDT and that Egyptian authorities were preparing to fly them to an unknown destination.

By late afternoon, another official said, "Right now we can't honestly say where they are." He, like the other officials, spoke on condition of anonymity.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak said the hijackers had become the Palestine Liberation Organization's responsibility, but a PLO spokesman in Tunisia said the pirates had not been turned over.

White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan, told of the reports that the hijackers were at the Al Maza airport, said, "We know what the latest information is, but we are not sure of that and are still checking it out."

First AIDS student at Boston schools

BOSTON (AP)—A boy suffering from AIDS reportedly is attending a public elementary school in Boston, the first student in the city system reported to have the often-fatal disease.

Boston School Superintendent Laval S. Wilson would not confirm or deny the report Wednesday according to The Boston Globe and The Boston Herald. Both papers said they were told of the boy by unidentified sources.

The boy reportedly contracted acquired immune deficiency syndrome through a blood transfusion and attends the Harriet A. Baldwin School in the Brighton section, which has about 300 students enrolled in kindergarten through 5th grade. The Herald said it was told the boy recently transferred to the school.

An AIDS policy for students, similar to one recently adopted by the state, was drawn up last June by Robert R. Spillane, then superintendent of schools.

Amherst College life altered with fraternity ban

By MICHELLE GOODWIN
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst College students are filling in the gaps of their social life left by the administration's decision nearly two years ago to ban fraternities on campus.

The historical houses, once used for fraternity organizations, are now used as extensions of dormitory houses and for on-campus parties.

"When the administration closed the frats, they offered no provisions which left a void in the social life," said Steve Tober, an Amherst College junior. Tober said the completion of a new student union, which will centralize social activities, is scheduled for completion by 1988.

"With the end of the fraternities came a shift from large parties to smaller more personal parties," Ian Thomas, a junior at Amherst, said. The college still funds parties and bands, "everything except alcohol," he said.

In keeping with the tougher Massachusetts drinking laws, bartenders are hired for parties to check identification and serve the drinks. "The security has cracked down this year with the rased drinking age, but there are still ways to get drinks at a party," said sophomore Colleen Foley.

Despite the fraternity ban, many of the houses continue to carry out old traditions. There are still established parties each week that are based on the past house's reputation.

Keelin Brennan, said she still is a member of the national fraternity Psi Upsilon in spirit. She said she was drawn to the group because of similar interests and remains loyal to the fraternity.

"The first year, only 25 percent of the students in a particular frat could remain in the house. This year the quota has been dropped," Brennan said.

"Frat activities have practically faded in the past two years," senior Carol Chickering said. Chickering chose to remain in the house where she once belonged to a fraternity.

Although she said she thinks the administration made a wise decision, she disagrees with the school moving in to reform an aspect of social life which should have been an individual choice.

"Two ex-coed fraternities are in the process of making overtures with the nationals (fraternities) for a national charter to become underground, all-male fraternities," Chickering said.

"The school abolished coed frats, but in my mind the creation of underground frats is far worse," she said.

The century-old fraternity system was banned from the college two years ago despite many protests from students who fought vigorously to keep the 624-member system on campus.

Other than house parties initiated by students, there are currently few functions promoted by the college.

Christian Fellowship, which has 150 students involved, is one of the student groups on campus which offers alternatives to traditional social activities. It sponsors lectures, dances and other Christian activities at the college.

NATO will drain US budget dry

By CAROLYN PHILLIPS
Collegian Correspondent

The United States could save almost half of its military defense budget if it withdrew from NATO, a former high-level Pentagon official said last night in a lecture at Amherst College.

"NATO is not an alliance like those in history where nations pool their resources commonly," Professor Earl Ravanel of Georgetown University said. "NATO consists of a unilateral guarantee of nuclear support in Western Europe."

"NATO has always required between 40 or 50 percent of the total American defense budget," —Earl Ravanel, former Pentagon official.

According to Ravanel, a professor of international relations, the protection of more than our own citizens or "extended deterence" included in the NATO agreement requires the United States to adopt a policy of "redundency of nuclear weapons."

"For the moment, extended deterence is unattainable technologically," Ravanel said. In order to attain counterforce capability, a first strike capability must first be achieved.

The costs of setting up both first and second strike capability that can "limit damage to tolerable levels" are phenomenal, according to Ravanel. "NATO has always required between 40 or 50 percent of the total American defense budget," he said.

"Out of the $314 billion requested by Ronald Reagan for the 1986 defense budget, $241 billion is for the cost of general purpose defense. Out of this $241 billion $134 billion is to go to the defense of Western Europe," Ravanel said. He predicted by 1995 $2.2 trillion will have been spent in support of NATO.

"I would opt for a no first use posture," Ravanel said. "Such a doctrine in my own mind equates to the dissolution of NATO."

If the United States pulls out of NATO, the projected budget accumulation for the defense of Western Europe would be $800 billion by 1995 instead of $2.2 trillion, Ravanel predicted.

"The results of the dissolution of NATO are unpredictable," according to Ravanel. We don't know that the Soviets will attack Western Europe if the United States withdraws support. What will happen if the Soviets do attack cannot be predicted either. We don't know what communist control in NATO countries will mean for the United States, he said.

"We do know, however, the costs and risks of remaining in the NATO alliance," Ravanel said.

"Comets are in some sense a lot of nothing."

—Peter Schloerb, UMass astronomy professor

Radioastronomers can monitor aspects of the comet that are not observable using optical telescopes because a radiotelescope can be used during both night and day. The radiotelescope measures the velocity of gases flowing from the comet and can detect the presence of other molecules that might be part of the comet's nucleus.

Schloerb said the radiotelescope functions like a car radio but instead of playing the signal out over loudspeakers, it records the signal on a computer.

"Comets are in some sense a lot of nothing," he said. "The comet nucleus is kind of like a big, dirty snowball: ice, water and dirt." As the comet nears the sun, the particles cannot hold together, sunlight breaks the molecules apart and hydroxyl is produced as a result of this water vapor process.

The Five-College Radioastronomy Observatory at Quabbin Reservoir has one of the world's most sensitive telescopes for observing the primary molecules in the comet's nucleus and the Greenbank telescope is one of the most sensitive to hydroxyl, Schloerb said.

"I'm hoping one or both of these observatories will make a major contribution to the study of comets," he said.

Union barred at meeting

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

The director of employee labor relations at the University of Massachusetts denied the request of union officials to attend a meeting of the Board of Regents of Higher Education this week.

Jonathan Tuttle, president of the local union for service and maintenance workers at the University said that H.S. Overing, the director of labor relations, deemed "inappropriate" the union's request for special work releases to attend Tuesday's regents meeting in Boston. The meeting addressed the issue of affirmative action in collective bargaining.

"Under the circumstances, I had clear authority to grant or deny any release," Overing said. He said he denied the release at the recommendation of the board's office of employee relations. The associate director of the office, Roy Millbury, confirmed that statement.

Tuttle said the contract between the University and the union allows the workers to request "special releases" to attend meetings of state agencies that directly affect the union.

The regents voted Tuesday to approve an affirmative action policy package that places much of the burden of seeking minority candidates on the collective bargaining process.

Tuttle called the regents' document "fairly nebbish; it says they've been doing terrible and trying to do better."

The new affirmative action policies propose implementation of a new minority recruitment in the collective bargaining process, which places a greater burden on labor unions of the state's public colleges and universities.

Tower theft, arrest made

An 18-year-old man was arrested and charged with armed robbery Wednesday afternoon in Washington Tower, University of Massachusetts police said.

The student assaulted another student on the 10th and 11th floors and was charged with armed robbery, larceny, and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, a knife. The man turned himself to the police. He was released on bail and was arraigned in court yesterday, police said.

In other police reports:

A woman was assaulted Wednesday in lot 44 outside of Brown House. She knew her assailant and had had former confrontations with him. Police said she received minor cuts and bruises.

A 1971 Mercedes received over $500 in damages when it was hit by a 1975 Toyota Wednesday afternoon in lot 31, police said. The driver of the Toyota was cited for failure to use care in backing and having an invalid inspection sticker, police said.

Two balance scales valued at $700 were reported stolen Wednesday afternoon from the 15th floor of the Graduate Research Center. They had been missing since Monday, police said.

decline of New Haven by subsidizing businesses in the city, including Yale University, "the city's biggest business.

"Yale University, on principle, refuses to pay any taxes whatsoever on its educational property," Wolff said. "The taxpayers of New Haven have to pay for delivering services to Yale University which refuses to pay for those services."

According to Wolff, New Haven has the highest property tax rate in Connecticut. "It's a kind of reverse Robin Hood arrangement in which the rich live off the poor. The ironic fact is that the seventh poorest city in the nation is subsidizing the second richest University in the country," Wolff said.

According to Wolf, the Green Party hopes to end this practice of subsidizing business and attempt to rebuild New Haven's economy through improvement of public schools and municipal services.

Wolff, who obtained his Ph.D. in economics from Yale University in 1969, teaches Marxian economics, European economic history and introductory economics courses at UMass.

Neo-McCarthyism hits UM

Ian Polumbaum

There's a new extracurricular—or perhaps curricular—activity on American college campuses: Marxist-monitoring.

By volunteering a few hours of course time each week, students at more than 100 campuses can become secret informers for Accuracy in Academia, a Washington-based group whose declared mission is to expose leftist "misinformation" in the classroom.

Accuracy for Academia's leaders recruit students to sit in on classes and report "questionable"—read non-conservative—teachings, so that they can intimidate the offending instructors, either through direct confrontation, or by attacking them in a newsletter.

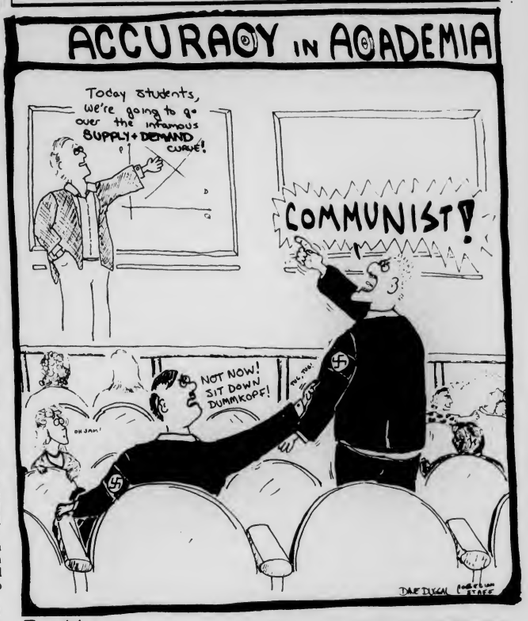
My generation missed out on Sen. Joseph McCarthy's call to flush out Communists from under every bed in the 1950s. but according to Accuracy in Academia's executive director, Laslo Csorba III, there's plenty of smearing to be done today. He charges there are 10,000 professors in the United States who are "trying to covertly convert their students to radical causes."

Ten thousand! We've come a long way. McCarthy's now-infamous 1950 speech, warning of subversives in the State Department, cited only 205 villains.

I wonder who among my classmates at UMass/Amherst, where I will return in January after a six-month leave, has been drawn into this crusade—and why. Becoming one of Csorba's collegiate minions requires more than a right-wing politician bent. It involves a rejection of what higher education is all about: hearing different views and encouraging oneself to be critical.

Certainly there are leftist professors—including Boston University's Howard Zinn, Harvard's George Wald, UMass' Samuel Bowles, all of whom have been marked for scrutiny by the group—just as there are the Richard Pipeses and Milton Friedmans and Henry Kissingers of academia, usually disposed to pushing their own political views.

After hearing a professorial position with which I disagree, or think I disagree, I try to call up the courage and the knowledge to argue against it. Failing there, as usually happens, students often struggle with the question in their minds. This is exactly what the best instructors hope for: that if they don't spark debate, they at least provoke reflection.



This seems to have been lost on Accuracy in Academia. Like Reed Irvine's Accuracy in Media, the right-wing news-monitoring organization of which it is a spinoff, this group portrays itself as an objective watchdog—while aiming not to promote balance, but to stampt out views that don't jibe with its vision of how the world should be.

College is supposed to cultivate young adults' ability to think. Disagreements with instructors—and among them—can only help.

What intellectual enrichment can be gained by volunteering to sit in a classroom holding each comment up to a reactionary litmus test, furtively recording suspect statements in a notebook or tape machine, then slithering to the phone or mailbox to report to Anticommunist Mission Control in DC so that the professor can be dragged through the mud?

Not much pride can be garnered from this either—just a perverse satisfaction which is often mistaken for patriotism and which, sadly, has not yet been banished to another era.

Ian Polumbaum, currently an editorial assistant at the Boston Globe, is a member of the University of Massachusetts class of 1986.

Generalizations unacceptable

I am writing in response to the article on the Celtics that appeared in the Oct. 8 issue of the Collegian. I am sure that Peter Abraham feels that his views are the end all in sports commentary, and I almost feel sorry that I have to tear apart his rendition of the generalization blues.

I will start with the "pretenders to the throne." I am certain that in all Abraham's sports wisdom there is just not room for names like the Philadelphia 76ers, Houston Rockets, or the Denver Nuggets, to name a few. But on to more important things, being that sports are so trivial to my point. Do not get me wrong, I am a sports fan too, but I do not feel that sports are the end all and I find it unnecessary for the Collegian to have articles about the Celtics' line-up surrounded by so many vague generalizations about everything under the sun.

I am certain that New York State would be interested to hear how it has a "lack of decent colleges." I guess Abraham again does not have room in his vast knowledge for the following names: Columbia University, Cornell University, New York University, University of Rochester, St. Lawrence University, Syracuse University, Vassar College—need I go any further?

I also find it very unnecessary for the Collegian to allow such stereotypical statements such as "so put that in your Mercedes and take it back to the Island" in their paper. I hate to disillusion Abraham, but not everybody on Long Island has a Mercedes and even if they did, what concern is it of Abraham? (No, I am not from Long Island.)

If Abraham would like to tell the whole world about the Celtics and how awesome they are, then more power to him. Maybe in the future though, he will avoid making vague generalizations about things which he obviously knows little about.

New Yorkers demand apology

In defense of all New York residents who have chosen to attend the University of Massachusetts, I would like to voice my adamant dissatisfaction with Peter Abraham's comments in the Oct. 8 Collegian. Abraham, through his position on the Collegian staff, has taken it upon himself to insult and degrade the educational opportunities of the State of New York. With his comment, Abraham has demonstrated as few have, their ignorance of a given situation. Since he feels compelled to believe that there is a "lack of decent colleges" in New York, I also feel compelled to remind him of one of the finest state university systems in the nation as well as the outstanding private institutions which the state has to offer. A small smapling of these outstanding academic establishments are Columbia University, Cornell University, the Cooper Union Institute, as well as New York University and the Rochester Institute of Technology.

Although Abraham may have intended his comments to be somehow good-natured, I find it insulting and thoroughly misleading. As well as insulting the New York State educational community, ABraham said that he almost felt bad for us New Yorkers. Well as a resident of Queens, New York for 18 years I feel bad for Abraham since he has obviously deluded himself. Abraham's apology is expected and would be graciously accepted.

Republican presents defense

In response to Timothy Harris' letter in last week's Collegian I would like to say that the UMass Republican Club shares with Harris complete revulsion at all institutions of racism. It is unfortunate, however, that he does not realize that most racism in the world today emanates from teh left-wing extreemism with which he sympathises. The Soviet Union, for example, is one of the most racist nations on earth. Sadly, many Americans are more concerned with achieveing "Detente" and "International Brotherhood" with these mass murderers than they are with the lives of helpless Jews and Afghans. Similarly, many of leftist presuation acutaly sympathise with the PLO, thus condoning or at least overlooking Yassar Arafat's attempts to finish Hitler's evil work. I would also consider to be racist people who demean black and Hispanic Americans by calling them "Third World."

In concluding his statement, Harris writes, "there are those who would slash the SGA affirmative action office budget by 75 percent...while leaving the well-padded UMass Republican Club budget completely unscathed." First, our budget is minute when compared with the size of our membership and the budgets of much smaller left-wing advocacy groups; second, last year our budget was cut 22 percent as our membership grew 50 percent. Harris' last statement, therefore, was completely untrue. The affirmative action budget was cut 75 percent, but this was achieved by eliminating a salaried affirmative action officer and salaried assitant during summer and winter break when this function is totally useless, for there is no hiring going on at those times. By eliminating this boondoggle the SGA was able to fund a dozen RSOs including the Republican Club and Harris' Radical Student Union.

One last thing that can be said about the UMass Republican Club budget is that we don't have any paid positions to give to our friends comfortable but useless summer jobs at the student body's expense.

Loren Spivack, president
UMass Republican Club

Editor accused of tactlessness

I want to respond to Peter Abraham's article "sorry New Yorkers, but Celtics will rule." I am not an avid sports fan, but I am from New York. To be more specific I am an "Islander." His article could have been very amusing and informative, as he seems to be quite knowledgable in the sports field, but his tact is lacking. His comments about NY State schools and Long Islanders were unnecessary and insulting.

Where does his resentment towards New Yorkers come from? It can't possible be from our sports rivalry alone, especially since the Celtics have always done so well. Maybe in future articles he will stick to the sporting rivalry he is addressing and leave his personal sentiments out. As Sports Editor of the Collegian Abraham should know better. Well, have fun rooting for the Celtics—but watch out for us New Yorkers—we're winners both on and off the court.

Spyro Gyra parties in Noho

SPYRO GYRA
Calvin Theater, Northampton
Thursday, Oct. 10

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

Spyro Gyra, high priests of the jazz/rock mixture called fusion, played to a worshipful crowd at the Calvin last night.

Concert Review

"An enthusiastic audience," sax player Jay Beckenstein noted after the band opened with "Free Time."

Justifiably so. The band turned out an hour-and-a-half set so tight and sharp, you'd swear they'd taught God Himself to play.

Dave Samuels, who'd munched on greasy popcorn before the show, had no trouble holding onto his magical mallets, and Tom Schuman delivered mindbending keyboard work. Percussionist Gerardo Velez and guitarist Julio Fernandez leaped around the stage like acrobats. Richie Morales put forth a heavy-duty drum solo.

The set was dominated with cuts from the group's latest album, "Alternating Currents," including the lovely and eloquent "Taking the Plunge," which Beckenstein wrote when he got married last year, and "Carribbe," with a subtle reggae flavor. A few Spyro classics were also thrown in--notably "Catching the Sun" and "Morning Dance." (Beckenstein tried to retire the latter last March; "You do anything for seven years, and it's going to get a little stale." Audiences persuaded him to dust it off).

Backstage with the Band

Giving fusion a good name

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

The group was named at 4 a.m. in a Buffalo, N.Y. bar, back in '75. They were being billed as Tuesday Night—Jazz Jam, and the bar's manager, who was concerned about advertising, threatened saxophonist/leader Jay Beckenstein with being fired unless he came up with something better.

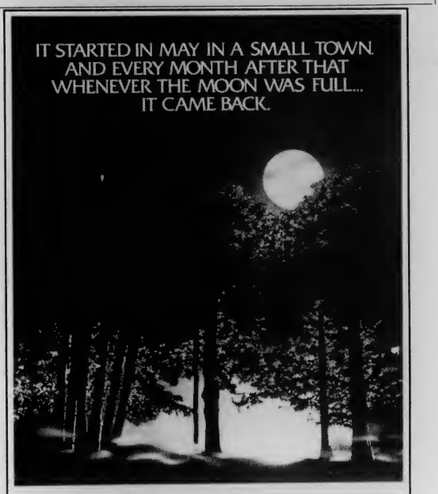
Beckenstein, then a premed student, had just written a paper on "a little algae"

"So I said, in complete and utter facetiousness, 'You can call it Spirogyra, for all I care.'"

The manager did.

The unique spelling of the group's name—Spyro Gyra—was not due to any efforts at being cute; the bar's manager was a less-than-perfect speller.

But despite such inauspicious beginnings, the seven-member jazz/fusion ensemble has cut nine albums and become a hot ticket on the concert circuit, playing the Boston Globe and Newport Jazz Festivals, as well as headlining the 1984 Spring Concert right here at UMass.



Beckenstein can't quite decide whether he prefers playing indoors or out:

"It depends on the weather," he laughed in a recent Collegian interview. "Production values are better indoors; the sound is better. But—and this is a big but—a huge outdoor concert can have an audience with spectacular energy. If it's the right audience with the right situation, it blows you away."

AHORA serves Latin community

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

The Latin American organization AHORA was founded in 1972 by a group of Latin American students who wanted their own organization and representation on campus.

According to their constitution, the specific purposes of the organization are to address the problems encountered by Spanish-speaking students of Western Massachusetts in the following manner;

• To research, initiate, and carry through educational programs, which will meet the needs of the Latin-American community, including those directed toward careers and job, as well as advancement and opportunity.

• To create and execute programs addressed to the elimination of discrimination, where it concerns student admissions, student-community relations, law, mass communication, and in the community at large.

• To create, direct, assist and support other organizations, institutions, agencies, societies, corporations, and associations organized for any of the above purposes.

"We represent latin American students on and off campus, in the studetn senate, and at cross cultural events," said Eligio Acoste, vice-president of the organization.

There are various ways in which students can become involved with AHORA. "Students can become involved in the social, cultural, educational, and political committees we have and volunteer office hours. We always welcome new ideas any particular students may have," he said.

On October 4th, AHORA celebrated their 11th anniversary and they have made plans to hold future events. "In November, we plan to have a Carribean Week. We helped to sponsor Latin American week and events by the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP)," Acoste stated.

Today, a table willbe set up in front of the Hatch to help raise money for the earthquake victims in Mexico. "we will have a place to receive donations for our Mexican sisters and brothers as well as information about our organization," he said.

Klan should be banned

By MANNING MARABLE
Special to the Collegian

Editor's note: Dr. Manning Marable teaches political scoiology at Collgate University, Hamilton, New York.

No group in American history has a more vicious, undemocratic and racist tradition than the Ku Klux Klan. The cowards and demagogues who have hidden thier faces beneath white robes take pride in bombing churches, defacing synogogues, maiming and murdering children. Racism and anti-Semitism are the driving ideological force behind those who join its ranks.

But it seems curious that this legacy of blood and terror finds defenders among many who disavow the Klan's politics. This year, a disturbing trend to protect and defend Klansmens' "rights" has taken shape all over the nation, according to the Klanwatch project of the Southern Poverty Law Center.

This April, for example, a newspaper editor at Harbor College in California who had been fired for his Klan associations was reinstated to his position by a federal judge. The judge claimed that the youthful Klansman's "rights" had been violated when college officials demanded his dismissal. In May, the Federal Communications Commission ruled by a 5 to 0 vote that the broadcasting of racist and anti-Semitic propaganda over the radio "is no grounds for revoking the license of a radio station." White supremacists and Nazis who utter threats and racist diatribes are "protected" by the First Amendment.

Last month, the Ku Klux Klan's New Jersey chapter demanded a permit to hold a racist rally in the city of Newark. With a population more than 60 percent black, Newark could have become another Greensboro—a violent confrontation between racists and blacks who refused to be intimidated by terrorism. Wisely, Newark mayor Kenneth Gibson refused to grant a permit to the Klan.

But instead of praise, Gibson became the target of intense media criticism. The New York Times editorialized that Gibson did "his city and the law a disservice by denying the permit." The Times admitted that the KKK was "loathsome," and its "history of violence and terror" was "indisputable." Nevertheless, the mayor had no right to curtail the Klan's public protest. Unless the Klan rally "poses an immediate threat of uncontrollable violence, the rights to assemble and speak freely are, and should be inviolate." In short, the white supremacists must "enjoy equal protection of the law."

Another "Close"encounter

MAXIE
Starring Glenn Close, Mandy Patinkin and Ruth Gordon.
Hampshire 4 Theaters

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Maxie is a sweet comedy about a husband and wife and their ghost. In this lighthearted comedy Glenn Close stars as a nice everyday suburban housewife who is married to a nice everyday surburban husband (Mandy Patinkin). She's the bishop's secretary, he's a librarian specializing in rare books. They're both nice, ordinary and a little bit bored until...(you knew there was an "until" coming soon, didn't you?) they discover some 60 year-old graffiti under their wall paper. (Not exactly a skeleton in the closet, but still). The graffiti was written in lipstick by a flapper from the twenties named Maxie Malone.

When the landlady (Ruth Gordon in her final film role) sees the graffiti she tells them that Maxie was her dance partner in the 20's. Maxie, she says, died the night before she was due to go to Hollywood.

The next night, Maxie's spirit comes by and takes over Glenn Close's body. The rest of the film, Close and Maxie fight for possession of the body. Close will be at a formal library fundraising banquet when suddenly Maxie takes over. Maxie starts gargling bourbon, singing songs and making a spectacle of herself. Patinkin finds himself being wooed by Maxie; Close accuses him of adultery. Things start getting complicated. Maxie wants to be an actress more than anything. She also wants Patinkin. All Close wants is Maxie's absence.

Although the film is sentimental, it is also fairly funny. Close creates two individual characters that each express a range of emotions. There is a particularly sweet scene in which Maxie dances with Ruth Gordon for one last time. Patinkin (The Story of David) turns out a solid comedic performance, as does the rest of the cast.

Bass player Kim Stone's funky, jumping-in-the-sun fun "Bob Goes to the Store" stole the show. Stone seems like the kind of guy who doesn't talk much, so when he does, everybody listens:

"Bob is a little dog I have. This song is about a day in the life of Bob, and his adventures in going to the store alone, without any human supervision. So try to imagine him running, jumping, flying through the air, smelling new smells, having fun."

But as the dancing crowd proved through two encores of Spyro's consistently quality music, nobody had to imagine having fun. They were already having it.

UMass weekend previews

Men's soccer, volleyball, x-country action

By BRYAN QUENZEL
and PHIL SAYLES
Collegian Staff

With a game against seventh ranked Connecticut coming up on Wednesday, it would be easy the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team to look past its contest with Rhode Island tommorrow.

But UMass coach Jeff Gettler is determined not to let his troops look too far ahead. "That's all I have been telling them for a week," said Gettler. "Last year, we looked beyond Rhode Island and played horrendous and still only lost 2-1."

"We have not beaten Rhode Island since I have been here (four years)," said the coach. "This game is probably bigger than the one against UConn."

The Minutemen (10-3) square off against the Rams (5-4-1) tommorrow at 2 p.m. on Boyden Field where UMass is a perfect 7-0 this season. Massachusetts is currently ranked second in New England, behind Connecticut, and URI is fifth.

Gettler sees Rhode Island as a definite threat to his team's chances at qualifying for the national tournament.

"If we lose to Connecticut, we are still number two and in good shape for the nationals," said Gettler. "If we lose to Rhode Island, we can forget it."

At the moment, the Minutemen are good shape for an invitation to the national tournament. UMass is 8-1 against New England opponents with five regional games left on the schedule. Because two teams from New England go to the nationals, with a strong finish Massachusetts would be a logical choice (along with UConn).

"If we don't lose any of the next five games, I can guarantee us making it," said Gettler.

UMass has been playing well of late, victorious in five straight and nine of ten, culminating in winning its own tournament last weekend. The team's 10 victories ties the school season record.

In addition, UMass has not let up a goal in its last four games. Freshman goalkeeper Sam Ginsburg (5-0, three shutouts) will attept to keep that streak in tact tommorrow for the Minutemen.

URI will also start a freshman keeper, Lance Klima. Another standout for the Rams us midfielder and team captain Rich Ficsher.

After a two week layoff, the UMass cross country teams swing back into action on Saturday in a four team meet at Boston's Franklin Park.

The Minutemen will face UConn, Lowell and Northeastern as they try and rebound from a disappointing effort in their last meet. There is also added incentive in the presence of Northeastern, UM having lost to the pesky Huskies one already this season.

"I think we're ready for a good meet," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien.

"The team is looking for another shot at Northeastern and we would like to take Lowell, as they've given us fits in the past."

O'Brien said that the team needs to pick up the slack behind top runner John Panaccione.

"John has run well, but he did not have support from the rest of our top five runners," he said.

Providing Panaccione can get that support, UMass could return to the form that saw them defeat Boston College early this season as well as come back with a few needed victories.

In other UMass action, the volleyball team will be at the Southern Connecticut Tournament, looking to shake off its loss to New Haven on Wednesday. The Minutewomen are 15-1.

could've won," said Stull. "If we play as hard as we have, we'll do well. I think we can maintain our intensity and win this game. It's a big one for us."

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Sullivan is probable for the game after suffering from a hyperextended elbow. . .Split end Lonny Brock has been moved to cornerback. . .Frank Fay is back at fullback after playing defensive back against URI.

Last Year: UMass won, 3-0 at home.

Against North Carolina, UMass will have to be at its fastest. "They don't recruit slow, fat players," Banda said. "They have quick, thinking players who are explosive."

Junior Jo Boobas leads the Carolina scoring attack with 13 goals, eight assists for 36 points. Junior April Heinrichs (10-10-30), who has a fractured wrist, heads up an high-scoring group of fowards.

Junior goalie Kathleen O'Dell (0.46 goals against ave.) will be in net for the Heels.

Massachusetts, who has shutout eight of its nine opponents, will counter with Holland (0.00 goals against ave.). "My stomach is always in knots before the game," she said. "It's just in a few more than usual."

Holland has only made eight saves, compared to O'Dell's 30. But the freshman welcomes the opportunity to play.

"I'm ready for it. I want it. I want to come through with the big saves when they (UM) needs it. I'm ready for that action," she said.

Freshman sweeper Susan Montag missed half of the New Hampshi[illegible] with a sore ankle but she'll play [illegible] UNC.

"There is the pressure to be the best every game," Dorrance said. "There is more tension to stay at the top. It's like a carnival getting there."

It is going to be a war between what some are calling the top two teams in the nation.

"It'll be a great test for us," Banda said. "As far as I'm concerned, UNC is the number one team in the country right now."

SOCCER NOTES—For the past two weeks, UMass has been getting first place votes in the national poll...It was UNC that pushed UMass out of the second spot two weeks ago...Only three UMass players, senior co-captains Jamie Watson, Sue Bird and junior Michele Rodney have ever faced North Carolina. That was in the 1983 Final Four semi-finals where UNC won 2-0...The last team to beat UNC was UConn, 3-1, in September, 1983.

Hixon said UM did not do at Northeastern.

"We just didn't play as a unit against Northeastern," Hixon said. "We were never really into it until there were only five minutes left. I think we felt that we could just go out and play, but we couldn't. I don't know, but that game is over."

No one can just go out and just "play" against Temple or Old Dominion and expect not to be humiliated. Temple, a Top 10 team, is considered as a fiesty, hard hitting team notorious for physical play.

Old Dominion, losers to North Carolina last weekend, will bring a victory machine to Totman Field, Sunday, but, as Hixon pointed out, must face once beaten UConn on Saturday before travelling north. Both games are at 1 p.m.

The Minutewomen enter the weekend searching for answers to a sporadic offense that has yet to play to its potential. Donnelly, despite scoring at a goal-a-game pace, needs support from the rest of the offense in order for the Minutewomen to alleviate their offensive woes.

Soccer war: #2 NorthCarolina at #3 UM

Minutewomen, 9-0, hosting a potential Final Four matchup

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Last November after winning its fourth straight National title, University of North Carolina coach Anson Dorrance was already looking towards the challenge of the 1985 season, one where the Tar Heels would lose eight lettermen.

"We look foward to next year after we lose an enourmous amount of talent," Dorrance said at the time.

While the second-seeded Tar Heels have met the challenge so far, posting a 12-0-1 record this season, the University of Massachusetts has also risen to the test.

The third-seeded Minutewomen, 9-0, began the season without its leading scorer, Jolie DePauw, who left school for personal reasons. Five freshmen, including the goalie, have been added to the starting lineup. They join six sophomores and have formed a defense that may be the nation's best.

The biggest challenge of 1985 for both teams will be Saturday as North Carolina travels to New England for only the fifth game in its history to face Massachusetts on Boyden Field at 11 a.m.

The Tar Heels are in the midst of a 57-game unbeaten streak and meet the Minutewomen for the first time in the regular season. They have met twice in the national playoffs with UMass losing twice, 6-0 in 1981 and 2-0 in 1983.

"It should be a showcase of finalists of the Final Four," UMass coach Kalekeni Banda said. The Final Four will be held on Nov. 22-24 at George Mason, the only team to avoid a loss to UNC the past two years, having tied the Tar Heels twice.

The Minutewomen have been impressive giving up only one goal this year while scoring 40. UMass has outshot the opposition by a 169-15 margin.

It's very impressive until you see how North Carolina has outscored its 13 opponents by a 70-5 margin and outshot its opponents by a 221-41 margin.

UMass has averaged 4.4 goals and 18.7 shots a game while the Tar Heels average 5.3 goals and 17 shots.

"We're going to try and put the pressure on them and play good team defense," Banda said. "We have to mark tight and not hold back at all."

The Minutewomen are hoping to use their speed, which they possess up front and in the back. "We have to play up to our capablities," Banda said. "We have to play up a notch to North Carolina's level."

Freshman foward Beth Roundtree, who has four goals in the past three games, three of which were assisted by fullback Debbie Belkin, leads the team in scoring with seven goals, four assists for 18 points.

Sophomore midfielder Carolyn Micheel (4-8-16), foward Monica Seta (6-3-15), and freshman foward Cathy Cassady lead the scoring troops for UMass. However, it has been the defense that frequently brings up the ball and Belkin (4-4-12) has been hot.

"Banda is really stressing the defense," starting goalie Jan Holland said. "He's really stressing the speed and picking up the pace of the game. Our best offense is defense."

Banda had his team scrimmage the men's junior varsity team yesterday. "He wanted us to play a faster paced team," Belkin said. "He wanted us to get our game up."

UMass needs win at NU

PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

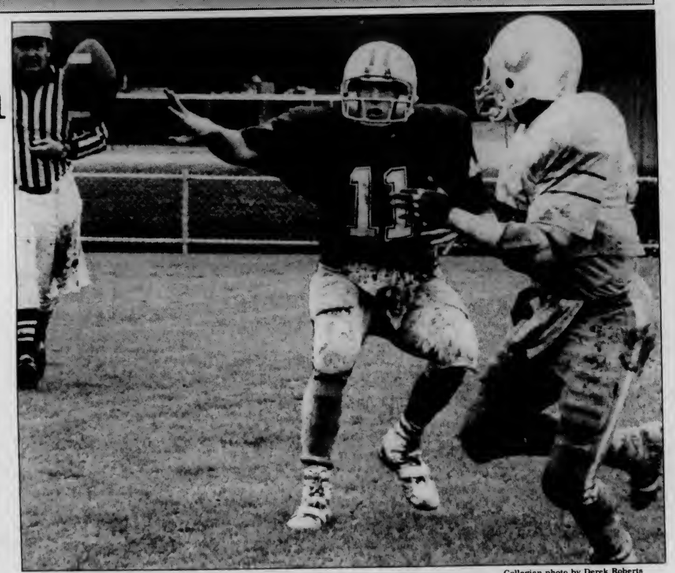
Following games with the likes of Richmond, Holy Cross and Rhode Island, Northeastern University is supposed to provide a respite to the weary University of Massachusetts football team.

The Huskies, despite an 0-3 record, are anything but. Northeastern has instituted a wishbone offense this season, and in three games that offense has looked both very good and very bad, rolling up close to 900 yards of rushing, but a number of costly fumbles have led to a winless 1985 for the Huskies so far.

The Minutemen enter the game at 2-3 and losers of two straight. They stood at the same point after five games last season. But UMass is a much better team than last year, being victimized by injuries and an inconsistent offense that has scored only six points in the last two games.

"I'd like nothing better than to have the offense break out of their shell and score a lot of points," said UMass coach Bob Stull.

"We've has offensive troubles sure, but against Rhode Island (a 7-3 loss last Saturday) we were playing in horrible conditions. The rain and mud on the field made it impossible for anybody's offense to do anything."



The offense will be guided by quarterback Bob Williamson. The sophomore made his first start last week, completing five-of-ten against the Rams in the mud.

"Bobby didn't really have a chance to show what he is capable of," said Stull. "He has a great arm and he showed last week he can run our option. We're going to throw a lot more this week and I expect Bobby to have a good game."

The UMass offense has looked impressive in places this season, but fumbles deep in opponents territory against both Harvard and Rhode Island proved critical. Running backs George Barnwell and Al Neri provide a balanced attack on the ground. Receivers John Crowley and Tom Cioppa have had success along with tight end Ned Toffey.

The offensive line has also done its job. Against Northeastern, a team that has given up over 20 points a game to three teams (Connecticut, Bucknell and Youngstown State) that are not as good as UMass, the offense should be able to move the ball.

The defense has been the strong point of the Minutemen. Ranked nationally in team defense against the run, scoring defense and total defense, the unit has shut down opposing offenses, allowing an average of less than ten points a game and only four touchdowns in five games.

University of Massachusetts quarterback Bob Williamson (11) will make his second start on Saturday against Northeastern. The Minutemen willneed a good effort from the sophomore to get a much-needed victory.

The Northeastern wishbone however, presents a new problem to the Minutemen and defensive coordinator Jim Reid.

"We haven't played against a wishbone since 1980 and to tell you the truth I wasn't feeling too good about it on Monday. I fell a lot better now, I think we can do pretty well against it," said Reid.

The wishbone, if run correctly, can devastate a defense. The quarterback has the option of handing off to the fullback into the line on a dive, pitching out to a halfback or keeping it himself.

"There's so many things that can happen so quickly," said Stull. "It takes a great deal of concentration and good play from the perimeter defensive people (the outside linebackers and the secondary) to stop it."

UM has a pair of good outside linebackers in freshman John McKeown and junior Paul Manganaro. The secondary of cornerbacks Chris Wood and Duckworth Grange and safeties Bob Shelmire and Paul Platek have the athletic ability to make the plays, but must be in the right place, a difficult task against the wishbone.

"It's a matter of saying, 'you have the fullback, you have the quarterback and you guys take the halfbacks' and not taking any fakes," said Reid. "The line has to play the fullback's dive and pressure the quarterback if he decides to throw."

The line (nose guard Mike Dwyer and tackles Eddie Sullivan and Mike Kowalski) has played well and will key on stopping NU fullback Gary Benoit (50 carried for 220 yards) and halfbacks Larry Smith and Keith Wright. Quarterback Jim O'Leary has thrown only 28 times, completing nine for 163 yards and two scores.

Continually flirting with inconsistency, the ninth ranked University of Massachusetts field hockey team gears up for a big weekend, hosting Temple Saturday at Totman Field before welcoming three-time defending national champion Old Dominion on Sunday.

The Minutewomen, 6-2-1, come off a 1-1 tie to Northeastern on Tuesday, a game that senior All-American Megan Donnelly salvaged with a goal with no time remaining. It was Donnelly who scored with three seconds remaining to tie an NCAA semi-final game against Old Dominion two seasons ago. Despite the last second heroics, the Minutewomen, 2-1-1 in their last four games, did not play well and in order to compete this weekend, will have to create their own offense, something coach Pam

Minutewomen #1 bound, beating North Carolina, 2-0, go to 10-0

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It was a history making day on Saturday for the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team.

Not only did the third ranked Minutewomen deal second ranked North Carolina the first shutout in its seven year history but UMass took a giant step towards a number one ranking with a 2-0 win before 1000 fans at Boyden Field.

Number one George Mason lost to Boston College yesterday, setting up the Minutewomen as the probable number one team in the nation. UMass has never been ranked higher than second.

But the Minutewomen, who snapped North Carolina's NCAA record of 57 unbeaten games in a row, can't let up yet according to goalie Jan Holland.

"This is our mid-term," Holland said. "We still have a final yet. We have to take the next game and start thinking about that." UMass, 10-0, travels to Dartmouth this afternoon for a 3 p.m. matchup.

UNC tested UMass early, but Massachusetts used its speed to hold the four-time national champions in check, especially on defense. "Let's give credit to the (UMass) defense," Tar Heel coach An-

Ferraro speaks in Amherst

Recalls recent Soviet trip

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

Geraldine Ferraro returned to Amherst Friday to a rousing ovation and, in her keynote speech at Hampshire College, called the upcoming meeting between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev "long overdue."

Ferraro, former Democratic vice presidential candidate and three-term congresswoman, devoted the balance of her speech to her recently completed trip to the Soviet Union, where she met with various leaders and discussed curent Soviet-American issues.

"I told them I did not go as a negotiator from the United States and it was not my place nor my intention to discuss the arms race in Geneva nor the upcoming meetings," she told the crowd of more than 1,200 Hampshire alumni, five-college students and visitors. "Rather, I tried to bring perspective, a voice of the other people."

Ferraro said her major discovery was that there is a great deal of misinformation coming from the Soviet Union and the United States.

"There is very little the Soviets know about us," she said. "Meaning there is more based on propaganda than on fact."

Later in her speech, Ferraro said the Soviets are ignorant of the American system.

"They do not really know how our system functions," she said. "They cannot understand how the Congress works. They do seem to understand the flaws of the system and they exaggerate them."

Ferraro received two standing ovations before she began her speech, which was punctuated with applause five times. She also received two standing ovations at the end.

Spectatorrs standing on the balcony of the Robert Crown Center hung banners reading, "Academic Freedom," referring to the recent crusade by the right wing to monitor alleged bias in the college classroom, and "Power to the People Not the Feds."

See related story on page 7

At one point during Ferraro's speech, signs bearing swastikas and the messages "Ferraro is a Pig" and "Go to South Africa and Sell Pepsi," alluding to Ferraro's recent appearance in a Pepsi commercial, were paraded along the balcony. When sounds of shouts reached the podium, Ferraro stopped speaking and said, "It's so much easier when there's only one."

She was referring to her campaign last year, when she was hounded by hecklers throughout her appearances.

In her speech, Ferraro emphasized that the Soviet Union

Anti-apartheid coalition advises college trustees

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A 14-member Amherst College student coalition concerned with ending apartheid met Friday afternoon with the Amherst College Trustees and presented them with a two-phase proposal concerning divestment.

Towards the end of the meeting, about 120 Amherst students circled the alumni house, where the meeting was held, holding hands in silence.

Amherst College President Peter Pouncey, leaving the building first, said "They (students) made a good statement and the trustees will get back to them." None of the trustees present at the meeting were willing to comment as they left the building.

The big question now, students said, is how and exactly when the trustees will respond to the students' proposal.

The proposal, written by the Communication Coalition, asks that the college divest by Dec. 31, 1985 of all companies doing business in South Africa that are not listed in the Eighth Report on the Signatory Companies to the Sullivan Principles.

The principles are a code of conduct governing activities of U.S. companies doing business in South Africa. Also, the proposal includes companies in categories two or three of that report, which means these companies are doing little to dismantle apartheid.

Amherst has about $32 million in stockholdings with businesses in South Africa, and about 35 percent fall into the category of stocks sought to be sold by Dec. 31.

Category four of the report, which lists

Bishop Tutu's daughter foresees end of apartheid

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The anti-apartheid movement in South Africa is one largely made up of 'miniature adults' who are paving the way for the end to racist segregation policy in that country, according to the daughter of South African Bishop Desmond Tutu.

As part of Hampshire College's alumni weekend and 15th anniversary celebration, Naomi Tutu-Seavers, spoke Sunday to a crowd of about 250, who were packed into Franklin Patterson Hall.

"We will see a free South Africa in our lifetime," she said, adding, "Our struggle cannot fail because it is a just one."

Tutu-Seavers traced the history of the anti-apartheid movement distinguishing today's movement as one where actions of blacks are "much more widespread." This progressing movement came about, Tutu-Seavers said, as a lesson from the past, where the black population was at one time "seemingly calm." This apparent quiet, she said, allowed the South African government to implement an educational policy which guaranteed blacks would receive an education inferior to whites.

She said in 1976, "young black students

Palestine Liberation Front Leader Mohammed Abu el Abbas is wanted by U.S. authorities in connection with the hijacking of the Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro.

U.S. wants hijacker tried

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top Reagan administration law enforcement officials insisted yesterday that a Palestinian guerrilla leader accused of masterminding the Italian cruise liner hijacking be brought to the United States to face trial.

But the administration, rebuffed earlier by Italy in an attempt to have Mohammed Abu el Abbas arrested, made no headway in getting his provisional arrest in Yugoslavia, pending a formal extradition request.

In fact, the Yugoslav news agency reported that Abbas, 38, was out of the country. The White House said it had no independent confirmation of that.

However, CBS News said its correspondent in Tunis, Tunisia, had spoken to Abbas by telephone in Yugoslavia shortly before 9 a.m. EDT—after the Palestinian leader wa already said to have left.

CBS quoted Abbas as saying that Yugoslav authorities had told him he could stay as long as he wanted. The network did not say how its correspondent knew that the man to whom he spoke was Abbas.

The State Department said the United States was asking Yugoslavia for confirmation that Abbas had left the country.

The statement also said: "We have not yet received a response from the Yugoslav government to our request that Abbas be provisionally arrested pending a formal extradition request from the United States."

"We've not had success in Yugoslavia at this moment, although discussions have continued," FBI Director William H. Webster acknowledged.

"If, in fact, he's gone to another country, we'll continue to pursue our rights through Interpol and other organizations to enforce our criminal laws, which are entitled to respect by friendly nations elsewhere," he said.

Abbas, also known as Abul Abbas, is close to Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat and heads a wing of the Palesine Liberation Front, one of the violent factions in the PLO.

KHADFY REVIEWS GUARD — Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadfy, accompanied by Soviet President Andrei Gromyko, review an honor guard at Moscow Airport yesterday as he left the Soviet Union. Earlier, Khadfy condemned the hijacking of an Italian cruise ship but cited "causes" that provoked the terrorists.

2 Americans receive nobel

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Two American doctors won the 1985 Nobel Prize in medicine yesterday for discoveries about cholesterol that Nobel officials say could help prevent heart attacks and strokes.

Doctors Michael S. Brown, 44, and Joseph Goldstein, 45, both of the University of Texas Health Science Center in Dallas, discovered that human body cells have receptors that determine how much cholesterol circulates in the blood, Nobel officials said.

Excessive cholesterol levels in the blood can cause hardening of the arteries, which can lead to heart attacks and strokes that kill hundreds of thousands of people each year. The researchers also found a link between cholesterol-related disease and the lack of such receptors or their failure to function.

The Nobel Institute said the discoveries of the two Americans had "revolutionized our knowledge about the regulation of cholesterol metabolism and the treatment of diseases caused by abnormally elevated cholesterol levels in the blood."

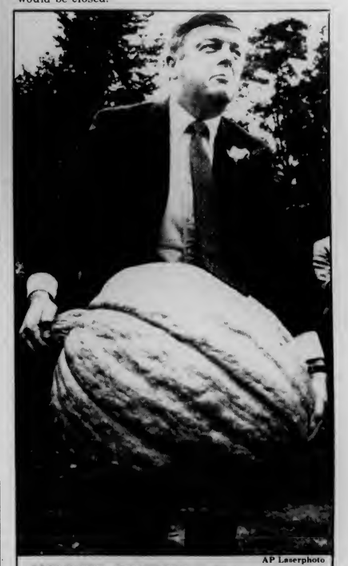
Nobel officials said Brown and Goldstein had shown that excessive cholesterol levels in the blood can be affected by increasing the number of receptors, known as low-density lipo-protein, or LDL, receptors.

"It is still a relatively complicated procedure to stimulate LDL receptors," said Lars A. Carlson, one of the 50 members of the Nobel Assembly, which choses the winners of the prestigious prize.

"But the important thing is that we now have this completely new concept of a point of attack," Carlson told journalists after the award was announced.

Lock collapses; waterway blocked

WELLAND, Ontario (AP) — A lock caved in yesterday on the St. Lawrence Seaway, blocking passage from lakes Superior, Michigan, Huron, and Erie on one side and Lake Ontario and the Atlantic Ocean on the other.



A 125-foot section of the wall of lock No. 7 in the Welland Canal collapsed, pinning a ship, said Malcolm Campbell, vice-president of the western region of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. No injuries were reported.

"Oh, Lord. That's a major, major problem," said John Hanieski, chairman of the Detroit-Wayne County Mich. Port Authority, when informed of the accident.

"It's especially a problem now because people are trying to finish up their shipping season," he said. "You've got people laying in inventories in anticipation of the seaway being closed in winter.

"You've got the harvest season on the wheat pretty much concluded in the northern Great Lakes area, so you've got the elevators wanting to move the product out to their customers."

Efforts were being made to fill the lock with water in hopes of freeing the Panamian-registered Furia said Campbell. He could not estimate how long the seaway would be closed.

Officials expect a $25 million jackpot

BOSTON (AP) — While other state employees observed the Columbus Day holiday, Massachusetts Lottery Commission workers met yesterday to prepare for the expected onslaught of Megabucks ticket buyers hoping for a record $25 million prize.

"We've just had a meeting to make sure everything is staying on track," said lottery spokeswoman Frances McDonnell.

"However, we've made a lot of adjustments since the $18 million drawing in 1984 so we're comfortable the system will be able to handle the volume of business," she said.

While about 62 percent of Massachusetts' adults play the Megabucks game regularly, lottery officials say they expect the lure of a record state jackpot could generate 90 percent participation in time for the next scheduled drawing tomorrow.

The jackpot estimate was upped from $20 million to $25 million at yesterday's meeting, said Dave Ellis, another lottery spokesman, because Sunday sales were triple the usual $100,000 and projections for Monday sales were that they would quadruple the usual $600,000.

Quebec electric company will sell to New England

MONTREAL (AP) — Hydro-Quebec signed a multi-billion dollar contract yesterday to sell 70 billion kilowatt-hours of guaranteed energy to the New England Power Pool over a 10-year period, beginning in 1990.

The signing of the contract, the largest firm sales commitment in the history of Hydro-Quebec, followed an agreement in June 1984 between the Quebec-owned utility and the six New England states.

Under the terms of the contract, which must be approved by the Canadian National Energy Board, the New England utilities will pay for seven billion kilowatt-hours each year over the 10-year period.

Inn employees protest slow contract negotiations

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

About 35 employees from the Lord Jeffery Inn, partly owned by Amherst College, picketed in front of the school's administration building Friday to draw the college's attention to the slow-moving contract negotiations.

Robert Traber, area director of Local 217 Hotel and Restaurant Employees Union, AFL-CIO, said the picketing was a significant move "to draw attention to the role of the college in these negotiations." The present contract expires midnight Oct. 24. "We would call on the college to assure that there is a fair and reasonable settlement," Traber said.

The Inn's management, Traber said, is trying to do the union's work themselves. He said that they are attempting to wipe out seniority, the right of employees to schedule their own hours, and have employees assigned different tasks at anytime during their shift.

The Inn is also seeking economic cuts in the form of benefits and salary cuts from new employees. "They're asking to take the gut out of your rights, Traber told the picketers.

The Inn's employees are being treated like second class citizens compared to the college's other employees, who have had consistently raised wages and benefits, Traber said. "We don't think we should be treated any differently than other departments of the college," he said. Amherst College owns about 75 percent of the Inn.

During the picketing, Traber and a five-member Union Negotiating Committee entered Converse Hall and presented a petition to Amherst College President Peter Pouncey's secretary. Pouncey was at a meeting and could not meet with the picketers.

The petition stated that the workers would stand together and "not accept the rape of our union by management who proposes massive economic takeaways and the total abrogation of our rights and protections."

Of the Inn's 70 union workers, Traber said about half are students, and of those, 75 to 90 percent are UMass students.

Edmund Patterson, a part-time UMass student and a desk clerk at the Inn, said it is the management's attempt to take away the right of employees to make their own schedules that will affect him most since he is a student with a busy schedule.

Boetta Pocsik, a UMass student and an Inn employee for four years, said the "Lord Jeff has offered me the best wages and general benefits," and she said she will fight to keep them. The Inn's management wants to eliminate students from the payroll, she said.

Traber said the next step will come tomorrow when the Inn should come up with a counter proposal.

Foreign students to speak on their political activities

By JEFFERY BARTASH
Collegian Correspondent

Four representatives of student political organizations in southern Africa and Nicaragua will address students in the Five-College area today and tomorrow, including 8 p.m. tonight in Campus Center room 174-176.

The students' appearance is part of a national tour jointly sponsored by the United States Student Association and the American Committee on Africa and Concerned Clergy and Daity. The name of the tour is "Boycott South Africa, not Nicaragua." It's designed to give American students a first hand account of the experience and struggle of their counterparts in these embattled countries.

"We believe that it is important that American students get a chance to hear and talk with students from the major southern African liberation movements and the National Union of Nicaraguan Students," said Josh Nessen, an Amherst College graduate and campus coordinator of the tour.

"Here are young people whose lives have had to be devoted to their peoples' struggle for equality, independence, and social justice since they were teenagers, " Nesson said. "As high school students they experienced arrest, torture, armed struggle or exile for seeking rights our students take for granted. In these countries, students have been at the cutting edge of progressive change, we as American students must understand and support their struggle," Nessen said.

Clair Mohapi, 26, was arrested in 1978 for organizing student protests, was imprisoned for six months and was tortured by South African security police. She escaped into exile and has been active with the Youth Section of the African National Congress (ANC) ever since in Zambia.

Mohapi said the theme of the tour was "for all Americans to see the link between the two (South Africa and Nicaragua), to see how destructive U.S. foreign is."

Monica Nashandi, 25, is a student organizer of resistance to the South African occupation of Namibia and a member of the Southwest Africa Peoples Organization (SWAPO). She is currently in exile working in refugee camps in Angola.

Roger Uriarte, 25, and Virginia Montoy, 22, are organizers of the National Union of Nicaraguan Students (UNEM). Speaking through translators, they deplore the Reagan Administration's support of the contras in Nicaragua.

Uriarte fought in the mountains from 1984 to 1985 against the contra invasion. He said the frontline students in Central America need support by students in the North American states.

"We are fighting to defend the freedom we have conquered and the peace we have wished for," Montoya said. "What unites us with our friends of Namibia and South Africa is that we are fighting for peace and justice for all."

The four repeatedly expressed solidarity, the satisfaction of speaking to North American students of their country's plights and praised U.S. students who have fought "misguided" U.S. foreign policy concerning South Africa and Nicaragua.

The group said U.S. students can help southern African and Nicaraguan peoples by petitioning the Reagan Administration, organizing rallies, boycotting American companies that support the South African government and contras, and to send clothes, educational and medical supplies.

The four representatives will also appear at 4 p.m. today at Mount Holyoke College in a room to be announced, at 4:15 p.m. tomorrow in the Wright Hall Auditorium, and at 8 p.m. tomorrow in the Main Lecture Hall at Hampshire College.

the companies doing the least or nothing to dismantle apartheid, are not targeted in the proposal. The college divested from these companies and now claims to own no stocks from this category.

One of the coalition members, Karim Sharif, 19, said the trustees "might give some sort of weight for the proposal, but I was dissatisfied with the result of the meeting. However," he added, "they had a legitimate belief in what we had to say."

The second phase of the proposal, Sharif said, is to divest 10 percent of the remaining stocks in each of the next six quarters, after the initial 35 percent is sold.

"I think they (trustees) want to keep our proposal in a perpetual state—as a proposal."
—Amherst College student Dylan Sanders

Dylan Sanders, 20, another coalition member, said he is not confident or optimistic because of the issue's history.

"I think they (trustees) want to keep our proposal in a perpetual state - as a proposal," Sanders said. "On the other hand there were some things seen here. For the first time students saw dissent on the board at-large," he said. "We feel there is some potential now. A guarded potential."

Mark Johnson, 21, said that "although we don't have any definite answer from them, except that they are going to look at this, the level of receptivity among the trustees compared to meetings in the past is phenomenally high.

"They indicated that we would be able to meet with them in January," Johnson said. However, although he said the trustees said they would respond in "all due haste," it is unclear as to just when a firm answer can be expected.

Peace Corps at UMass recruits highest in nation

By JOSEPH TIGAN
Collegian Correspondent

Out of 80 schools in the nation with Peace Corps recruitment offices, the highest number of Peace Corps recruits comes from the University of Massachusetts.

"We had 41 recruits nominated in our most recent campaign, which is more than any other college or university in the country," said Leona Lavallee, Peace Corps recruiter at UMass.

The 41 students have been nominated from the five college area, the bulk of which comes from UMass, Lavallee said.

"This is a rather liberal area and there is a large population of concerned citizens who recognize the Peace Corps goals," she said.

Those goals are to extend a helping hand to developing nations, exchange cultures and inform the U.S. about Third World life, recruiter Lisa Ann Sammet said.

Peace Corps students are sent to Africa, Latin America, South America and Asia to apply their skills to these developing countries.

"Basically, we look for people with skills that will transfer to a Third World country," Lavallee said. "And in order to adapt to new cultures, people also have to have a certain amount of flexibility."

The Peace Corps office is entering its sixth year at UMass while the nationwide Peace Corps program is celebrating its 25th anniversary this year.

While the Peace Corp has extended its services to areas such as education, health services, business, science and math, it still maintains an emphasis on agriculture, Lavallee said.

"When recruiting we look for a tangible knowledge such as mechanics or farming. That doesn't mean a history major can't be eligible for recruitment, just as long as they have the skills that are necessary."
—Leona Lavallee, UM Peace Corps recruiter

"When recruiting, we look for a tangible knowledge, such as mechanics or farming. That doesn't mean a history major can't be eligible for recruitment, just as long as they have experience in skills that are necessary."

Lavallee, who used her skilled trade in construction to help build schools in Togo, West Africa, said that along with the experience, there is a $175 stipend saved each month for each volunteer. At the end of two years, each volunteer receives $4,200.

East-Asian word processors installed

By JENN HEMENWAY
Collegian Correspondent

The Five-College East Asian Studies program is beginning to use five foreign-language word processors from China, Japan and Korea which were donated by IBM in August.

"These systems are rather similar to an IBM pc with the difference that they have a larger capacity which includes Japanese, Chinese and Korean," said Donald Gjertson, head of the East Asian Studies program at UMass.

"Most of us are still trying to get to know the machine," said Matthew Mizenko, head of the East Asian Studies program at Amherst College. Because there are no Korean programs currently offered in the Five-College area, faculty are now learning how to use just the Chinese and Japanese word processing. The other three computers have been installed at Mount Holyoke, Amherst and Smith Colleges.

The system will soon serve students and faculty for research and scholarly study, Gjertson said. "The individual faculty members will use this as they would use an IBM pc with the advantage of sticking English in where it's needed in papers and textbooks."

"The word processor will enable us to make neater materials for the students," Mizenko said. The computers will also be used to develop new teaching methods in the future.

Also, these systems will be helpful for advanced students who wish to compose letters and various other documents in these languages, Mizenko said. These programs, along with others will not happen for a while yet because "there is still a lot of software which has not even been explored," said Lorna Peterson of the Five-College program.

Peterson would not disclose the cost of the computers. "These machines were made in Japan for use in the Japanese market," she said. "We basically call them invaluable."

Because the Asian languages do not have a romanized alphabet, the computer keyboards are somewhat complicated, Gjertson said. Japanese, the simplest of the three languages, has 2,000 characters which must be learned by all Japanese majors before graduation.

"You more or less type in the sounds, a bunch of characters will appear on the screen and you select the one you are looking for," said Gjertson. This system is much like the English words "bare" and "bear" but there may be as many as 20 versions of a character in Japanese.

Chinese, which consists of 3 to 4,000 commonly-used characters, is typed in with a system of components. "The keyboard has various parts of a Chinese character broken down. With the use of the shift key, the keyboard can easily fit 150 parts on the board," Gjertson said.

is not an "evil empire," as President Reagan once referred to it.

"Russia is not an evil empire," Ferraro said. "It is a society every bit as complex as ours. They are not like us, yet they are not monsters 10 feet tall."

Ferraro also noted about her trip, "Our discussion (with Soviet leaders) of human rights was not an easy one. I know it's something they did not want to hear."

Ferraro's speech marked her return to Amherst after last year's campus pond rally that attracted more than 20,000 people. It was the largest rally of her campaign, and caused her to note Friday, "What a day. I will never forget that sparkling afternoon."

Ferraro: seasoned player who maintains her ideals

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

She may have lost the vice presidential election, but she has not lost her ideals, nor has she lost her pride and focus.

Geraldine Ferraro still has the fighting spirit that put her at the top of the 1984 Democratic ticket as the vice presidential candidate.

And at first, as she sat for an interview Saturday in the chancellor's residence near Orchard Hill, she was like any other person—slightly nervous and conscious of the camera. But when she began discussing the issues ranging from the alleged growth of student conservatism to putting labels on record albums, her personality as a seasoned politician emerged.

When asked about the talk of a growing conservative tide, Ferraro immediately dispelled the notion that campus ideologies are shifting to the right, noting that when people are asked to vote on the issues and not the personality, the ideals of the Democratic party are still strong.

Ferraro further noted that President Reagan, in his second term, has been forced by public opinion to change his policies on issues ranging from arms control with the Soviet Union to policies on South Africa. All testimony to the fact, she said, that the 1984 Democratic platform was more realistic than the conservative agenda.

"I think the conservatives are out to push an agenda from books through lectures through the social programs like abortion and prayer in the school," Ferraro said. "And in each instance, the American people are saying, 'no.'"

Ferraro has maintained her belief that the 1984 landslide was a personal victory for Reagan, and not his policies, and that goes especially for college students, she said.

"I happen to think that you show them (college students) the issues, they'll vote on those issues and not the ideological labels," she said, leaning forward in her porch chair. "I'm not one of those people who feels that the younger people of this country are conservative, because I don't think the country is going conservative."

When asked about the issue of the administration's huge student loan cuts, Ferraro called them short sighted.

"I think the cuts are short-sighted," she said. "And I frankly think that if a student takes a loan, he should pay it back. That's what it's all about. You borrow, you pay it back."

On the subject of Accuracy in Academia, the right wing movement to monitor professors across the country for alleged bias, Ferraro expressed concern.

"It's a little bit like 'Big Brother' from what I've seen," she said, referring to her recently completed trip to the Soviet Union. "I have a real big problem with people coming in and putting any sort of a hold on academic freedom."

She cited the example of the recent effort by the wives of some U.S. senators to monitor rock music recordings.

> "I think the (student) cuts are short-sighted. And I frankly think that if a student takes a loan, he should pay it back. That's what it's all about. You borrow, you pay it back."
> —Geraldine Ferraro

"It is similar to putting warnings on record albums," she said as she shifted in her chair. "I mean, give me a break. If my kids are listening to it they're not going to go out and do anything strange after listening to a song. There are other influences.

"I think as well that if there is censorship in this issue, that's what parents are for," she said, gesturing. "I mean, if you want to get tough with your kids, you get tough with them."

Ferraro spent the night with her husband, realtor John Zaccaro, at Chancellor Joseph Duffey's residence after delivering the keynote speech at Hampshire College's 15th anniversary celebration. Anne Wexler, who is married to Duffey, was Ferraro's chief campaign adviser for the 1984 campaign and Ferraro and Wexler remain in close contact.

The speech came exactly one year after her historic debate with Vice President George Bush. The last time she was in Amherst was Oct. 20, 1984, when she appeared before more than 20,000 at a Democratic Party rally, the largest of her campaign, near the Campus Pond.

She said she will announce late next month whether she will enter the race for the Senate in New York. Since losing the election last year, Ferraro has written a book detailing her campaign and plans a three-week tour beginning next week to unveil her new book.

Exclusive privileges?

In response to the Collegian column by Rusty Denton on Oct. 8, I would like to voice my criticism of his 'theory' of "Women and the Bible."

First, Denton states that weaker (when referring to women), does not mean inferior.

I agreed.

He states that women should be encouraged to make a name for themselves, and their husbands.

I agree, but what about those of us without husbands?

He states that men protect women and therefore they have "certain exclusive privileges" in the home and in the worship place.

What?!? "Certain exclusive privileges!" Sounds good for drumming up membership to a country club, but not for the church. Men protect women from what? When was the last time someone had to go slay a dragon to protect their wife? Many of the weaker, but not inferior sex (including myself) slay our own dragons, either by choice or necessity.

Finally, Denton stated that Scripture says that a man is held accountable for the spiritual condition of his family, therefore leadership is limited in the Bible to men.

Denton's 'theory' of "Women and the Bible" has some serious flaws. Who for instance, is accountable for the single woman? The divorced woman? The woman whose husband does not share the same religious beliefs? If women are all Denton says they are then why can't they lead in the church? Is it because they are not physically as strong as men? Last time I checked there was no heavy lifting required to hold a leadership position in places of worship.

Margret Fuller expresses my feelings best in a quote from Women in the 19th Century. "The idea of man, however imperfectly brought out, has been more so than that of women; that she, the other half of the same thought, the other chamber of the heart of life, needs now take her turn in the full pulsation, and that inmprovement in the daughter will best aid in the reformation of the sons of this age."

Write to legislators

As the November summit approaches, one would think that it is the intransigeance of the Soviet Union that makes arms control impossible. The August 5th challenge by Soviet Secretary Gorbachev to stop the testing of all nuclear weapons by starting a Soviet moratorium on all testing was promptly dismissed by our administration as mere propaganda.

We forget that 20 years ago, President John F. Kennedy threw out a similar challenge to the Soviets by instigating a unilateral U.S. moratorium on atmospheric testing of nuclear weapons. He then negotiated the Limited Test Ban Treaty of 1963 which is in effect today. They trusted us. Why can't we trust them?

In view of this administration's flare for the dramatic, it is also easy to forget that much of the hard work on lowering U.S./U.S.S.R. tensions and pulling back from the death race towards mutual nuclear destruction goes on in quieter, daily ways—in Congress. Three extremely important pieces of legislation are currently under discussion, and our representatives need to be urged to co-sponsor them. These are:

1. The Comprehensive Test Ban Resolution. A non-binding resolution that calls for the resumption of negotiations (stopped under the Reagan Administration) towards a treaty that includes on-site inspection of nuclear tests, international exchange of seismic data, and seismic monitoring stations of both territories. It also calls for ratification of the Threshold Test Ban of 1974 and Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty of 1976. (Silvio Conte has not yet signed as a co-sponsor.)

2. Simultaneous Nuclear Test Ban Act. This calls for resuming negotiation and mandates a halt to testing by Congressional cut off funds if the President does not halt testing by January 1, 1986. Contingent on the Soviet's not resuming their tests.

3. Comprehensive Freeze Act Resolution. (House 3100 and Senate 1500) calls for binding legislation to end the testing, production, and deployment of all nuclear weapons and their delivery systems. It would cut off funds for further weapons development provided the Soviet does the same. (Senator Kerry is a co-sponsor; Senator Kennedy and Rep Conte have not yet signed.)

Our representatives in Congress do listen to us and do influence the passage of legislation that matters. Please write.

Students do care . . .

I have been at the University for almost two years and as Director of Physical Plant I have heard many negative comments concerning the attitude of various students on this campus. Well, I would like to share with the readers a most pleasant experience that I have had with a large number of students.

Approximately six months ago, I was asked by my wife to assist her in getting volunteers to help build a play area for the children of the Town of Amherst at the Fort River School. I went to see Robert White, the Greek Affairs Coordinator and he recommended I talk with the Greek Councidinator and he recommended I talk with the Greek Council Leadership. The Greek Council agreed it was a worthwhile project and decided this would be their fall project.

In early September, we met with representatives of all the Greek Houses and requested volunteers. We asked for a written list of all volunteers and received a list containing approximately 400 names. When asked by other parents how much of a turnout I expected, I stated I would be happy if half of the 400 students showed up. To everyone's surprise, and my personal delight, the Greeks not only showed up and helped, but they almost dominated the group. More than 600 strong, these UMass students arrived and worked hard without complaining ab out the types of tasks they were asked to perform. Almost every parent who was at the play area building project commented on how outstanding these students were. In my opinion, the Greeks truly displayed what I have felt since arriving at UMass—that our students do care and want to be involved in community events.

The University should be proud of these students would benefit by following the lead established by the Greek Sororities and Fraternities.

Finally, I would like to thank Chancellor Duffey, Robert White, Debra Valkenaar, Lori-Ann Swanson, and Dave Doran for their outstanding support of this worthwhile cause.

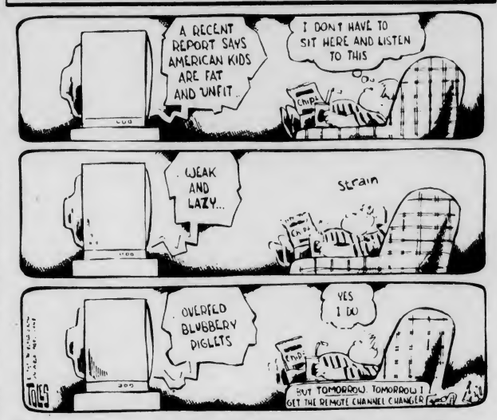
Biblical food for thought

Rusty Denton

Previously, I wrote about the biblical term "weaker vessels" as applied to women. I demonstrated that the term pertains to their special vulnerabilities and need for a supportive family and congregation, not to their professional abilities. However, one can't understand the privileged place women hold in the Bible until one understands the creation account in Genesis. There are some interesting interpretations of scientific data which support the Genesis creation account. Whether one accepts those interpretations or not, the creation story itself is the foundation of the Bible's view of women.

Genesis states, "God created man in his own image." This doesn't mean that God has biceps and a hairy chest. It means that humans alone have been endowed with the ability to make moral choices, to appreciate beauty, to exercise wisdom and creativity, and to display qualitites such as righteousness, justice, mercy, and love. When it says that God used Adam's rib to make a female helper named Eve, it doesn't mean that God gave him a pet whore. It means that God took not only Adam's flesh and bone, but also separated out into a woman a unique part of his reflection of God's glory. Many students of the Hebrew texts believe that Adam had both male and female qualities when created and that some of those qualities became the exclusive domain of women when Eve was formed. In other words, women are equally made in the image of God, although they reflect a different side of Him than men do.



This view of women and God is borne out by several other passages in the Bible. Isaiah described God with a word for mercy which applied only to women. The prophets used many names for God, one of which (El Shaddai) can be translated "the Breasted One." Although I accept the scriptural statement that God is a "He," it is not because I assume that I am any more like God than my wife. In fact, scripturally, only when a man and a woman are united in marriage do they fully reflect the image of God.

This fuller image of God received the strongest protection found anywhere in the Bible: covenant relationship. A covenant is a lifelong agreement in blood between two people that each will do the other and their family only good; each swears with an oath to willingly forfeit his/her own life if they cross the other. The Bible itself is a history of two covenants: God's agreement with Abraham, and God's agreement with Christians. Another word for covenant is testament; you made have heard of the Old and New Testaments. Marriage is another biblical covenant, and no less binding.

This surrendering of rights to each other is important because each husband and wife was to be supportative of each other as they raised children and managed their patch of the planet. There is a scripture that a divided household can't survive, and Genesis established an order for family life to prevent division or confusion. Eve was to recognize Adam as having the final word, and Adam was to recognize Eve as a God-given counselor. Thus, she is described as a "helper" to him—not out of chauvinism, but in the interest of order.

That is the whole point of Genesis: that things were created in an orderly way. It is not the order that most of us grew up with; perhaps it is not the order that we want to live under. But to assume that the Bible is oppressive without living under it is prejudice and nothing more. I know many women who live in biblically patterned households; I don't know any who feel unprivileged or oppressed.

To be gay and comfortable

Micheal L. Cerrato

One of the most frightening aspects of college life is peer pressure. We've all been subjected to it, and we all know the kinds of influence it can have on someone's behaviour. I'm writing this column to all of those people who are struggling under the pressure put on them by society and their peers (and themselves) to suppress their sexual orientation. Being gay and "out" can be very scary, but when put side by side with the prospect of living life in a false way, furtively covering your tracks and desperately afraid that someone might "find out," I think the choice should be a little easier.

On this campus, where (unlike the real world) we are in a framework of openness and social awareness, or at least claim to be, being gay is thought of somewhat like being a fundamentalist Christian: it's fine if they keep to themselves and don't bother anyone else with their nonsense. The problem is that being gay is not like being a Christian, it's not a choice: it's something I believe is as much a part of your personal makeup as is your skin color.

When I, as a gay man, walk through Amherst or Boston, or Moose Breath, Iowa, I am surrounded by images that cater only to heterosexuals, and that's not good. I can feel very alone sometimes, and very unhappy. But when you think about it, straight people can feel alone and unhappy too, so it's not so bad.

Most of the pressures that a gay man or lesbian feels are pressures they subject themselves to. Because we are rejected by the mainstream of society, we tend to react in ways that are sometimes necessarily unpleasant for the straight world. Marches, rallies, the immediate affiliation of the gay world to radical politics, are all ways that different homosexual organizations have chosen as their tools to make an impact on the world. But this is only a small part of the picture. Being gay does not change a person, but rather the way that person is forced to see the world, and it's important to realize that you don't have to march, or go to rallies, or become a leftist (I certainly didn't), or even change the way you talk or dress.

The people you call friends know you and if you happen to be gay, that shouldn't take away the bonds of friendship you've already established—unless you've made it a point to impress upon everybody exactly how straight you are. Then it'll take some work to re-establish your identity. It may surprise you, but most of the time your friends can appreciate the kind of struggle you've had, and are willing to help. If not, tell them to go to hell. That way, if our fundamentalist friends are right, you'll have some company there.

Parents are a whole issue all by themselves, and if I decide to write another column like this, maybe I'll try to say something useful about them. But for now, I can tell you how I feel about my parents, and how I believe they feel about me. I love them very much, and in the past few years as I have become more comfortable with myself and really started to appreciate them, they have shown depths of understanding that are beyond their son's comprehension. Most importantly, they love me. What do I need beyond that? Even if they don't agree with me, they haven't stopped loving me.

So, to end up with a few words to everybody reading this:

To those of you who are straight and whose first instinct is to beat up gay people, chill out. You don't know who is gay and who isn't, and there's a good chance that one of your drinking buddies might just be gay. Learn to respect other people as human beings and not as to whether they fit into your own narrow view of the world.

To those of you who are gay and "out," more power to you. If nothing else, at least you can pride yourself in the fact that you are being honest, and trying to deal with the crap that the world hands us to live with.

And to those of you who are gay, or bisexual, or don't know, talk to someone. If you're afraid that your friends might not like you, then maybe you'd better start thinking about how much you need them; are they worth the excruciatingly difficul efforts it takes to keep hiding? There are a lot of people on this campus who are ready and willing to listen to you, privately, no strings attached. Call the LBGA Office incognito, if you have to, give a fake name, tell me it's about a "friend," but talk to someone. It's worth it.

Letters
Logic behind accusations is shaky

By the viciousness of UMass Republican Club President Loren Spivak's attack in the Letters section Friday I can assume I must have struck a raw nerve. By cramming me and my philosophies into the nebulous and convenient category of "left-wing extremism" Spivak is able to imply that therefore I must identify with, and, condone Soviet racism. Predictably, he goes on to pull out the PLO and insinuate that since all left-wing extremists support Arafat then I must be anti-semitic too. The logic behind these accusations is shaky at best.

I stand corrected as to the status of the Republican Club budget. I was present when the Budgets Committee decided to level-fund the Club and was unaware that they had amended their decision. Their budget was in fact reduced by 22 percent.

While Spivak assures us that cutting "totally useless" positions from the affirmative actions budget made possible the funding of groups such as the Radical Student Union, his divide and conquer excuses leave me unconvinced. One reason for my skepticism is that the RSU budget itself was slashed by 47 percent during the organizations most active year to date. In light of this, Spivak's "fiscal responsibility" begins to break down along ideological lines.

Tim Harris
Amherst

Less attacks, more tolerance here

In response to Loren Spivack's defense of the UMass Republican Club against the "unwarrented attacks" of Timothy Harris's "poison pen," I am happy that Spivack, like Harris, does not condone racism. But, that it has it's origins in "left-wing extremism" is a little off the mark. Racism eminates from attitudes which believe that personal attacks are necessary as defense, and which believe that name calling or finger pointing will help to reach common ground in any situation.

I am relatively sick of the Left/Right UMass battles. Polar extremes (e.g. right and wrong) conflict. But, like real life does this polarity really exist? Let us try to work together toward that gray area—middle place. If we help each other and mutually respect each other's views, then important problems, like racism, can be solved.

ARTS

Classical music is fun . . .

Looking Bach

By ELIZABETH COX
Collegian Correspondent

There's more to a Bach concert than just music. That was apparent Sunday afternoon at the Grace Church, Amherst.

Two Bach contatas were performed by the Hampshire College Chorus and the Valley Festival Orchestra, but it was what preceded the concert that lent a note of humor to the formal occasion.

Dressed in costumes from paper wigs to a cardboard box, contestants participated in a Bach look-alike contest, vying for dinner for two at Plumbley's.

The winner?

Eva Redz from Hampshire College, in a powdered face and cottonball wig, who entered the contest "last minute, on impulse."

The concert, with its unconventional opening, was performed in celebration of Bach's 300th birthday.

"Time Tunnel" is a good trip

By HERB RAMY
Collegian Staff

Thursday, in the Student Union Ballroom, the Governor's Program Council presented 27-minute show, Rock and Roll Time Tunnel. It was billed as a history of rock from the 50's to the 80's. One wonders how any film could hope to capture 30 years of music in a mere 27 minutes.

Film Review

Happily, Time Tunnel pulled it off.

The presentation was a success on many levels. First, the screens and camera were used to create the illusion of actually travelling through a tunnel.

Secondly, the choice of bands was strong, (although everyone who saw the show probably felt that one of their favorite bands was missing). As a whole, each decade was represented rather well.

The smoothness of the show was also quite surprising when one considers how much was shown in such a short time period. The presentation could have easily become quite choppy in places.

While all these things were important to the show's success, its best feature was the feeling of participation that was created. Each band was cheered, applauded, and sung to by some part of the audience. For some strange reason, the only exception to this rule seemed to be the Bee Gees.

The only problem with the show was that it reminded me of at least 25 albums I'd still like to buy. At $6.99 each, I'm going to be in debt for the rest of the semester.

of averted, self-conscious faces and the pounding beat of the music make us feel like voyeurs, watching them perform for the very first time.

The bass guitarist, with his long, disheveled, brown hair and two day old beard, gives the impression that he is the only one who has experience. He holds the guitar pick between clenched teeth and his bare fingers slide up and down the neck; pumping out his personal rhythm. This guitarist unabashedly, faces the camera, while the others always shy away, as if the camera were spying on them, or catching them in the act.

Demme doesn't allow us to see the whole musician, until the end, and this keeps our attention on their erotic rapport with their instruments. Demme seems to understands rock's potent sexuality and utlizes it to make coherent images, unlike most videos on MTV. He manages to make a rock video that actually looks intelligent.

Kubrick's "Lolita" is romantic

LOLITA
Starring James Mason, Shelley Winters, and Peter Sellars
Directed by Stanley Kubrick

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Correspondent

A troupe of seasoned performers and superb characterizations make Lolita one of Stanley Kubrick's besst films. The best actor is, by far, James Mason as the obsessive and droll Humbert Humbert. Mason is thrillingly realistic as the writer who can't get his mind off the excruciatingly beautiful Lolita. He gives his character an unassuming naievate under all the learning and politemess that he assumes in his dealings with everyone, except Lolita. Humbert just can't seem to accept that Lolita doesn't really love him. Mason portrays this innocent romantic with marvelous drollness and sophistication.

Movie Review

Another innocent romantic in this film is Shelley Winters as Lolita's mother. Winter's character goes after Humbert with the same one-minded obsession that propels Humbert after Lolita. The mother is whining, older, middle-class woman hangs onto her men as if they were lifepreservers. When she finally gets the man that she wants, she regrets it and self-destructs. Shelley Winters acts out her character's whiny desperation quite realistically. We feel sorry for her yet she turns us off by the way she unabashedly backs Hubert into a corner.

Quilty is Peter Sellars' role. In this part, Sellars basically changes characters as he has done in other films. His character, an amoral playwright, is also after Lolita, but not for the same romantic reasons as Humbert. Sellars has fun with the role but his is only a small part and doesn't really match up to the performances of Winters and Mason.

Lolita is excellent because the characters are people we can identify with. Mason is appealing because he desperately clings to his romanantic ideals. The same thing holds true for Winters' character, as she attempts to keep what she feels is an ideal love. This is what finally makes the film a tragedy: The characters are operating under the assumption that the people they have fallen in love with, love them back.

Transfer student adjusts to life at university

As any freshman knows, it's hard to adjusting to college life after high school. You have to get used to a whole new way of teaching and learning. The same thing applies to transfer students, only they have to adjust to another college, meet new people, and adjust to another system.

As transfer student from Northeastern University, Carla Goss, a legal studies major, didn't encounter many difficulties. "The only thing that I found difficult was meeting new people," she said.

She finds it harder to adjust being a transfer student than a reshman because "As a transfer student, you've already had a taste of college life and you've already adjusted to the way that things are done at another college. When you transfer, it's just like starting all over again."

She transferred from Northeastern University for a variety of reasons. "At Northeastern, I was part of a co-operative program that required students to attend the university for five years and I only wanted to go for four years. I could have enrolled in the non-co-operative program which would have allowed me to attend for four years, but it cost a lot more. Since my major is legal studies, I wanted more background in law, and at Northeastern, you have to learn a lot in a very short amount of time," she said.

According to Goss, there are some major differences between UMass and Northeastern. "Most of the students at Northeastern are commuter students so they don't really become involved in the campus and the university is located right in the heart of Boston. At UMass, you can take five classes and receive three credits for each course. But at Northeastern, you have to take four classes and you receive four credits for each class."

It didn't take long for her to adjust to life at the university. "It took me about a week or two to adjust. The people I know who attended the university helped me to adjust and I had visited the campus before," she stated.

How does she like it here so far? "I'm enjoying it. I like the atmosphere and the academics. You have more time to learn things," she said.

It may be hard at first for transfer students to adjust to coming on to a new campus, but once you've made the adjustment, you'll be able to relate to the classes and meet new people in no time at all.

Sweethearts help their brothers

Every black fraternity has a sweetheart organization. There are the Omega Pearls, the Kappa Diamonds, the Sigma Doves, and the Iota Sweethearts.

"A sweetheart is a little sister to the fraternity brothers. They help the guys on line go over and look out for each other," said Bridgette Booker, a Kappa Diamond.

There are various ways a person can become a sweetheart. "When a guy goes on line, he can choose two girls to be his sweethearts. It is their duty to help him go over and give him encouragement," Booker said.

"When the brothers go on line, the sweethearts have to help the Crescents with their projects and do various group activities to show that they could work together as a family," said Jennifer Goss, a Sigma Dove.

Some of the community projects the Doves were involved with to help their brothers go over included helping them to restore and rededicate the Martin Luther King Jr. Cultural Center located in Orchard Hill, painting the Shirley Graham DuBois Library in the New Africa House, and they participated in the 'Walk for Hunger' which took place last semester.

The usual time it takes for a person to become a sweetheart is six weeks. "But it also depends on how long it takes for the line their helping to pledge to go over," Booker stated.

There is no limit to how many girls can become sweethearts, and she doesn't need any special qualifications. "When you're on the Scroller's Court (which is what new sweethearts are on while their line is pledging), you will be on call 24 hours a day. You must be reliable and dependable," Booker said.

"Anybody who's willing to work and shows a strong interest in helping the community can become a Sigma Dove," Goss said.

"Some people look at being a sweetheart the wrong way. It's not anything romantic.The relationship is more of a brother-sister type," she said.

realized they were being indoctrinated into their role of subservience to the whites; who were benefitting by the status quo." About 20,000 young blacks began marching to Orlando West High where they would elect leaders, and map out strategies for the coming years. In the middle of their march, "police opened fire upon them," Tutu-Seavers said.

"Young people have seen now how whites use education as a tool against the blacks," she said, explaining that those involved in the movement now believe, 'South African blacks must liberate their minds before (they) begin to liberate their bodies.

"Blacks had been told for so long they had been incapable of things. Now they know there is not a shortage of black engineers, teachers and leaders, because they were not capable but it was that way because of a conscious government policy to limit their numbers," Tutu-Seavers said.

Tutu-Seavers encouraged young people in this country to help the black South African youth movement by educating themselves about the situation in South Africa and by supporting boycotts and divestment policy in the United States.

Tutu-Seavers stressed that she has no "blue-print plan" for a liberated South Africa, but did say that young in her homeland "must be ready to serve in the reconstruction of this liberated South Africa."

"We will see a free South Africa in our lifetime. Our struggle cannot fail because it is a just one."

Solarz to speak on S. Africa

U.S. Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., Chairman of the House sub-Committee on African Affairs, will be speaking on his recent trip to South Africa at 4 p.m. today in room 804 of the Campus Center. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Volleyball takes second at So. Conn tourney

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team, ranked 14th in the nation, placed second at the Southern Connecticut Invitational volleyball tournament at New Haven, Connecticut, on Saturday. UMass lost to the University of New Haven, 5-15, 13-15 in the championship match.

The Minutewomen earned a spot in the championship match by defeating East Stroudsburg State University, 15-12, 15-8, in the semi-finals. The spikers also defeated the University of Lowell, 15-1, 15-8, Yale University, 15-4, 15-11, Pace University, 15-7, 15-0, and Rhode Island College, 15-8, 15-9. UMass also lost to Bryant College, 13-15, 13-15.

The Minutewoman record now stands at 20-3 on the season.

"We played much better against them (New Haven) than we did last week," said coach Elaine Sortino. "Overall, it was a good tournament."

New Haven handed the Minutewomen their first loss of the year last week, sweeping the spikers in three games.

"I was pleased with the East Stroudsburg match," said Sortino. "They are a big, strong team but we were able come out on top."

However, Sortino was not so pleased with the UMass effort against Bryant College.

"We were really flat against Bryant," said Sortino. "We were out of it and before we knew it, we were fighting for our ives."

In the second game of the match with the score tied at 13, a crucial illegal hit call by the head referee robbed UMass of a potential game point. Bryant gained a side out and served for the match.

Sortino cited the play of senior co-captain Sally Maher who "came through with some really big hits" throughout the tourney.

The Minutewomen have the week off before they travel to Delaware to for the Delaware Invitational volleyball tourney.

back about 15 yards, escaped a gang of UMass defenders, and tried to kick the ball. Sophomore Chris McCray blocked the kick and Jim Vertucci recovered at the 10. Two plays later, Strickland busted over for the TD. Stan Kaczorowski, a starting offensive guard subbing for an injured Silvio Bonvini, booted the first extra point of his career.

Northeastern, after devastating hits by Rundle, safety Bob Shelmire and linebacker John McKeown on three successive plays, was forced to punt again. Rod Turner broke loose and blocked the kick. Duckworth Grange picked up the ball and went 25 yards for the score. UMass, however, was called to having 12 men on the field and the score was called back. NU picked up the first down, but the half ended with UM atop, 7-0.

UMass drove 68 yards to open the third period, stalling at the NU nine. Kaczorowski was called in and booted a 30 yard field goal to make it 10-0.

The Huskies, who were by this time frustrated by the UMass defense, called in Fergason to quarterback for starter Jim O'Leary. Fergason drove the team to the UM nine (after Barnwell fumbled at the UM 28) before Mike Kowalski stuffed fullback Gary Benoit on third and five, setting up a 27 yard field goal.

Dwyer busted through the NU line, blocking the kick. But UM was caught offside and Fergason went four yards for the score on the next play. Dwyer, obviously upset at the score, called the defense together on the sidelines, and NU gained but one yard on its next eight plays.

Freshman Dimitri Yavis also played a part in rescuing the offense, punting seven times for a 43-yard average, his final effort pinning the Huskies on their 11 with 1:07 left.

The starting offensive guard, Kaczorowski was good on his third attempt in four tries since taking over for the injured Silvio Bonvini. The big man booted the kick over the NU fieldhouse, a good 15 yards beyond the goalpost.

Senior Paul Ricard threw the ball in from the side line. Hedelin played the pass off of his chest, turned and placed the shot past Klima's right.

"I had alot of luck today," said Hedelin. "In other games, I have had a lot of chances, but this day I was lucky."

"I am playing a bit more aggressive now. It is hard coming from Sweden, learning new teammates, it takes time. I hope I'll keep it up and score more goals."

URI coach Geza Henni was disappointed with the play of his team. "We made mistakes. A team cannot afford to loose the ball so close to its goal. We lost the game obviously in the first half. I did not recognize my team."

Gettler was happy with the play of the entire squad. "It was a team effort. Capital T.E.A.M. We have been able to impose on teams. With the ball, we have been very skillful. Without it, we have been hard.We make them earn anything they get."

Now the Minutemen must travel into the unfriendly confines of the University of Connecticut to determine who is number one in New England.

Minutewomen in the previous two regular season meetings, but more importantly, the Owls have always been a bruising warmup for UMass' game the following day against Old Dominion.

The Minutewomen had always lost the heartbreaker, until Sunday.

With the changes implemented, the Minutewomen overwhelmed Temple as senior All-America defensman Megan Donnelly had a hat trick, while sophomore right-wing Amy Robertson had two assists and freshman forward Ruth Vasapolli added her first career goal.

"The win against Temple was a real moral booster heading into the Old Dominion game," Hixon said.

The Minutewomen rose to the test against ODU, despite the rainy weather and a poor call midway through the first half allowing the Lady Monarchs a penalty shot that they converted.

Donnelly knotted the score with 19:28 left in the game, with her 13th goal of the season, scoring off Robertson's fifth assist of the year. Continually turned away after scrambling for loose balls in front of the Old Dominion net, UMass finally put the game away as Lisa Griswold scored her sixth goal of the season with 1:55 left. Pandemonium broke loose, UMass had finally beaten Old Dominion.

son Dorrance said. "They forced us to rush our shots and they played us better than we thought they would."

UMass outshot UNC by a 11-4 margin as they used its speed and the dominating play of midfielder Kristen Bowsher and Carolyn Micheel to take control of the game.

It took UMass a few minutes to adjust to North Carolina's speed and skill but UMass began to bear down on keeper Katherine O'Dell with 27 minutes left in the half. UMass got three consecutive corner kicks and O'Dell made two outstanding saves.

Micheel crossed the ball in front of the goal on the third kick, players converged upon the ball and it ended up with UM foward Monica Seta passing it to Cathy Spence, who hit it in with 25:47 to go in the first half, for the 1-0 lead.

Bowsher, a sophomore all-American, set up Micheel about eight minutes later. Off a direct kick 35 yards out, Bowsher moved right and kicked the ball left, where no one was.

Micheel got to the ball, faked out UNC's Stacey Enos and went one-on-one with O'Dell. Micheel shot, picked up the rebound and drove it just inside the right post at the 18:50 mark for the 2-0 lead.

"I didn't think they would allow me to be in there. There was barely any pressure on me," Micheel said.

Bowsher did what she does best. She controlled the mid field on offense and on defense for UMass, who have outscored its opponents by a 42-1 margin.

"She was just brillant," Dorrance said. "She was jus outstanding. She just works and works on defense."

UNC did have a few chances, two shots rolling across the goal mouth and three shots on goal by its best foward April Heinrichs, but they couldn't convert.

"They (UM) have to be number one," Dorrance said "They are the only unbeaten, untied team."

"That only matters at the end of the season," Bands said.

But for the 1000 fans who packed the Boyden grand stands and ringed the field standing and clapping during the final minute in tribute Saturday, a number one ranking is what the team deserves.

UM Defense does it again, 10-7

Football 3-3, beating Northeastern; defense resuces slumping offense

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

BROOKLINE — Luckily for the University of Massachusetts, its defense never rests.

Sparked one again by an unyielding defense, the Minutemen evened out their record at 3-3, beating winless Northeastern 10-7 in a sloppy game before 5,100 at Parsons Field.

"The defense has been great all season, give them all the credit," said UMass coach Bob Stull. "They set up out touchdown, stopped Northeastern all day and controlled the tempo of the game. I just wish our offense could get it together."

Quarterback Bob Williamson was two-for-six for 28 yards and fumbled four snaps from center, losing the ball once. He was sacked four times for a loss of 28 yards. All in all, a less-then-memorable performance.

The UMass offense was pitiful the entire day, gaining only 163 yards (a mere 45 in the first half). The Minutemen had but eight first downs and fumbled six times, losing the ball three times.

Northeastern's only touchdown came after tailback George Barnwell fumbled on his own 28. Barnwell ran well, gaining 79 yards on 14 carries, but his two fumbles caused Stull to bench him in favor of sophomore Ted Barrett during the last UM possession. Barrett responded, carrying the ball six times for 30 yards, picking up a key first down that helped UMass kill some time late in the game. He also caught a 38 yard touchdown pass that was called back because of a clip in the UMass backfield.

The defense, which should sue the offense for lack of support this season, was outstanding. Now ranked first in the nation in scoring defense (9.1 points-per-game), UMass took some time adjusting to the NU wishbone offense, but once they were set, the Huskies were taken out of the game.

"The wishbone seemed real fast at first," said UMass nose tackle Mike Dwyer. With a 14 tackles, three sacks, two fumbles caused and a fumble recovered, the 275 pound catalyst was named to the ECAC weekly all-star team.

"I feel the defense has to set the tone, keep the other team off balance and give us a chance to win the game." Dwyer said. "We've played well this season. They scored on a cheap play, nobody has been able to drive on us."

Outside linebacker Todd Rundle, who played quarterback on a high school team that ran the wishbone, also proved troublesome to the Huskies, making nine tackles, six that resulted in a loss of yardage.

"It's was diffucult adjusting at first, the turf speeds the game up," said Rundle. "But we made some good plays. Coach (Jim) Reid prepared us for what we saw and the scout team did a great job in practice."

After a scoreless first period, highlighted by a mised Northeastern field goal, UMass scored on an eight yard run by fullback Tony Strickland. The UMass 'drive' covered 10 yards, coming after a blocked Northeastern punt.

The Huskies were forced to punt at their 24. Punter Jeff Furgason chased a bad snap

UMass' defense: the best?

How good is the University of Massachusetts defense?

In the latest NCAA national division 1-AA statistics, the Minutemen are ranked first in scoring defense, allowing a mere 9.1 points-per-game over six contests this season.

UMass is third in overall yardage defense, allowing 244.17 yards-per-game, and 18th in rushing defense at 103 yards-per-game. Against the pass, UMass allows 141 yards-per-game.

The Minutemen, who allowed just 29 yards of total offense in the second half of Saturday's 10-7 victory at Northeastern, have allowed just five touchdowns this season. One came on a deflected pass, one on a halfback option and two others after the UM offense fumbled deep in its own territory. Only one team, number one ranked Richmond, has had a long drive for a score this season against UMass.

UM opponents have scored only one touchdown in the fourth quarter.

Field hockey rebounds, beating ODU

Champs fall

By JOHN A. NOLAN

With its back against the wall and its number nine national ranking on the line, the University of Massachusetts field hockey team blasted three-time national champion Old Dominion, 2-1 on Sunday at Totman while knocking off tenth-ranked Temple, 4-2 in an earlier home game on Saturday.

"Oh my God, it's unbelieveable," an ecstatic Megan Donnelly said, after UMass beat Old Dominion. "I've had four years of frustration, but we finally got them. There was no stopping us because we wanted them too badly. This feels better than I ever thought it would."

The two wins improved the Minutewomen's record to 8-2-1, serving notice to the NCAA National Tournament Committee that the missing intensity responsible for the Minutewomen's five place drop in the national rankings has been recaptured, and that UMass is once again a serious contender for the national championship.

This was a very big win for us and our program, "University of Massachusetts head coach Pam Hixon said, referring to Sunday's capper over Old Dominion. "Its always great to beat the best.

"We are now going to be a factor to be reckoned with. From now on we are going to control our destiny, no one else," she said. "I don't think I've coached a team that was ever in a more must win situation this early in the season. But my players just reached back and gave everything they had to us and each other."

After experiencing what some people believed to be their most disheartening performance to date, a 1-1 tie to unranked Northeastern last Tuesday, the Minutewomen, who will certainly rise in the national rankings, weren't expected to battle the national champions as it had so passionately in the past.

Hixon said that changes had to be made. UMass had been flat against the Huskies and needed a spark to give the Minutewomen renewed winning desire. Hixon countered by sitting down four starters, replacing them with freshmen Colleen Reilly, Julie Stuart, Ruth Vasapolli and Cathy DeAngelis.

"All my freshman played with intensity and enthusiasm and gave the team what it needed. Sometimes freshmen don't know who they're playing. It's their first chance to play and they just want to impress-they don't know to be intimidated because they've yet to have game experience. They just don't know any better—that's the attitude we needed."

Old Dominion has been the team everyone has wanted to upset the last three years, but no one has had much success, especially when the national crown has been up for grabs.Temple, traditionally in the shadow of the Lady Monarchs, has always been tough, physical and beatable. The Owls have been vulnerable and beaten by the Bring on Connecticut.

Led by an Anders Hedelin hat trick, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team rolled over the University of Rhode Island, 4-0 on Saturday setting up a confrontation between the top two teams in New England tommorrow afternoon in Storrs.

"Everybody played real well," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "We put on a clinic in the first half. Now there is no pressure going into Connecticut. We are number two, that's pretty good. They are number one, they have to defend it."

The victory over URI extended the Minutemen's (11-3) winning streak to six games. They have won 10 of their last 11. The 11 wins is a new record for Massachusetts men's soccer.

Hedelin scored his first goal at the 14:33 mark. The junior forward picked up a pass from Ferdie Adoboe in back of the Ram defense and fired a shot past goalkeeper Lance Klima's right.

Midfielder Andy Bing interupted Hedelin's heroics for a brief moment at the 34:26 when he stole a pass, rushed the middle of the URI defense, and blasted a shot from 35 yards out into the top right corner of the net for an unassisted goal.

Hedelin scored his last two tallies in the closing minutes of the first half. The Sweedish import scored his second goal with 4:17 to go on a pass from F.J. Zwicklbauer. He completed the hat trick with just 19 ticks left on the clock.

Chancellor challenges Accuracy in Academia

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

After the dust had settled, University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey found himself with a further debate commitment against a member of Accuracy in Academia.

Duffey's debate Monday on Cable News Network (CNN) with Reed Irvine, a member of the group which advocates the monitoring of professors, resulted in the chancellor's challenge for Irvine to come to campus.

"I would be delighted to come up and debate with Sam Bowles (a Umass economics professor targeted by the group) and some of the other Socialists and Marxists you have teaching in your department of economics," Irvine said in response to the invitation.

In a telephone interview yesterday, Duffey said he had drafted an invitation to Irvine. "I hope he does come up for a debate," he said. "He committed himself to one Monday."

Accuracy in Academia, formed by the Washington-based Accuracy in Media, has pinpointed UMass as one of several colleges requiring monitoring by students.

Irvine, speaking in the debate from CNN headquarters in Washington, said the group seeks to promote greater accuracy on campus. "I don't think that any genuine liberal, including Dr. Duffey, would say that a professor who gets up and tells his class that there is more injustice in the United States than there was in Nazi Germany, that that is a reflection of liberal bias. That's simply outright falsehood. And that's the kind of thing that we are trying to overcome."

Irvine said his group has student reporters on over 110 college campuses ready to report on professors' views. Duffey, speaking from New York, said he found the aims of Irvine's group confusing. "First they indicated that they were going after what they considered to be left-wing bias. Then later they said they were trying to preserve a balanced presentation in the classroom, and now they're talking about accuracy.

"If your group could encourage students to read, to ask questions, to be vocal in the classroom, to engage in debate, I think we would have a very common league," he said.

Duffey was cut off by Irvine when he questioned Irvine's "network of informers."

"Reporters, Dr. Duffey, not informers, reporters," he said. JHis group wants to give students "materials which they're not getting in the reading list the professors give them, which will enable them to challenge some of the things that are being said.

Areas reject constitution

Senate takes it up

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association Constitution will be rejected at tonight's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting because it hasn't received enough area government support, according to student officials.

The proposed document needed the approval of four of the seven area governments, and as of last night, Northeast and Sylvan areas had rejected it, while Orchard Hill and the Greek area had abstained. An abstention is in effect a no vote, and the rejection will result in further review and discussion of the document in the coming weeks.

Concerning the people who had problems with the document, Senate Speaker John Ruddock said he hopes "they would bring those concerns and make them explicitly known." Ruddock was unaware of a lack of area government support, because only one area had notified him before last night's constitution forum scheduled to answer questions concerning the document that they had objections to it.

Cyndy Wison, Orchard Hill area government treasurer, said her members abstained "because of lack of time" to review the document. She added that not enough copies of the document were distributed to the area's members.

"We thought that certain parts of the constitution were inadequate," said Mike Cerrato, president of the Northeast area government. "There were parts left in that contradicted our bylaws."

Bob Griffen, a senator from the Greek area, said his area government will "have no position" on the document, which qualifies as an abstention. "The SGA leadership has not been actively pushing the SGA constitution," he said. "If you don't give people support, they're not going to pass it."

Defending his role in pushing for passage, Ruddock said just as "it's the responsibility of the speaker as chief executive officer of this (senate) assembly," it's the area's presidents who are "responsible as chief executive officers of their own areas to provide (information) for their assembly."

Legislator wants sanctions

South African anger to erupt soon, he says

By JOSEPH R. TIGAN
Collegian Correspondent

Unless the U.S. combines external pressure on apartheid with existing internal pressure, it will be impossible to achieve a peaceful solution in South Africa, according to Congressman Stephen Solarz (D-New York).

In a speech yesterday at the University of Massachusetts, he said the U.S. must maximize its pressure on the South African government to produce a non-racial environment.

"Originally, I thought we had about 10 years to reach a solution in South Africa," Solarz said. "But with the enormous increase in rage and impatience, especially in young blacks, that time has diminished to two to three years."

Solarz, 38, from Brooklyn, is the fourth-ranking Democrat on the House Foreign Affairs committee and former chairman of the Africa subcommittee. He has just returned from a visit to South Africa in August, his fifth visit there.

There could be a death toll of about a half million people in that country with racial segregation if a resolve is not reached within that two to three year period, Solarz said.

Labeled as a 'meddler' with a policy of "starve them into submission" by his opponents in South Africa, Solarz favors imposing economic sanctions on South Africa to pressure that government into abolishing apartheid.

"If the U.S. simply talks of economic sanctions, and doesn't enact them, South Africa wouldn't be prepared to take such a threat seriously," Solarz said. "We must

MIT prof wins a Nobel

STOCKHOLM, Sweden(AP)—France Modigliani, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor, won the 1985 Nobel Prize in economics Tuesday for theories he developed 30 years ago on personal savings and the value of businesses.

'I am obviously very pleased,' the 67-year-old economist said at his home in Belmont, Mass. 'It's always nice to hear that the work I've done is appreciated and regarded as important.'

Modigliani, who emigrated from his native Italy to the United States at the beginning of World War II, was cited for theories on how people save for their old age and for refining economic thinking on how to determine the market value of businesses.

Yesterday's award marked the 13th time in the 17 years of the prize that it was won or shared by an American.

Professor Assar Lindbeck, a member of the Swedish prize jury, said after the announcement that Modigliani's work 'is not explaining what we should do. It explains what we see and helps us understand the world.'

The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences, which made the award, said Modigliani developed a life-cycle hypothesis of household saving and formulated theorems used to value firms and capital costs.

Modigliani's savings theories, worked out in the 1950s with a student, the late Richard Brumberg, helped demonstrate how people reduced their savings when they could count on improved pensions.

He said yesterday that he leaves decisions about household finances to his wife, Serena. As he expressed it: 'I give the general ideas, and my wife makes better specific decisions.'

Theories Modigliani developed with colleague Merton Miller, also in the 1950s, dealt with corporate finance.

Lindbeck said work by Modigliani and Miller showed that 'a company manager should not maximize annual profits but maximize the value of shares on the stock market.'

Chancellor dedicates environmental health center

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Nine years ago, a newly hired University of Massachusetts professor had a dream to initiate the nation's first attempt to find regional solutions to environmental health problems. Yesterday, his goal was accomplished.

A dedication ceremony took place yesterday for the Northeast Regional Environmental Public Health Center, to be located in the UMass Public Health Building. The brainchild of public health professor Edward J. Calabrese, the center is supported by the public health departments of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

"This day represents this University's commitment to public service and our commitment to working in cooperation with our (neighboring) states," said Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey at the ceremony.

The main purpose of the center is to allow public health officials throughout the northeast region to gather and take integrated approaches to solving environmental health problems. The organizers hope agreement will be reached on industry regulations for all of New England. The center will supply education, technical information, research services, along with public policy formulation and evaluation for regional officials.

In the keynote address, Douglas Costle, Esq. former administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency under President Jimmy Carter, said that in the process of climbing the 'learning ladder' in regards to environmental health, our society has found that the "chemical revolution," though it "brought us economic growth and technological advances, it also brought side effects we hadn't ever been able to comprehend."

Costle said he sees an increasing awareness in American society and its public officials regarding environmental health and said,"attempts to deregualate it, caused a renewal in our values."

Assistant Director for the Science Center for Environment Dr. Paul Wiesner talked about how a "multidisciplinary approach to environmental health issues" can and will appeal to national agencies with the same interests such as the Food and Drug Administration and the National Center for Disease Control.

"The biggest need (of the environmental health profession) is the development of models for interacting with a concerned community," Wiesner said.

First, he said, people in the profession must "realize that people as people have something to contribute," and that scientists in this field have always had "problems with credibility."

Wiesner said those involved with environmental and public health issues have to come to the realization that "discussions between scientists which had at one time been private must now become public," which he said will help toward attaining credibility.

Groups fight hunger with World Food Day

By JIM BURKHUAGE
Collegian Correspondent

World Food Day at the University of Massachusetts, the culmination of efforts by members of the UMass Hunger Task Force and MassPIRG, begins at 10 a.m. today in Campus Center room 169.

Funds will be raised for hunger relief agencies through private donations and by selling balloons and t-shirts. Proceeds raised at UMass will be contributed to the USA for Africa fund, which has helped raise money nationwide for famine relief. The effort is also backed by the National Student Campaign Against Hunger.

The UMass Hunger Task Force is a group of about 15 students who work on their own and in conjunction with other organizations to raise money for hunger relief projects.

"Student interest has not been as high as it could have been in the past," co-president Meryl Gura said. In addition to raising money, World Food Day is an effort to educate, inform and get people involved in the issue. The day's events will include videotape presentations and guest speakers from the Western Mass. Food Bank and Oxfam America.

Each year, the Hunger Task Force sponsors Oxfam America in the Fast for a World Harvest. This is an event when students can choose to give up one meal in the dining commons so that the cost can be contributed to the fight against hunger. This year the event will take place on Nov. 21. Students can fill out contribution cards which will be located near the cashiers' stations. "Twenty-one children die every minute from hunger," Gura said.

Health coordinator says it's tough in Guatemala

T.A.IACOVONE
Collegian Staff

Basic health care in Guatemala is very difficult to administer because of the overall economic, social and political conditions of the country, Curt Wands, coordinator of the Guatemala Health Rights Support Project (GHRSP), said Friday at the University of Massachusetts.

The infant mortality rate in Guatemala is 27 percent. The three leading causes of death are entiritis, influenza or pneumonia, and death caused by violence. The GHRSP serves to disseminate information on health conditions in Guatemala as well as to raise funds and train health workers.

"The most difficult part of the problem is that we have to work clandestinely because there is repression against all sectors of the society. Just to treat displaced people, including 100,000 orphans, the (health) workers are risking their lives," Wands said.

Part of the economic and social conditions of Guatemala are a result of U.S. aid, he said.

"The Agency for International Development supports projects for the cultivation of snowpeas rather than the more appropriate beans and corn;. . . and although the U.S. government has stopped arms supplies, there is still a great deal of aid going through our allies to Guatemala." More optimistically, Wands said that the Project's workers employ traditional and natural medical techniques in their services.

"When I leave, there are five or six people who can continue the work," he said.

"If we find anyone, whether he is conservative or liberal, who is teaching things that are incorrect, we will be happy to handle those complaints and try to do something about it," Irvine said.

"What we have here is an incredibly simplistic attempt to set up a sort of informal ministry of truth that's going to tell the rest of us what's accurate," Duffey said.

Shade Tree Laboratories turn 50, will be honored

In celebration of their 50th anniversary, the University of Massachusetts Shade Tree Laboratories will be honored today by the Massachusetts Tree Warden's and Forester's Association.

According to Dr. Francis W. Holmes, director of the laboratory, there will be a plaque presentation and an the planting of an honorary tree, called the 'Kentucky Coffee Tree' (a Gymnocladus dioicus), which will serve to help the laboratory's teaching program.

"The purpose of the laboratory is to conduct research and educational programs in support of the public shade tree officials of the commonwealth," said Holmes, adding that the shade tree industry is an important one for Massachusetts because it involves more than 30,000 jobs.

The ceremony, which will be held outside the Shade Tree Laboratories building, will include speeches given by State Rep. James Collins,D-Amherst, Associate Director Richard A. Rohde of the Mass. agricultural experiment and other noted officials from the University and abroad. The laborstories, whose work has brought international recognition to UMass, will also receive citations from the state.

Class for women teaches management of problems

Any woman wishing to improve her self-image can begin to do so by enrolling in an eight-week class designed to help women feel more positively about themselves despite their weight or body type. Registration for the class ends today.

Barbara Harrington, author of "One Size Fits All?", will teach the course aimed at frustrated dieters and compulsive overeaters who find they can't feel good about themselves because they are not at the correct weight.

"The course is designed to help women try to develop better self images by finding out who they are inside their bodies," Harrington said.

The class will feature readings, writings, discussion, and "imagining" exercises to help women become more comfortable with their bodies. By focusing on how they feel about food and how others treat them, women can begin to turn negative feelings into positive ones.

"This is not a weight loss class. It is a class for women of all shapes and sizes who are tired of using food and constant dieting as a means of changing their lives," Harrington said.

Harrington, herself a recovered bulimic, compares "One Size Fits All?" to a consciousness raising class rather than a counseling session. It is a reaction to the present talk manifest by deed as well as by word." Solarz mentioned the executive order for limited economic sanctions issued by President Ronald Reagan as one of the measures taken by the U.S. in an effort to disassemble apartheid.

"The problem in South Africa will be solved when that government sees that the price of maintaining apartheid is greater than the cost of eliminating it.

"1985 has been a significant year for awareness in the U.S. of the strife in South Africa, due mainly to the media. And with Reagan's support of economic sanctions, the question is not whether sanctions should be made, but which sanctions?"

According to Solarz, the release of Nelson Mandella from prison would be a strategic step to easing tension over racial negotiation.

"Over the last 5 years, Mandella has been transformed into a figure of mythic proportions and any hope for serious negotiation between the government and black leaders hinges on his approval of many issues," Solarz stated.

"The issue of segregation is no longer the main issue but rather, the distribution of political power."

Coalition vs. administration

Marc Kenen

In 1977 the University of Massachusetts became one of the first Universities in this country to totally divest from South Africa. Last summer we discovered that UMass had become one of the first universities in the country to REINVEST in South Africa and after months of fruitless negotiations with UMass Administration over this, on April 1st, 100 students, calling ourselves the April 1st Coalition occupied the Vice-Chancellor of student affairs office.

The national media zeroed in on UMass and because of this attention, Chancellor Duffey did not call in the police. After four days a negotiated settlement establishing a commission of administrators, faculty and students to discuss divestment was reached.

But as the media turned its attention away from UMass and focused on places such as Columbia, Cornell and Berkeley, the struggle at UMass intensified. And, with the national media no longer watching, the Administration decided to fight back.

On April 10th, some six days after the end of the sit-in, a business conference was held in the Campus Center, featuring a representative of Citicorp, the largest U.S. lender to the government of South Africa. When two students attempted to silently, peacefully and legally hold up a banner protesting Citicorp's support for Apartheid, they were assaulted by a University employee, then illegally arrested, handcuffed and thrown in jail, in direct violation of their First Amendment Rights.

Some three weeks later, after the divestment commission issued its report calling for immediate divestment, over 100 members of the Coalition marched to the UMass Treasurer's office to demand that the Treasurer follow the report and immediately divest the stocks. We were told we couldn't see the Treasurer as he was in Worcester for the day, when in fact we learned later, he was at his home in Amherst and in communication with the UMass police force. 32 students decided to stay peacefully until they could talk to the Treasurer. They were arrested, handcuffed, dragged, transported on a bus dangerously leaking gasoline, held in the UMass police station for six hours and abused by UMass police, including one woman who was dragged by the chain connecting her handcuffs and one man who received a billyclub in the groin. They were then taken to six different jails all over the state, held overnight and brought to the courtroom the next morning, again in handcuffs, and arraigned on charges of Trespassing.

As if this wasn't enough, Chancellor Duffey then had the audacity to file school disciplinary actions against these 32 for 'Inciting a Mass Disturbance'. They face possible suspension from school.

But, obviously the Administration and police department were saving the best for last. One week after the action in the treasurer's office the UMass police walked into the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting and arrested the speaker of the senate, John Ruddock, who also happens to be the leading third world member of the April First Coalition and the most powerful undergraduate third world student on this campus. It seems that when the bus was leaking gasoline John ran to get help from the head of the police department. In his haste, he put his hand on the roof of a car and vaulted over it. The car happened to belong to one of the UMass police officers, who claims that there is over $200 worth of damage. Half a dozen people have examined the car and found no damage. Ruddock was charged with a felony, malicious destruction of property, handcuffed, taken to jail and held on $200 bail.

These actions represent a seemingly blatant attempt by the UMass Administration and police force to intimidate and crush the growing student movement on this campus. But it will not work. They can arrest us, jail us, brutalize us, and discipline us but we will not be intimidated by an Administration that calls for human rights in South Africa and jails students for holding up a banner; that denounces apartheid but reaped profits off of companies and banks that thrive on apartheid; that criticizes police violence in South Africa but utilizes and condones it on campus and worst of all, an administration that calls for the freedom of the leader of the black people of South Africa, Nelson Mandela while imprisioning the leader of the undergraduate third world community here at home, John Ruddock. This summer, the University finally divested fully, but the students' fight goes on.

Marc Kenen is a member of the April 1st Coalition.

This week-random thoughts

Stephen Erickson

Beware of the feminist sex censors. Last week's column on the Viking explorers is the latest victim. Apparently, any word with 'man' in it (I hope it's O.K. to write 'man') is subject to their rewording. '...Norse seaworthiness was unsurpassed.' Just think of all the words we can no longer use: hu---, ro---tic, wo---, pen---ship, ---date, ---ifest etc. Since my character has been smeared all over the pages of the Collegian in the past with little restraint provided by the editors (I've been called a liar, a racist, etc.) it's interesting that the paper objects to a harmless word like sea---ship.

So what's the big deal about 'Accuracy in Academia' at the University of Massachusetts? Are not campus leftists always the ones telling us we should question authority? Anything that will enhance discourse on this campus should be welcomed. If left-wingers object, let them start their own organization to monitor conservative professors.

For quite some time I have been wondering why the powers that select the artwork to be displayed on campus consistently choose that of a contemporary nature. There may very well be people out there, other than the artists themselves, who enjoy the cold pieces of twisted metal, teetering geometric shapes and rusting cubes scattered about campus, but I have found few of them. Why must we erect modern art sculptures exclusively? Certainly our generatioin is a arrogant one if we ignore the art of the past thousands of years in favor of the 'Cult of the New.'

Speaking of art, for those students who have yet to see the student arts magazine, Spectrum, they should check it out. It's bitter attacks on the United States and President Reagan make Pravda look conservative. The magazine represents such a narrow portion of the policital spectrum that it would be better entitled Segment. Oppressive and less oppressive governments of the right wing nature are dragged through the coals while leftist dictatorships are ignored or glorified. That shouldn't surprise us though, for the magazines editor, who is probably a supporter of South African divestment, has, in the past, sold sweaters on the Campus Center Concourse made in Bolivia, Libya and Afghanistan.

Americans have a right to feel good about last week's capture of the P.L.O terrorists by the United States Navy. It is certainly satisfying to finally bring some of these murderers to justice. There could, however, be dire consequences to what, for now, feels like such a victory. As a result of this recent episode, Egypt's President Mubarak was made to look like a liar or a fool. The undermining of Mubarak, who rules a country with a growing Moslem fundementalist movement, could be dangerous. Egypt is an important ally and a major actor in the Middle East peace process (if there be such a thing). Let us hope it stays that way.

Here is some sick news. Black and white racists are putting aside their differences to persecute Jews. The former head of the California Ku Klux Klan has provided black Moslem militant Louis Farrakhan with lists of Jewish 'extremists', as well as a financial contribution. Both the KKK and Farrakhan's group are anti-semetic and advocate racial separation.

What we can do about world hunger

There is a crisis occuring every day, all over the world, that not enough people are aware of. This crisis is Hunger, it is Disease, it is Death. Not just last year, in Ethiopia, but constantly, everywhere, including the United States.

There are many people who think they understand the situation, but do not do anything to find out more about it. These people simply say,"Sure, I know what 'hunger' is, it's the discomfort, pain or weakness caused by a need for food." Yet, hunger is much more than a dictionary definition. There are many who think they've done something to help, but listening to Live-Aid and "We Are The World" just isn't enough. Giving up a turkey, stuffing and potatoes dinner at the DC's once a year is certainly a start, but it still isn't enough.

"What is enough?" you may ask. Well, nothing is ever enough, but there is plenty that you can do that will help a lot. There is an organization on campus that is called the UMass Hunger Task Force, and it's there for you to help the hungry. The "you" is the 26,156 students on this aware, involved, caring campus. The "them" is the 21 children who die every minute from hunger. It is the billions of people all over the world who don't have anything to eat; who don't get enough help.

Hunger is the most widespread cause of human suffering in the world today—most people don't realize that. There are many ways in which people can learn more about hunger, and many organizations which exist for just that purpose—education. These organizations also develop annual events in which anyone can play a role. There is a fast that is held every November by one of these organizations. Participation here on campus entails giving up a dinner meal at the DC's. The cost of each meal sacrificed is donated to Oxfam America, one of the many organizations working to combat hunger. There is also an event being held in the Campus Center today called World Food Day. This event is in conjunction with the National Student Campaign Against Hunger, a group formed by the USA For Africa Relief Fund. Besides these groups, there's the Western Mass Food Bank, Bread For The World, and many more. They are all there, fighting to educate people, fighting to get more people involved, fighting to end hunger.

No one is denying the fact that the problems of world hunger are politically based. Yet, the primary problem—today—seems to exist within the public. This is not to say that there is a lack of concern, just a failure to act, perhaps due to a feeling of helplessness. So remember, for every "us" that feels they don't make a difference, there is a "them" that knows you could have.

There are two types of brokers: discount brokers, such as banks, and retail brokers, who will spend more time with the client but charge up to one-third more than a discounter. Banch advises potential investors who want a little more risk to buy bonds in companies that are in financial trouble. Due to their risk, they offer a higher return and if the company goes bankrupt, the bondholders are the first to get paid off, he says.

As for money-making schemes, however, Branch offers some traditional advice: "If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is."

FOCUS BUSINESS

$tudent $ense

By Christine Hughes and Peter Rice

A checking account. It sounds innocent enough, doesn't it? Well, it can be. But to anyone who has bounced a check, forgotten to record a payment, or had a check that they never wrote (or did they?) show up on their statement, it can become a real nightmare. Knowledge of a few simple guidelines will therefore help you to not only keep your finances in order, but also to save a bit of time.

There are many different types of checking accounts, offered by many different financial institutions. Choosing the best one depends both on your particular needs and also on a few external factors. What most people don't realize is that it costs a bank money to maintain "your" checking account. So of course, as banks are in the "money making" business, they charge you that service in a variety of subtle ways.

You most commonly pay in the form of a monthly or per check charge, or you might have what the bank will call a "free" checking account. That account title alone raises some suspicion, doesn't it? In this case, banks obtain their fee by collecting interest on your money without paying you any in return. If you should be fortunate enough to be able to maintain a large balance, some banks will not charge you a fee, and will pay you the interest earned on your account. Rest assured, however, that even in this case the rate of interest they pay will be lower than you earn elsewhere. That is, it's lower by the amount of whatever it costs them to maintain the account.

Okay, so there are some charges that you have no control over. But there is one big charge you can and most definitely should avoid. This is that infamous and usually astronomical charge for insufficient funds, better known as a "bounced check" fee. It can most definitely be extremely expensive --$25 is not an unusual fee.

In case any of you are unfamiliar with what a bounced check is, it means writing a check for more than you have in your account. It can be avoided very easily with a little thought and foresight. Each time you make a withdrawal or deposit on the account, or write a check, RECORD IT! If you keep track of how much you have left in your account, you can't overdraw it. Unless of course, you do it on purpose (who, me?)

Now, if you follow that simple rule you can avoid the embarrassment, expense, and hassle of bouncing checks. No problem, right? Well the fact is, banks rate bounced check fees as one their largest profit producers, so apparently it is a problem for quite a few people. Keeping your checkbook balanced is the key.

I know. Balanced? What's that? Many people seem to have a problem balancing their checkbooks. Balancing simply means accounting for all the transactions you've made and thereby all the money in your account. In one sentence, your account is balanced if the latest balance in your checkbook, plus the total of all the checks you've written since your last statement (outstanding checks) equals the ending balance on your last statement.

If it doesn't add up, then one of two things has happened. Either you forgot about a transaction, or the bank made an error. Not that the latter doesn't happen, but take it from someone who has seen it from both sides, you would be wise to check yourself before blaming the bank.

Rarely does the statement balance actually match that in your checkbook. In fact, if this ever happens to you, don't tell anyone because I doubt that they would believe you! The reason that you need to balance your checkbook is because you generally write checks between the last date that the statment covers, and the date that you actually get it.

As you can now see, keeping a ckecking account can really be quite easy! It just takes a little time and discipline in keeping track of your payments. Just remember...IF YOU WRITE IT, RECORD IT!

Careers and Business.....

Now's the time to start job

By ELIZABETH YOUNG
Collegian Staff

The countdown begins today.

There are 221 days left until the class of 1986 will don black robes and colored tassles and gather on the field of Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium to celebrate commencement. And while everyone will be celebrating the successful attainment of a college degree, some students will be smiling more than others.

They'll have jobs.

While not everyone wants to embark on their careers the day classes end, for those that do, it's time to start looking. Both the University Career Center and the School of Management Placement Office, which have full schedules of recruiters coming to campus and numerous other resources, are here to help.

The career center, which was dedicated after renovations earlier this month, is located in Fraternity/Sorority Park, down East Pleasant Street from Orchard Hill. There, counselors are available to help students with resumes, interviews, and research on the job market..

The SOM Placement Office, which was established in 1973, is financed with contributions from alumni and corporations and is geared specifically toward finding jobs for business majors. It held nearly 2,000 interviews last year for 450 candidates, 150 of whom were offered and accepted jobs through the office interview process.

Its workshops, which include resume writing, interviewing, cover letter writing and networking (building contacts in a chosen field), are open to all students.

The job search process begins, for career services, with registration to open a credential file, which will contain up to three references for undergrads (five for graduate students) and a transcript, if desired. Writing a resume, preparing for interviews, choosing the firms to which to apply and then interviewing, come next.

THE RESUME. Employers will spend an average of 45 seconds looking at your resume, according to career services materials; therefore, it's the first impression that counts. Your resume should be honest, concise, grammatically correct and stress those capabilities that will entice an employer to give you an interview. While experience is key for a dynamite resume, don't despair if your career has not already been significantly launched to fill out this category. Play up any experience you do have, while concentrating on your education as well. Good quality reproduction, on rag or bond paper (though not necessarily printed - good photocopying can look just as professional if it's done well), is also essential.

Sound like quite the project? Placement services offers a two-tier resume writing workshop. Session I is offered from 10:00-11:30 a.m. on Mondays and Session II is offered from 10 a.m.-noon on Thursdays and 4-6 p.m. on Fridays. Times for SOM workshops are posted down the hall from the SOM library.

THE INTERVIEW. Your prospective employer might give your resume a grand 45 seconds, but it's the first 10 seconds of an interview that counts - a first impression is a lasting impression.

In preparation for the interview, read up on the company you will be interviewing with. Analyze your stengths and weaknesses in advance, dress appropriately, and be yourself. A weak or half-hearted handshake, failure to maintain eye contact, slouching, lack of enthusiasm, smoking and poor grooming can reflect poorly, as can boastfulness, egotism, and being overly aggressive.

To interview with recruiters coming to campus, students must submit a resume to the University Placement Services office one month before the recruiting date for pre-screened interviews. For open sign-ups, students can begin submitting resumes two weeks prior to the recruitment date at the Whitmore sign-up counter. Students must submit a resume at this time for each interview.

Interview

College students can learn to invest

By STEVE KOHL
and CHRISTOS KULIOPULOS
Collegian Correspondents

Mention the word investing and a college student will say, "I don't have the time, money, or the know-how to get involved in the stock market." But whether it's stocks, bonds or real estate, there is an investment opportunity for everyone, according to a Universtiy of Massachusetts professor of finance.

Ben Branch, the author of Investments, A Practical Approach, has taught about investments at UMass for the past 10 years and has several suggestions for college students interested in planning their investment future.

For starters, "They should begin equipping themselves when they do have the money to invest by reading the Wall Street Journal, Forbes, Barrons, Businessweek," Branch advises. Once they become familiar with investment terminology, he suggests that they set up a mock portfolio and go through the motions of buying and selling securities. But playing the stock market -- which often has its risks -- isn't the only way to go. A mutual fund is a good choice for those not confident with investment decisions.

The Mutual Fund

A mutual fund, which starts at about $1,000, is a diversified portfolio of stocks that offers the investor limited risk and the potential for a reasonable return - about 11 percent - on his money.

The funds come in two types: no-load, which is bought directly through the company, and load, which is bought through a stockbroker or financial agent and is accompanied by an entry fee of about 8 percent. Low-risk options include money market funds, while municipal bond funds are a good choice for those concerned with taxes; those more interested with a good long-term return may prefer a corporate bond fund. And those looking for a little more risk might choose common stock or high risk bond funds.

"Picking the (specific funds in a given area) is almost a game of blind man's bluff," Branch said. "Individuals should pick funds that suit their own interests -- riskier funds for riskier individuals."

Real Estate

For those students whose parents have some extra income -- at least $10,000-$15,000 -- another option is buying a condominium or older house that can be renovated by the family at a low cost. By purchasing a condominium, Branch explains, the student will not have to pay rent and the parents can use the purchase as a tax write-off.

To buy a house, parents can take out a 20 to 25-year mortgage. If the student is able to rent out extra rooms to friends, there will be additional income and the student will be learning how to manage a business. And the market price of the home should rise after several years such that it should offset all the interim expenses.

"For somebody who is ambitious, I think it would be a really good learning experience," Branch said.

Playing the stock market

For students who are more knowledgable about the stock market, Branch recommends diversifying one's portfolio in at least four or five stocks in different industries. A broker should be enlisted when one is ready to invest in $1,000 commitments, which Branch recommends as a minimum, and one can buy one stock at a time as the money becomes available.

ARTS

BIBLIOFILE

BY BRADFORD VERTER

PETER GOODCHILD: J. Robert Oppenheimer; Shatterer of Worlds (Fromm, $10.95 paper)

Based on the BBC series Oppenheimer which he produced, Peter Goodchild's biography of the greatest American tragic hero has been rereleased. A brilliant physicist, Oppenheimer headed the Manhattan Project which produced the A-bomb. Drawn into the government's scientific machine, he moved in increasingly higher circles, advising Truman on various scientific matters. Due, however, to his early flirtations with the Communist party, Oppenheimer was a victim of the Red Hunt. The McCarthy trials ravaged his reputation and left him a broken man. What was his flaw? Duplicity? He exagerrated and lied about his leftist connections. Hubris? His intellectual arrogance and satiric insolence was well known. Ambition? His thirst for power made him a possible security risk. Whatever the path, we are still lead to the same sad conclusion: Politics and genius seldom mix.

Goodchild's book does not have certain advantages evidenced in other books dealing with the subject. It lacks the breadth and style of Robert Jungk's Brighter than a Thousand Suns. It lacks the depth of personal insight found in Haakon Chevalier's The story of a Friendship. But it offers something the other books do not: pictures. Beautifully riddled with photographs, Shatterer of Worlds offers a visual authenticity that none of the other books can match. Seeing the progression of this modern Galileo from precocious youth to dilapidated adulthood evokes a pathos reminicent of Dorian Grey.

DANIEL FORSTER: The Sailor's Edge. Text by Jay Broze. (Holt, Rinehart and Winston, $35 until 12/31, $40 thereafter.)

J. Robert Oppenheimer's favorite pastime was sailing, a sport paid glorious tribute in this book of action photographs. With dynamic shots of windsurfing in Hawaii and Australia, of Olympic racers in frothy competition, of entrees in the Southern Ocean Racing Conference (S.O.R.C.), of clipper ships vying for the America's Cup. Forster captures all the frenetic intensity of the sport, and his beautiful photographs pay homage to the sea's dark majesty and the men and women who strive to tame it. The book also features appreciations of Forster by renowned professional sailors such as Gary Jobson, Dennis Connor and Cino Ricci.

NATURAL LANGUAGE METAPHYSICS

Is language a veil over reality or a window to the world? Do different languages presuppose different visions of the world . . . or is there a universal structure of meanings common to all languages and part of our human heritage?

Choosing a long distance company is a lot like choosing a roommate.

It's better to know what they're like before you move in.

Living together with someone for the first time can be an "educational" experience.

And living with a long distance company isn't any different. Because some companies may not give you all the services you're used to getting from AT&T.

For instance, with some companies you have to spend a certain amount before you qualify for their special volume discounts. With some others, voice quality may vary.

But when you choose AT&T, there won't be any surprises when you move in. You'll get the same high-quality, trouble-free service you're used to.

With calls that sound as close as next door. Guaranteed 60% and 40% discounts off our Day Rate—so you can talk during the times you can relax. Immediate credit for wrong numbers. Operator assistance and collect calling.

So when you're asked to choose a long distance company, choose AT&T. Because whether you're into Mozart or metal, quality is the one thing everyone can agree on.

Reach out and touch someone.®

Women 1st in soccer poll

UM beats Dartmouth

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

For the first time in the eight year history of the program, the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team is the number one ranked team in the country. It's the first time a UMass team has attained a top ranking since field hockey did in 1981.

UMass received all twelve first place votes while North Carolina remained second in the poll. Boston College, who upset former top-ranked George Mason, 2-1 Monday, jumped up to third place. Mason dropped to fourth.

"It's kind of scary," starting goalie Jan Holland said of the top ranking. "We'll have a lot more to fight for now. People are going to want to take it away from us."

The Minutewomen won their first game as the nation's top team yesterday, shutting out unranked Dartmouth, 6-0, in Hanover, N.H.

UMass, 11-0, was led by freshman Beth Roundtree and Michele Powers, who both scored two goals. Monica Seta scored a goal and added two assists as UMass outshot the Big Green by a 25-1 margin. Cathy Spence also scored a goal. Goalie Jan Holland was barely touched in net, making one save.

"I have mixed feelings about it," Banda said of being ranked number one,"because its not the end of the season. It's good for the institution and the players. It tells people our program has risen."

"But," he warned, "it's not the end of the season. We still have four games left to play. I just hope it makes us more hungry. I think we have a team that can stand up to the pressure."

Men's soccer 18th in nation

Battle for NE: UMass is at UConn

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts invades the University of Connecticut today to decide which men's soccer team is number one in New England.

UConn (11-0-3) is currently the top ranked team in the region with UMass (11-3) right behind in second. The Minutemen are ranked 18th nationally, tied with California-Berkley. It is only the second national ranking a Massachusetts men's soccer team has ever achieved. The Huskies are seventh.

UM has won 10 of its last 11 and have recorded five consecutive shutouts. The 11 victories is a school record. Connecticut has won 11 in a row, the second longest streak in the school's history.

Minutemen coach Jeff Gettler does not have any special plan of attack for UConn.

"We are just going to try to shut them down," said Gettler. "They are not creative in their attack, it generates off of their defense. They have struggled trying to earn goals, so we will make them earn anything they get."

The Connecticut offense is led by senior forwards Matt Addington (10-3-23, four game winners) and E.J. Raffery (6-3-15). Senior Andy Pantason (0.43 GGA) has started all 14 games in goal for UConn and has six shutouts to his credit.

"They are a run and gun, great team," said Gettler. "They go all out and try to run you into the ground. They have great players, great depth. They can throw a lot of players at you."

The Minutemen rely on the scoring of sophmore midfielder Andy Bing (8-8-24) and forwards F.J. Zwicklbauer (4-9-17), Tom Giordano (5-5-15), and Anders Hedelin (6-1-13), who had a hat trick on Saturday.

Gettler is going with senior Don Donahue in net. The keeper has a 5-3 record with a 1.60 goals against average and two shutouts.

Last year, the Minutemen upset UConn 2-1 at Boyden Field, so revenge should be a major incentive for the Huskies.

"Revenge should be a big factor for them," said Gettler. "Sometimes that can work against them too. They get keyed up and can usually make mistakes. Hopefully we can capitalize on them."

But this year, the Minutemen will not be on the familiar turf of Boyden Field. Connecticut is 8-0-1 at Storrs and a hostile home town crowd of more than 2500 fans is expected.

Gettler feels his troops are ready to give UConn all they can handle.

"We are ready for them," sayd Gettler. "We are ready to go after number one."

5th-ranked field hockey hosting Harvard today

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

With its impressive victories over Temple and three-time defending national champion Old Dominion last weekend, the University of Massachusetts field hockey team jumped four places in the national poll to the number five spot, enhancing its chances for an NCAA National Tournament bid.

Riding high on a wave of confidence, the Minutewomen (8-2-1) take on Harvard, today at NOPE at 3 p.m., looking to take advantage of an inexperienced squad with first-year coaching.

The Minutewomen will be without senior All-America defensman Megan Donnelly, a scoring machine with ten goals in the last five games, who will begin a week of play with the United States National Team which competes in the American Classic in Trenton, N.J. on Thursday.

"Megan has really given us everything she has," University of Massachusetts head coach Pam Hixon said. "Against Temple and Old Dominion, our freshmen looked to Megan and she took charge."

Hixon isn't worried about Donnelly's absence, saying the team has been playing as a cohesive unit and cited the play of her freshmen as the key.

"Our freshmen really turned us around. They showed that they really wanted to be out there," Hixon said.

Now that the Minutewomen have regained their winning ways, Hixon said that they must guard against losing their momentum and falling back into a rut.

"We've proven to ourselves that we can play our game against anyone and win, even against the best," she said. "We've got fire and really want to win, our spirit was lacking earlier this season."

Football eyes conference title

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team's professed goal at the start of the season was the Yankee Conference title, now is their chance to accomplish it.

The Minutemen, 3-3 overall and 0-1 in the league, have five games left this season, four against conference opponents. On Saturday, UMass will host Maine at Alumni Staduim, the week after they host Boston University.

"We've got to go out and play our hardest and hope we can come away with the title," said UM nose guard Mike Dwyer. "It's been our goal all season."

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi, who led UMass to a 2-1 record before separating his shoulder against Holy Cross four weeks ago, has started practicing and may see action soon. Bart Fuller will start at tight end for UMass on Saturday. It is the first start in his career. Senior tailback George Barnwell moved into fourth on the all-time career rushing list with 1,713. He is 24 yards behind Bill Coleman ('78) and 67 yards behind second place Rich Jessamy ('77). He could catch both with a decent effort on Saturday. First-place Garry Pearson ('83) is unreachable however, with 3,857 career rushing yards -2,144 ahead of Barnwell.

Basketball practice starts for UM

The University of Massachusetts' basketball teams opened practice yesterday, with high hopes for a successful 1985-86.

Men's coach Ron Gerlufsen welcomed eight newcomers to his squad and has closed practice for two weeks in order to keep his rookies out of the spotlight.

Women's coach Barbara Stevens returns her entire team, plus two freshmen.

The men open their season on November 23 against Merrimac College in the renovated Curry Hicks Cage. The men return two starters, guards Carl Smith and Lorenzo Sutton. Tom Emerson, Jack Sheehan, Matt Ryan, and Wilbert Hicks return from last season. A full preview for both teams will be in the Collegian soon.

College Trustees partially divest $27million

By BRION McALARNEY
Collegian Staff

After 13 years of controversy, Amherst College Trustees decided to partially divest the college's $27 million worth of stock in companies conducting business in South Africa.

In an open letter to students on Monday, Peter R. Pouncey, president of Amherst College, outlined the decision made by the Board of Trustees.

"The students are generally happy," said Peter Sands, president of the Student Assembly at Amherst. "The trustees responded to the students."

Students have been seeking divestment in an on-again, off-again struggle since 1972, said Sands.

The College will sell its stock in category three companies that have not followed the Sullivan Principles. The principles are guidelines afor reaching racial equality in employment procedures of companies in South Africa.

The college will also sell its stock in category two companies which partially comply with the Sullivan Principles by March 31, 1986, and will decide the status of category one companies which already comply with the principles in May, 1987.

A committee of six students will meet quarterly with the investment committee of the Board of Trustees to determine the progress of those companies.

"It seems like a very sane proposal, it seems carefully made, well-considered, it doesn't represent much of a threat to the financial well-being of the college," Sands said.

Donnella Green, one of the 12 students who met with the trustees, said, "I was surprised that they even answered our proposal, double-surprised that they answered so quickly."

They came pretty close to our proposal, just a different time frame," Green said

The main difference between the students' proposal and the trustees' decision was the divestment of Category two stocks in March rather than December and the retention of Category one stocks rather than divesting 10 percent each quarter.

Green said it was important that the students met in front of the whole board, rather than just the investment committee.

"They were very shocked that students came up with a proposal...they expected us to just come in and demand divestment," said Green.

The total value of stocks to be divested is $27 million, representing about 20 percent of Amherst College's portfolio of investments said Terri Allen, Amherst College Office of Public Affairs.

The value of Amherst College's stock portfolio has decreased from $32.5 million to $27 million in recent months, due to deteriorating economic conditions in South Africa, according to The Hampshire Daily Gazette.

Faculty Senate to vote on UMass jail proposal

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate will vote today to oppose a controversial proposal for a jail on campus, designed to detain people arrested or placed under protective custody by University of Massachusetts police.

The proposal for the jail, which was created by an advisory board, is "almost wholly without merit," a report from the Faculty Senate Rules Committee states.

The committee said the board, in developing the proposal, had "failed to realize that the construction, maintenance and operation of a jail on campus is wholly inimical to the idea of a University."

The committee is urging that the faculty record its opposition to the "totally repugnant" proposal. "We can find nothing good to say about it. We urge the Senate to record its opposition to the proposal in an unequivocal manner," the report states.

The proposed jail would house anyone arrested by University police, including both students and non-students. People arrested and detained by campus police are currently transported to the Amherst police station and held there until bail is posted. Any woman arrested on campus is held in the jail in Northampton. A campus police officer is required to search the individual to prevent suicide or injuries.

"This would be a temporary holding facility," Gerald O'Neil, director of public safety said. The cells would accommodate people on a short-term basis, between six to eight hours, until bail is posted. A campus facility would save campus police from having to take people downtown.

A new state law requiring police to physically check each detainee every 15 minutes, also gave impetus to the proposal. In addition, Amherst town officials have expressed concerns about the town's liability in handling detainees from the University.

"If the town is taking care of someone else's prisoners, it can be held liable in a suit," Amherst Town Manager and member of the board, Barry DelCastilho, said. "If I were a member of the University I would prefer to be held in a University facility, rather than in another community."

University police arrested 336 people last year. Of those, 159 were students. Another 71 people, 34 of them students, were placed in protective custody because they were excessively drunk.

COOL aims toward helping others

New program encourages the human services field

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON — Chancellor Joseph Duffey and seven University students yesterday launched COOL, a new program encouraging college students to enter the human services field.

COOL, short for Campus Outreach Opportunity League, is a nationwide effort aimed at attracting students interested in helping others. Fields could include, for example, counseling cancer patients and their families or helping set up shelters for homeless refugees.

Among the plans for the program, kicked off in a press conference here, is the creation of an ROTC-style opportunity where students would receive scholarships in return for a promise to spend time in community service during weekends and after graduation.

"All the polls show a decline of belief in the political process and a sense of one's ability to participate in community service," said Frank Newman, president of the Education Commission of the States, which is spearheading the COOL effort.

"We are concerned about three things," Newman said. "First we want to send a clear voice that encourages others to join in community service. Second, we want to create a mechanism that students have for a straight forward opportunity. And third, we want to make a clear call that this is important."

The morning press conference, which was held at the National Press Club, featured Father Tim Healy of Georgetown University, Howard Swearer, president of Brown University, Newman and two students who began community service projects on their own two years ago.

"First we want to send a clear voice that encourages others to join in community service," - Frank Newman

Stacey Roth and Dan Burgess, student government co-presidents, David Martin, of the commuter area government, Lori-Ann Swanson and David Doran, Greek Area leaders, Charles Sheffield and Anthony Gee, along with Duffey, made up the Umass contingent.

Duffey said during his flight back to Amherst that he intends to ask the UMass alumni to create a scholarship fund for students who cannot afford to bear the cost of entering community service, in an effort to encourage participation in the program.

"I don't think you have a strong society if people have amnesia about those people who are less fortunate," Duffey said.

A clerk in a Boston drugstore tries to keep the flow of people moving while selling Megabucks lottery tickets yesterday. The Massachusetts Lottery Commission said the jackpot could reach as high as $30 million.

$30 million lottery tries people's luck

BOSTON (AP)—Liquor stores and supermarkets were choked by would-be millionaiares yesterday as people tried their luck at a $30 million lottery, the largest jackpot ever offered in Massachusetts.

"We're besieged. The line goes out the door," Steve Krawchuk said from his Attleboro package store, Steve's Beverage, which has sold two winning jackpot tickets since the twice-weekly Megabucks game began three years ago.

The drawing was sacheduled for 10 p.m. yesterday between dog races at Raynham Park, but lottery officials said it would take computers at least seven hours to determine if there even was a winner and several more hours to find out where the winning tickets were sold.

"They literally have to search four days' worth of files to find those numbers and see where they come from," spokesman Dave Ellis said.

Winners then must present their tickets at Lottery Commission headquarters to collect a prize.

The lottery has gone awithout a wainner since Oct. 2. If no one wins yesterday's game, it could reach $45 million, beating the $41 million jackpot record set last August in New York.

Lottery officials said they expected up to 90 percent of the adults in Massachusedtts to buy tickets for the drawing, almost 30 percent more buyers than during a typical month. "You go out and ask any 10 people, I guarantee nine have bought a ticket," Ellis said.

Ticket sales yesterday would almost certainly surpass the previous day's record of $7 million, Ellis said, noting that 45 minutes after lottery computers opened for business yesterday, stores had recorded $316,580 in sales.

"The rule of thumb is on the day of the drawing, we do twice as much business as in the previous three days, but that physically can't happen," he said. "The most the computer system can handle is $11 million a day."

Lines of 20 to 30 people stood all morning yesterday at Hill's Package Store in Seekonk, a few hundred yards from Rhode Island, owner Henry Campatelli said. Lottery officials said the busiest stores were in border towns like LSeekonk where out-of-statersss could slip over the line to buy tickets.

Campatelli said the day's sales promised to outdo Tuesday's record if the lottery computers kept pace. He said his biggest bettor so far was an unidentified man, a newcomer to the store, who had laid down at least $500.

New law requires Massachusetts to buckle up

BOSTON (AP)—A compromise bill requiring Massachusetts motorists to buckle their seat belts won approval yesterday in the House and Senate, including a provision allowing voters to express their opinion next year at the ballot.

On a roll-call vote of 84-64, the House accepted a report by a joint conference committee and sent the bill on to the LSEnate, which approved it a short time later on a roll-call of 24-13.

The measure, which makes Massachusetts the 15th state in the national to require seat belts on Jan. 1, imposes $15 fines o n violators—but only if motorists are stopped for some other infraction.

It required only routine enactment votes in each chamber before going to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Dukakis, who has been promoting the mandatory seat belt law on the grounds that it will save lives and reduce auto insurance premiums, planned to sign the bill this week, according to his sides.

"My sense is there is very substantial support on all our highway safety initiatives," Dukakis said.

Asked about the non-binding public referendum insisted on by the House, the governor said: 'I have said I'd prefer not to have it. But if the Legislature wants it, that's okay."

In the latest round of debate on the issue, supporters in the House defended the proposal on safety grounds. But opponents, often in bitter terms, renewed their attack on the bill as excessive government intrusion.

Rep. Thomas White, House chairman of the Public Safety Committee, opened the debate by noting that the $15 fine for violations would be enforced only if a motorist is stopped for another violation.

"It is a concrete step to reduce those fatal highway accident and reduce spiralling medical costs in the commonwealth," said White, D-Worcester.

"It is still a ridiculous bill," countered Augusta Hornblower, R-Groton, a leading opponent.

While she would would urge others to wear seatbelts, she objected to the use of state power to force people to do something for their own benefits.

"If it were truly important, why would we make it a secondary offense?" asked Rep. Michael Ruane, D-Salem. "It's a meaningless law."

"Right now, anyone in this state who wants to put a seat buckle on can put it on," argued Rep. Thomas McGee, D-Lynn, the former speaker.

Opponents also condemned the bill for requiring air bags, or similar automatic safety devices, on all cars sold in Massachusetts after 1989.

Last week the House rejected the conference committee's first proposal because it did not require a November 1986 referendum, which was part of the original House bill.

The new compromise calls for all motorists, in both the front and back seats of a motor vehicle, to buckle up starting Jan. 1 or face a $15 fine. Police would cite a motorist only if they had pulled over a driver for some other reason.

The proposal instructs the state insurance commissioner to consider the expected saving in injuries and claims when computing 1986 auto insurance rates.

It also forces taxi cab drivers and passengers to buckle up and adds seat belts to the list of equipment to be checked during the annual inspections.

Americans called 'most educated'

WASHINGTON (AP)—Giant strides in schooling since 1940 "have made the American people the most educated in the world," but the quality of U.S. schools sagged in the 1970s, a Census Bureau study concluded yesterday.

The special demographic study by two Census analysts also found evidence that the "return" on a college education—the edge in earnings that college graduates have over high school graduates—is growing again after shrinking in the 1970s.

"Less than 45 years ago...a solid majority of young adults were either high school dropouts or had never gone beyond elementary school," said the report. "Today...high school dropouts have been reduced to a small minority."

In 1940, only 38 percent of those ages 25 to 29 had attained a high school diploma, and a mere six percent had college degrees. Now, the report said, 86 percent of those surveyed by the Census Bureau said they have high school diplomas and 22 percent possess college degrees.

"These are very large trends and they have made the American people the most educated in the world," said the report, "Education in the United States: 1940-1983," by Dave M. O'Neill and Peter Sepielli.

It cited surveys showing that in 1980-81 almost 32 percent of all U.S. adults 25 or older had at least some college education, compared with 17.3 percent of East Germans, 17.2 percent of Canadians, 15.5 percent of Swedes, 14.5 percent of Japanese, and 7 percent of Hungarians.

1985 Chancellor's Lecture Series begins tonight

By GLORIA ROSADO
Collegian Correspondent

A distinguished linguistics professor will deliver the first address in the 1985 Chancellor's Lecture Series tonight at 8 p.m. in the Memorial Hall Auditorium.

Emmon W. Bach, University of Massachusetts professor of linguistics will speak on "Natural Language Metaphysics." He will discuss recent research on semantics and its importance in linguistics theory.

"Linguistics tries to understand language in general, more importantly the built in human capacity for language," said Bach. "The first half of the lecture will be devoted to introducing linguistics theory. Then I will be applying these theories and models to and posing questions about natural language," he said.

Bach began teaching at the University in 1973 and was named head of the linguistics department in 1977. He has taught courses in German language and literature general linguistics, syntactic theory, phonology and structure of American Indian languages on the Northwest coast. Bach's research intersts include formal semantics and syntax, Wakashan linguistics and sentence processing.

In August, Bach was named the Edward Sapir Professor of Linguistics by the University's board of trustees. He was named a Fellow of the Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities in 1984 and was awarded a University Faculty Fellowship in 1982.

He has recently completed a book Language Universals and Language Particulars: Selected Papers, 1962-77 and is currently engaged in two other works, Topics in English Metaphysics and A Theory of Syntax and Semantics.

The Chancellor's Lecture Series recognizes distinguished members of the Chancellor's Medal, the highest honor bestowed on individuals for "exemplary and extraordinary service to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst."

SATF referendum seen as 'vital'

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A referendum asking student approval in raising the Student Activity Fee $12 per year, scheduled for Oct. 29, is seen as "vital" by student leaders in keeping student control of their own funds and programs.

The referendum, if approved, will raise the Student Activity Trust Fund (SATF) from $88 to $100 per year and will mark the first increase of the fee in six years. The SATF provides resources for the SGA to provide services, activities, and advocacy to the student community.

If the proposal fails to pass, 55 of the 80 Registered Student Organizations that are funded now, will lose their current funds and have to seek alternative revenue, SGA Treasurer Dianne Rossi said.

The basic reason behind the proposed fee increase, Rossi said, is that "we only have so much money and we have so many committments."

Rossi said the $12 increase is necessary for the SGA to fund line-item committments such as the Union Program Council, Board of Governors, Pioneer Valley Transit Authority, area governments and the Distingquished Visitors Program. It is also for covering the costs of the reserves, such as capital equipment and compensating for the Stabilization Accounts, which are funds used for emergencies. In addition, the increase will help pay back the SGA's liquidation of its reserves, which it did last year to cover funding.

"Over the summer we did a lot of cost analysis and projections," Rossi said of the $12 figure. "We tried to project what a reasonable increase would be."

If the referendum doesn't pass, Rossi said, it would be a great loss to student's rights. "We have one of the strongest Student Government Associations in the country because of a trust fund that we (students) really control," she said. "To lose any of that would be devastating to the student body and their control over it."

SGA Budget Committee Chairman Jordan Rosner said students would lose their voice in the budgeting process. He said that instead of various groups having imput, four or five students along with the administration would have most of it. "The students aren't going to make the decisions, it will be the administration."

Rossi and Rosner cited inflation, insurance increases of 1000 percent, cost of living allowances for professionals and classified employees and dropping enrollment as the major causes of the fiscal crisis.

"Everything they've been working on here since the fifties is on the brink," Rosner said of the importance of the fee increase. "Either it goes over the edge or it gets pulled back."

If the fee increase is approved, it will only serve as a short-term solution for about two years, both Rossi and Rosner said. They said the SGA will have to examine the situation and set up a committee solely responsible in examining the fiscal crisis.

The Oct. 29 referendum, scheduled for the Campus Center Concourse, will have to be voted on by 7.5 percent of the students and gain trustee approval before it goes into effect in September of next year.

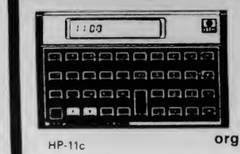
Senate is delayed by committee positions

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate last night debated recent committee appointments after the assembly recognized the failure to currently review the SGA Constitution.

More than one hour of debate was spent on a motion to accept committee appointments which were made last week. The SGA nominating sub-Committee made the appointments, but only four of the six members were present during the procedure. This point became the object of debate as David Martin, a commuter, requested that the senate divide the question. This would have divided the nominating sub-committee positions from all the other appointments.

Concerning the constitution, spokespersons from six of the seven area governments announced their area's vote on the proposed document. The constitution was rejected by the Sylvan and Northeast areas, tabled by the Greek area, given no vote by Southwest, abstained in Orchard Hill and not considered by the commuter area. The spokesperson's reports, which came at the start of the meeting, effectively rejected the document from being voted on last night.



"The document will go back for negotiation," said John Ruddock, senate speaker. "This is an SGA document which has been worked on for three years," he said, emphasizing the importance of prompt consideration and debate in the near future.

Dianne Rossi, SGA treasurer, said all the professional employees working within the SGA will attend next week's senate meeting. She said they will present a five-minute description of what they do, in response to a referendum's passage at last week's senate meeting. The referendum calls for student approval of a $12 increase in the Student Activity Fee to maintain present funding levels.

Gay, lesbian community holds forum

By ROBYN RUGGIERO
Collegian Correspondent

Issues concerning verbal and physical abuse, inadequate on-campus service and staff awareness, and the quality of academic life and residence hall living for gay, lesbian and bisexual students at UMass were addressed at a Human Relations forum yesterday.

The group met to review the findings and recommendations of a report submitted in June titled, "The Consequences of Being Gay: A Report on the Quality of life for Lesbian, Gay, and Bisexual Students at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst."

The report was submitted to the vice-chancellor for student affairs. The author of the report, Felice Yeskel and her co-worker Reed Ide, were recently hired as coordinators of the new Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual Program.

Felice Yeskel was enthusiastic about the program saying, "One of the things I'm most excited about is that we are one of the few campuses anywhere in the United States that has undertaken such systematic research in this area," and expressing her hope that they can share what they have learned with the other campuses in the five-college area as well as around the country.

"It is very clear to me that the statistics are horrendous. My first concern is to find ways that the gay, lesbian population can feel secure and protected," Reed said. He continued that if action is taken to secure the atmosphere for gays, then they may feel more secure about expressing their concerns in order to find help. He added that Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome is a "medical, social problem creating a tremendous trauma that has to be addressed as a health issue."

Not only is Massachusetts eighth in the nation for high incidence of AIDS, but one out of every five cases are within the age group of 20-29 according to Ide. He also expressed the concern that "AIDS is a convenient avenue that leads to discrimination."

The two coordinators of the new program discussed social programs as a way to build on strength for the gay, lesbian, bisexual community.

Yeskel said the program would be "Open to collaborative efforts wherever possible." She said people could help the program by publicizing it's existence, sending articles for its resource file, and making the program aware of incidents of homophobia on campus, new ideas and suggestions for the program, and needs on campus. The program is designed for lesbian, gay and bisexual concerns and will be used as a resource for such.

Motions to be viewed in dealing with a crisis

The Faculty Senate will view proposals today designed to aid the Universitv in dealing with a crisis situation.

The proposals were spurred by the senate's special report on the events surrounding the arrest of a resident assistant charged with one count of arson in Dec. 1983.

The report, compiled by the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Minorities, found evidence of civil rights violations in the arrest.

The three motions include a provision to develop policies to be implemented when non-University law enforcement agencies become involved in on-campus investigations.

The second motion requests that the administration "reaffirm" that the Office of Student Affairs and the Dean of Students Office are responsible for all students, including those suspected of illegal or dangerous behavior.

The third proposal calls for an expansion of sensitivity training and crisis management for all campus security.

In other senate action, the senate will vote on a proposal to increase the term of the ombudsman from two to three years to "lend more stability to the position and reduce the number of searches required to find a new ombudsman."

The senate will also vote on a proposal to oppose the construction of a holding facility on campus, and view annual reports by the Health Council, Admissions and Records Committee and the Campus Physical Planning Committee.

Senator Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., in a statement released yesterday, praised the efforts of the project, recalling his brother John's efforts when he created the Peace Corps 25 years ago.

"Once again the call to public service must be made," the statement said. "The need for civic commitment and constructive contributions to the public welfare of our great country is the key to our future."

Newman said during the press conference that funding for the project, which he expects to be nationwide within three years, would come from private grants as well as Congress.

Building named after recently retired Marcus

The Engineering East building now has a new name in honor of recently retired Associate Dean of Engineering Joseph Marcus.

"I cannot think of a more fitting, lasting tribute to the fine qualities exemplified by Joe Marcus as a teacher, administrator, humanitarian, than to name Engineering Building East in his honor as Marcus Hall," said College of Engineering Dean James John.

Marcus joined the University faculty as an instructor in 1948 and has been on staff for 37 years. In those years, Marcus became a highly respected member of the University community and the renaming of the building is a fitting tribute to his accomplishments, John said.

One of Marcus' greatest contributions is his influence over the vast improvements made in the College of Engineering, John said. He credited Marcus with the transition of an undergraduate teaching institution to a major research graduate center.

"Throughout this transition, Joe Marcus has had a very positive influence of the College, its faculty and students," said John.

"Marcus' efforts and devotion to the University and its College of Engineering evidence the extremely high stand of the concept of service and has given a new meaning to the term, 'institutional loyalty,'" John said.

Art Clifford of the Office of Public Information said that it would take years for him to list all of the contributions that Marcus has made. He said, however, that one of Marcus' greatest contributions was his effort to find jobs for the University alumni and "the thousands of hours of his own time which he dedicated to the University."

In addition, Clifford said Marcus strongly supported the minority recruitment program and is responsible for the presence of many minority faculty on staff.

Marcus is currently living in Amherst and was unavailable for comment.

Panel concludes students must realize the reality of nations

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

To help students in South Africa, Namibia, and Nicaragua with their daily struggle against oppressive regimes, American students must learn about the reality of the political situation and pass on the information, concluded a panel last night comprised of representatives from these nations.

The panel, part of a nationwide tour titled "Boycott South Africa, not Nicaragua," was made up of students from Nicaragua, South Africa and Namibia who have become leaders in their people's struggle.

Also in the panel were Michael Thelwell, professor of Afro-American studies at the University of Massachusetts, and John Nessen, campus coordinator for the tour.

"Many students don't know what's going on because of misinformation and apathy," said Monica Nashandi, a member of the Southwest Africa Peoples Organization, and student organizer against the South African government's occupation of Namibia.

Namibia, she said, is the most militarized country in the world with people being killed every day. "People of Namibia have decided to launch a political, diplomatic, and liberation struggle against the racist regime of South Africa."

American people, she said, are not well enough informed about the importance of divestiture from South Africa.

Clair Mohapi, representing the Youth Division of the African National Congress, spoke of the five months of hard torture, and following that, the two months of solitary confinement she went through "at the hands of the South African government."

"Students," she said,"are restricted to specific regional areas and they are not allowed to go anywhere else to study." These students aren't able to study because they have to stay in a three room home that houses over five people, she said.

"Over twenty people a day are being killed by the South African regime. Our people aren't afraid of dying anymore in fighting against this system," she said.

There is a need for greater boycotting against South Africa, Mohapi said, and a halt of the boycott by the U.S. against Nicaragua.

Virginia Montoy, a student in Nicaragua and an organizer of the National Organization of Nicaraguan Students, expressed her agreement, saying, "We encourage you to stop this. We all know that the boycott should be against South Africa and not Nicaragua."

University-Argentina Program examines constitutional democracy

"Civil-Military Relations in a Constitutional Democracy" was the topic of a three-day seminar held this week at the University of Massachusetts.

The seminar was sponsored by the University of Massachusetts, the University of Buenos Aires, and funded by a grant from The Tinker Foundation Incorporated. It was the first in a three part series scheduled by the University-Argentina Program to examine the institutionalization of constitutional democracy in Argentina.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey opened the seminar on Monday by welcoming the the participants which included academics, government and military officials and businessmen from Argentina and the United States

Other noted speakers included Dr. Francisco J. Delich, rector of the University of Buenos Aires who presented a paper entitled "Los problemas de la transicion a la democracia en el Tercer Mundo" or The Problems with the Transition to Democracy in the Third World.

Dr. Robert A. Potash, Haring Professor of History at UMass, and Dr. Jeffrey Cole, coordinators of the seminar, are directors of the University-Argentina Program.

The program came about following an agreement that was signed by Chancellor Duffey and Dr. Delich last Febuary. The agreement called for the promotion of Latin American studies on the Amherst campus and of North American studies at the University of Buenos Aires.

The agreement also sought for more faculty exchanges between the two universities and a series of seminars to be held in Amherst and Argentina.

Varsity demotions unfair

Roth/Burgess

September 1, 1986 is slated to be an ominous day in the history of UMass/Amherst. On that day, five of our varsity sports teams: men's and women's skiing, men's and women's tennis and men's golf, will experience a change-of-status. In other words, they will be demoted to club status. We can hardly cite this as a proper tribute to these teams, whose individual achievements have contributed immensely to UMass tradition, over the past 25 years.

Just over one year ago, the Board of Trustees voted to immediately demote seven sports teams to club status. In addition to the five named above, wrestling and women's golf were also included, at that time. After a summer of hectic lobbying by faculty, staff, and students, a two year grace period, at varsity status, was granted by the Board of Trustees. The past year and the coming year are devoted to a continuing lobbying effort, as well as the preparation of alternative actions which the trustees might consider. In the meantime, wrestling and women's golf have slowly withered into non-existence. These are technical facts...confused? Well, hopefully you are, at least, the slightest bit curious. Overall, we are in need of ideas, support, and "teamwork." Hence, allow us to explain the rest of the saga so that we can enlist your help.

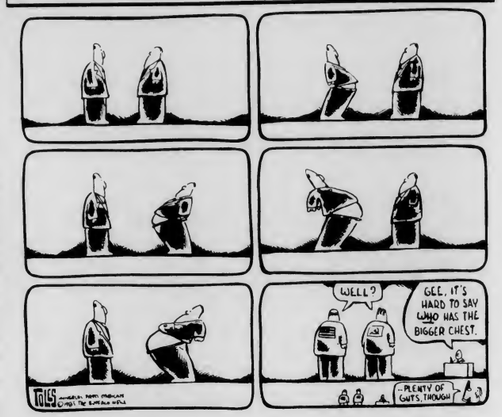
What are the major arguments? Basically, the seven sports teams cost approximately $75,000 to fund and maintain at varsity status. Proponents of the status change assert that, by demoting these teams, the University will free itself of financial obligations to them. Therefore, the teams will have to compete (as well as possible) with the other club teams and the $75,000 could be put towards additional sports scholarships for the football, basketball, and the remaining women's sports teams. The logic is based on the "Georgetown go for the gusto with one" argument. If we can upgrade our basketball and football to an extent which will help them attain constant national ranking and press, funding will increase and pride will be fostered around two excellent sports teams.

This is preferred to simply enabling several mediocre teams to exist. Those students who desire it can participate and compete at the club level. This will be much more gainful to the University's reputation than our present constantly awkward appearance of not having any big spectator winning sports.

The counter arguments are many faceted. First, we cite the need for a university the size of UMass/Amherst to provide a diverse program of sports. Any university which claims the diverse background and opportunity foung here had best be accountable to all aspects of the educational process. This includes sound education through involvement in "life long sports," not just big money making spectator sports.

Additionally, the trustees failed to explain alternative funding methods for the seven sports teams. Perhaps by juggling funds within the Athletic Department or not hiring an additional football coach or asking the students if they want to pay a special athletic fee, the problem could have been solved in a different way. Indeed, it could still be solved by using one of these methods. Last spring, a referenda by students to affirm the acceptance of a $2/year fee for funding these teams was overwhelmingly approved. The difference between this fee and the many others which the trustees implement is fundamental. This fee is based on a choice of priority set by the students, for money which they are spending on their college education.

Specifically, these team players would no longer be able to obtain easy access to University transportation or medical personnel, in conjunction with their traing and competition. They would also have extreme difficulty using University Academic Scheduling facilities and in obtaining quality competitors due to their lack of varsity status.



The parents of the members of those teams, University alumni, and students must work together if we expect to save these teams. Throughout the next month, the University Board of Trustees will make their decision regarding the future of our presently diversified sports program. We need your input, ideas, alternatives, time and any other solutions you may have. Stop by and talk to us. Soon.

His lessons offensive, oppressive

I must confess that I have never read the Bible. I am not religious or of any religious background, but I always felt I would like to read the Bible. It was the same impulse that led me to read Dickens and Chaucer. Since following the series of articles by Rusty Denton, I have changed my mind! If Denton's intention is to get people, particularly women, to read the Bible, well then, I would like to say he lost one previously curious customer.

I find it personally offensive that Denton feels that he, as a man, is responsible for my protection. How presumptuous! That Denton feels all women have "special vulnerabilities and need for a supportive family and congregation..." is ludicrous. Does this mean that men don't need a supportive family? And where does Denton get off telling me that I need a congregation? He doesn't even know me!

Denton stated and honestly believes that awoman was created as a "God-given counselor." Then, how does this explain the failing of man to listen to her? Denton says that a woman is "a help to him (man)—not out of chauvinism, but in the interest of order." I think Denton should lift his head from his Bible and focus his eyes from the print onto the world around him. What kind of "order" has man created? With world "order" in the process of falling down around us, he can sit back in his comfortable reading chair and tell us women that we are "weaker vessels" and have "Special vulnerabilities." The truth is that this is only true if we women let it be true. One way not to let it be true is to realize that the book Denton is so fond of quoting from is many centuries old and, in my opinion, unlike other "classics" of literature, is outdated.

I would never say that women who choose to live in "biblically-patterned households" are either unprivileged or oppressed, but to judge the rest of us by their standards oppresses us. And whether anyone likes it or not, the rest of us are the majority in the waorld, and if they ever want to further the ideas of Denton's minority, they had better learn some less offensive tactics—tactics that do not put 50 percent of the population down as "weaker vessels" and simply "God-given counselors." If people are so blind as to the changing status of women around them, then they areally are not putting their God-given share of wisdom to much use.

Sanctuary not a naive idea

Peter Dow's "US Sanctuary Idea Naive" column in last week's Collegian seeks to discredit this extraordinary and powerufl call to conscience.

His language dehumanizes individual and family suffering with the legalistic terms "illegal aliens." While Dow cites Salvadoran and other human rights organizations wahen they apparently support his argument, none of these groups would offer any support for his assertion that Nicaraguan and Cuban Refugees suffer "a far worse plight" than Salvadorans and Guatemalans.

Dow neatly divides the supposed good and bod countries. He evidently does not know that thel Guatemalan government routinely receives US military aid through what are labeled economic channels and through third government proxy funding. Moreover, ignoring the Immigration and Naturalization Service's coercive treatment of refugees, its infiltration of sanctuary communities, and the individual refugees' problems with the language and legal conventions means the reader of Dow's polemic has far fewer facts than appear at first glance.

For Dow to find sanctuary noteworthy is a sign of the times. The appeal of sanctuary is the human face it gives to the headlines, making contact with individuals who are refugess and exiles and immigrants, and who at the very least deserve these words and not "illegal aliens." Such words, deliberate or not, can create the social conditions in the United States where the least protected are the most vulnerable. So important news is Gov. Dukakis' executive order insuring greater protection for refugees in the Commonwealth as well as establishing a new office of Refugee Resettlement.

I hope Dow will allow his demonstrable powers of argumentation to join hands with a compassionate understanding of individuals and their complex lives. Sanctuary is not a naive idea or an abstraction. It is a special presence, a community of hope and trust here in the Pioneer Valley. I hope we can all meet the reality soon.

Marcos an asset for U.S.

Peter Dow

While most American political attention has centerd around South Africa, Central America, and the Middle East recently, the government of Ferdinand Marcos in the Philippines continues to make positive political and economic reforms. These reforms have occured, in large part, because of quiet US pressure on the Marcos government since the murder of Benigno Aquino in 1983.

Marcos' reforms have also succeeded despite the efforts of American leftists who want the pro-US, anti-communist Marcos overthrown. Indeed, there is a substantial opposition movement in the Philippines; much of it is moderate, democratic, and unorganized. But the major threat comes from the New People's Army (NPA) which is the Philippines' highly organized communist insurgency. The NPA has between 10,000 and 12,000 armed guerillas (in a country of 52 million), and operates visibly in many urban neighborhoods. However 85 percent of Filipinos belong to the Roman Catholic Church, which serves as source of stability, and provides no substantial forum for "liberation theology."

Perhaps the most accurate indicator of Filipino political ideology was the election for the National Assembly in May, 1984. Despite the leftist boycott of the elections and NPA violence at some voting places, Filipinos cast votes for five times as many opponents as previously sat in the Assembly. More importantly, Marcos has respected the election results, and has allowed the opposition to be seated. Such a strong opposition is very encouraging, since it shows a rebuilding of democratic institutions, and also proves that Filipinos want democratic, not revolutionary, change.

Other political, economic, and military progress in the Philippines should prove to the US that this ally is worthy of our support. There is now a great degree of press freedom in comparison with other developing countries. Additionally, the Agrava Board (appointed by Marcos to investigate the assasination of Benigno Aquino) has charged 24 military commanders with conspiracy, thus restoring some faith in Marcos and his government's judicial system.

On economic issues, Marcos has begun to implement IMF recommendations to ease the current crisis; strict budgetary constraints, limits on the domestic money supply, and a floating peso are some of the recent policy implementations. In addition, Marcos has begun market-orientated reforms that are necessary for sustained economic growth.

Militarily, the Philippines has undergone some major reforms, directed by the new Chief of Staff Fidel Ramos. Ramos' first emphasis has been to "clean up" his military, and redirect efforts to where they are needed; fighting the communist insurgency. Indeed, the admission of the NPA as a major threat is an important step—until a few years ago, Marcos tended to ignore the growing communist opposition.

The US must, however, maintain its pressure upon Marcos to ensure continued reforms. We must support fair and free local and Presidential elections in 1986 and 1987. Economically, the US can use the power of the IMF and the World Bank to pressure for more free markets, particularly the busting of agricultural monopolies. Militarily, the US must increase its assistance to the Philippines, contingent upon the implementation of reforms. Indeed, their military budget has been slashed drastically, to levels insufficent to effectively combat the NPA (as a percentage of GNP, defense expenditures are at 1.1 percent, the lowest level in Southeast Asia).

Additionally, the American military bases in the Philippines are vital to the security of the area; they provide an effective balancing presence to the Soviets in Vietnam. Yet the importance of the bases should not be overstated; if the Philippines fell, the US could find alternative, though inferior, bases. Yet, if the NPA did gain power, there would be no alternatives for 52 million Filipinos. The severe problems experienced today under a pro-US authoritarian government are minor compared to the conditions under totalitarian communist regimes. We see this situation today in Nicaragua, Cuba, Vietnam, Angola, and Ethiopia. America must not allow this dreadful fate to be imposed upon the Phillipines.

Philippines ripe for change

Rob Skelton

The US-propped government of Ferdinand Marcos in the Philippines, like so many other puppet regimes of the Third World, seems soon to fall. As with Pinochet's Chile and Chun's South Korea, there's a limit to how long an oppressive and unpopular government can continue to pander to the industrial world, while ignoring the needs of its people.

Witness Somoza's Nicaragua and Nimeiri's Sudan; Marcos is repeating history by overstaying his welcome, stifling opposition, and accumulating vast wealth. Banana republics differ little from pineapple archipelagos in this respect—safe haven for United Fruit means more than peasant niceties. And political movements tinged by Marxism mean Western support, despite dismal leadership records.

The assasination of popular opposition leader Benito Aquino on the tarmac at the Manila airport signaled the beginning of the end for Marcos. Though he wasn't directly implicated, the parallels with other equally suspect incidents elsewhere hint that Marcos is on his way out.

The Somoza-ordered murder of Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, editor of Nicaragua's only opposition paper La Prensa in 1977, provided the fuel that really fired up the revolution that was to oust the US-backed government two years later.

In Sudan, Nimeiri's inept government-ordered hanging of a very popular Moslem leader preceded his ouster by a few months. Marcos has held on for two years now, but signs indicate he is fast slipping.

Philippine export earnings this year plunged 11 pecent from last year's already low levels, prompting the International Monetary Fund, which oversees their $25 billion foreign debt, to call for another unpopular devaluation of the peso.

While the Filipino middle and working classes get pinched by IMF austerity measures, the elite (including Marcos) hold overseas investments equal to 54 percent of the foreign debt, according to the estimates of private Philippine economists. A recent front-page New York Times feature describes this in detail.

Armed counter-government insurgencies are the people's answers to Marcos' inattentiveness. Even though the Philippines have received billions of dollars in foreign aid (mainly payment for US military rights), rural development and land reform promises have gone unfulfilled. Less than 2 percent of the Filipino peasants now have title to their land as a result of Marcos' "reform."

Three-quarters of all Filipinos depend on agriculture for their livelihood, but most don't own their own land. The Philippines, like its Spanish-colonized cousins in Central America, has a legacy of the rulers and the ruled. Filipinos, like Central Americans, are in the midst of changes that are revolutionary.

Marxism appears attractive to those oppressed for decades. Hard-ass rulers who refuse to budge don't make compromise easy. And overseas patrons who either see red, white and blue, or only red maker for disasterous policies similar to, say, Vietnam, or El Salvador.

A recent US Senate report pointed to the vulnerability of the two American bases in the Philipines. The fact that guerrillas of the New People's Army (NPA) were actually operating within the perimeter of the US Naval station at Subic Bay, which is guarded by the Philippine military, is "nothing short of incredible," the subcommittee said.

That is only one example of the deterioration in the Philippines. The facilities near Manila are valuable to western defense, but indications are that when Marcos goes, the bases will follow shortly. America had a chance to clean up the Philippines, but, like Nicaragua, we deferred until it was too late.

We will, hopefully, come to terms with this blind spot. Until then we remain a target, and rightly so, of Third World frustration.

Fraternity's rude behavior

Nancy Emond

On Oct. 2, Ghandi's birthday, the Nipponsan Myohoji Buddhist Monks' peace walk arrived in Amherst. They were on their way to Leverett to inauguarate the first Peace Pagoda in the Americas. This in itself is a singualrly important event, since the US is the only country ever to have used an atomic weapon. The monks had walked all the way from Plymouth, to end here at the campus with a message of peace-consciousness raising and of nonviolence. The gathering here was very poorly attended (either students were not aware of the event, or, perhaps because of fear in the face of possible nuclear annihilation, there is apathy.)

John Shuchard, one of the "Plowshare 8" gave an inspiring talk on non-violence and its imperitive value in a world with a narrow margin of safety. (The Plowshare 8 is a group of eight members who broke into a Trident Submarine base, and, with their own blood, wrote THOU SHALL NOT KILL on the nuclear warheads. They were sentenced to various prison terms for this act of nonviolence. John, himself spent two years in prison.)

Now brothers, on our peace walk from the Campus Pond to Amherst Common, you met us at the BKO fraternity house with a banner. It read "Nuke the Pagoda" and you stood on the steps jeering and shouting obscentities.

I take exception to this kind of rude, unfeeling behavior for a number of reasons. Among them, as a member of Leverett's Board of Selectmen I object to the inhospitality of your act. I had a number of Japanese guests staying in my home last week for this inauguration. It certainly speaks ill of BKO and the UMass campus to have witnessed subjecting them to such unthinking cruelty.

I stepped out of the walk to ask you to put away your banner. I asked you why you had done this. You said things like, "Better dead than Red" and "because we love our country." I told you if you loved your country or your family or friends you would be in the walk with us—and I'll thank you not to assume I, or my family, would rather "be dead than Red" because, my friends, we'd rather be alive than anything.

You told me I was too idealistic and boasted of your pragmatism. I hate to break this to you, but "better dead than Red" is the supreme nationalistic, idealistic statement. Don't get me wrong, I love this country in a patriotic way, not in a nationalistic way. There is something dangerous about that kind of nationalistic fervor. In these jaded times, there is no room for violent heros like "Rambo" and Schwartzenegger. We have grown in our level of consciousness to the point where we should slways question authority. Nobody should ever walk blindly into a conflict where lives are lost because of a different ideology. Every country, every person has the right to self-determination.

If you really know in your hearts what love is, that it transcends ideologies, then I ask you to join the peace movement. Not one human life should ever be lost because of any ego-centered ideology. When we are socialized, we are taught not to kill. Basic training dehumanizes young men. It strips them of every shred of morality when it teaches them to "see the enemy as less than human." Only then can one hate and kill someone who is trying to defend his home and family.

As I left the fraternity, after 20 minutes of exchanging thoughts, one of you called "come back sometime." I'd still like to talk to with you, and so would the Vietnam Veteran's Peace Education Network. We think if you examine your hearts, you'd not find anger but fear. On one level or another we're all afraid. Who isn't afraid of the thought of the world afire? This is not a game brothers, because there would be no winners. With hands clasped, I bow and say, "Na mu myo ho ren gey kyo."

This is the chant we used on our peace walk, a chant of non-violence.

'Faith' and 'religion' not the same

Last Friday I attended the convocation of faith ("Faith in Action") happening on this campus and, subsequently, the inauration of the first peace pagoda in North America located in Leverett.

The latter event is probably one of the most important events of a life-time because it was to commemorate one of the first structures built in this country not to speak about or against war, but to symbolize peace.

Disappointingly, very few students attended either event. Why? Is this apathy based on fear (which was suggested by one of the speakers) or misconceptions about occurances labled religious? I believe that when one says 'faith' or 'religion' to a person, they freak out. The subject for me brings bnack memories of being dragged out of bed to Sunday school, which told me things I could neither understand nor accept then. but this is not religion.

Religion (and I define it it loosely in my own terms because, above all, belief is personal) is only a word which is a description of the intangable 'Spark' embodied in all life.

This being the case, the message about "Faith in Action" is that if we can perceive this force in ourselves, to create world peace and justice, we must learn to respect it and nurture it in all other living beings. It doesn't mean we all hop on the perfection/guilt 'faith' train. It just means that we try to care about and respect the life around us, that's where peace begins.

One last note: As I was leading some Nipponzan Myohoji nuns (This is the order of Japanese buddhist monks who have been around and about campus these past weeks) through the Campus Center Friday, I heard a young woman say, "Yeah, weird. But at least they're not hurtin' anybody." Well, in fact, they are doing a lot more than just no hurtin' anybody. They have beenworking for us on the pagoda in these past two years to bring the message of dedication, strength andpeace into our community.

This is your big chance to catch the up and coming or going bands in the area. Every Thursday night a band or two plays the Hatch. The last two weeks there has been good danceable music which has an edge to it which is rarely found on MTV. At any rate there will be bands there every Thursday until the end of the semester. It's worth checking out.

NRBQ will be playing at Pearl Street tonight. New Man will be at the Red Balloon.

Nothing much on Friday, Richard Thompson and Randy Newman at Berklee in Boston but that's about it.

Saturday's big excitement is Blue Oyster Cult, booked as Soft White Underbelly, will be playing the Agora in Hartford. On Sunday, Paradise City Jazz Band will be playing at the Hotel Northampton and Claudia Schmidt will be at the Iron Horse. Ducks Breath Mystery Theatre will be at the Northampton Center of the Arts.

Taj Mahal will be at the Iron Horse on Tuesday.

10,000 Maniacs, billed as some kind of post-punk Fairport Convention will be playing at the Iron Horse on Wednesday. This is sponsored by WMUA so figure that it will be pretty interesting. X will be playing with the Del Fuegos at the Agora in Hartford.

Morris Day will be appearing with Lisa Lisa and Full Force 8 p.m., Thursday Oct. 24, at the Fine Arts Center, courtesy of UPC and the Duke Ellington Committee.

Academy repaired

By JENNIFER KAUFMAN

NORTHAMPTON — The Academy of Music reopened on Sept. 6 after closing for renovations on May 21, earlier this year. The 93-year-old plaster ceiling had collapsed and was refurbished for safety reasons.

Money needed for the reparation was loaned by the City Council. The Bank of New England is the Academy's sole commercial sponsor, and will match public contributions providing that $2,500 is raised. Donations by Pioneer Valley residents are still being accepted directly by the Academy, and via the Bank of New England.

The Academy of Music was built in 1892 by Edward H. Lyman, specifically for opera. Now the Academy features foreign, domestic, and reperatory art films. The Academy also offers live theater. Resident opera, dance, ballet, and symphony companies are booked for the next three months. Recently, classical tastes have been appeased by special appearances by Anna Pavlova and the Boston Symphony.

Duane Robinson, manager of the Academy, says the establishment "speaks for itself," and takes pride in mentioning the appearances of some of America's foremost entertainers.

Sarah Bernhardt dazzled the audience for the premier of the Academy. Harry Houdini built a trap door for a portion of his act, and the door can still be seen on the stage in front of the screen. Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor were presented prior to filming a movie at Smith College.

"It is no wonder," says Robinson, that Mayor David B. Muste Jr. has referred to the Academy as "the cornerstone of Northampton."

Getting to know Bianconi

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Correspondent

French pianist Phillipe Bianconi, who won the silver medal of the Seventh Van Cliburn International Piano Competition, has come a long way from the seven-year-old boy who began playing the paino because he "liked it."

Bianconi, who appeared in concert last night at the Fine Arts Center, made his first orchestral debut in 1975 with the Nice Philharmonic of France. He began to think about playing the piano as a career at age 13 and performed his first concert at age 15.

"I was considered a very talented and gifted child, but not a prodigy," Bianconi said. At age 18 he began his concert circuit while he continued to study piano performance.

The Van Cliburn wasn't his first winning competition, but it was his most important. "It's the thing that has brought me so many engagements and changed my life so completely," he said.

"The rhythm of my life has changed and I am traveling much more," he said. More than 30 concerts have been scheduled in the U.S. and he said he estimates he will have even more next season.

Although he likes to make music and play for an audience, Bianconi doesn't enjoy competitions and says they are unecessary.

"I hate to be compared to others," he said. "There's a bad atmosphere at competitions."

As part of his Van Cliburn competition prize, Bianconi has recorded a solo album of music by Liszt, Ravel, Prokofiev and Schumann.

"I like Romantic music like Chopin, Schumann, and Brahms. I like to play the French Impressionists and I like Mozart," he said. Bianconi, who lives in Paris, will be giving an informal talk about his musical experiences and the competitions at 10:10 a.m. today in the Bezanson Recital Hall.

Movie trends . . .

Exploring the 'Commando' genre

By Thomas Harrington
Collegian Correspondent

Let's face it. Not only was Rambo: First Blood, II the highest-grossing film of the summer movie season, but it made Sylvester Stallone the new John Wayne and firmly established a whole new gun-blasting, gut-crunching genre: The Commando Movie. Stallone will almost certainly get to work on the next Rambo installment as soon as possible, and already, Arnold Schwartzenegger, the new Errol Flynn, has burst forth with Commando and Chuck Norris, the new Audie Murphy, ha come out with Invasion, USA.

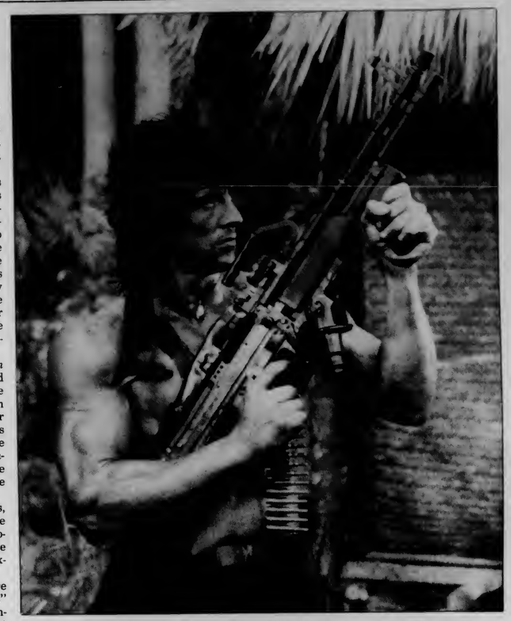
So what is a commando movie? Basically, it's a new type of war movie characterized by several departures from the old form. Firstly, the hero possesses a strength and ferocity that was not found in even the toughest old combat flicks. Secondly, he is a loner, working without or apart from his fellow soldiers and the military command, and thirdly and most importantly, there is a moral and political message that makes these movies very relevant to the public's current feelings, especially those of younger people.

The super machismo aspect of the genre was bred mainly by Stallone's Rocky III, a landmark film in American pop culture. Not only did it turn away from the popular '70's image of "sensitive male" that Stallone himself tried to emulate in Rockys I and II, but it created a macho man who went beyond ordinary toughness and into mythological, almost superman levels, making stars out of two of the featured players in the film, Mr. T and Hulk Hogan. First Blood and Schwarznegger's Conan and Terminator flicks also contributed towards the trend.

The vigilante approach of a commando movie is a total departure from the teamwork and camaraderie found in most old GI flicks. The hero now works alone, without fighting companions or leaders. Though he is sometimes portrayed as a soldier of fortune (ex. Stallone in Rambo), it is always clear that honor—both his and America's—are far more important to him than money. The chief inspirations here are the Death Wish and Dirty Harry series starring Charles Bronson and Clint Eastwood respectively.



The most important aspect of these films by far is the political and moral messages that they give to their audiences, especially regarding the Vietnam war. These overwhelmingly patriotic fans, though too young to have any real memories of the war, have come to see it as the dividing line between "old" American values as characterized in World War II and cowboy movies, and "new" problems, such as the Iranian hostage crisis. For them, the war is like a cloud of failure hanging over the country, stifling it from taking direct action in tense situations.

The POW films of the genre—Uncommon Valor, Missing in Action, I and II, and Rambo—resolve this dilemma. In every one of these films, there are still prisoners in Vietnam, proving that the issue of the war remains unresolved. The hero then comes in and rescues them, proving in principle that the US could have won the war. Rambo became a great success by including the "true" source of America's failure, the bureaucrat, as the main villian.

In a sense, the commando movie icons, especially Rambo, serve the same purpose as an earlier generation's Billy Jack by providing young people with an invincible father-figure icon who symbolizes (and exploits) their ideals and frustrations.

This makes one wonder about the future of these films. Now that their "statement" has been made with Rambo, will the commando movies fizzle out like the portest movies of the early 70s did? Will they drop their politics and try to make an appeal beyond actions fans? Or will they perhaps, continue to follow Rambo's formula, with every movie?

After all, we still need help with the Beirut bombings and the 007 crash, and we never did get back Britain for the war of 1812, did we?

Sylvester Stallone brandishes muscles and weapons in "Rambo" an example of the violent trend in new movies.

'Commando' is predictable, uninspiring

COMMANDO
Starring Arnold Schwarzenegger and Rae Dawn Chong
Hampshire 4 Theaters

By THOMAS HARRINGTON
Collegian Correspondent

Movie Review

Early in the picture, Arnold Schwarzenegger forces innocent passerby Rae Dawn Chong into her car and, pointing to a villain's car, orders her to "follow him."

"I knew you were going to say that," she moans back. Indeed, I knew he was going to say that too, as did everybody else in the movie house. Commando follows the conventions and cliches of tough-guy action pictures so faithfully, it's often too silly for words.

The opening of the film assures us that Schwarzenegger, the retired head of one of those top secret task forces, would like nothing better than to spend all his time with his cute little daughter who, though raised alone by him in a secluded mountain cabin, has inherited none of his Northern European accent. Alas though, she's soon kidnapped by terrorists, and poor Arnold must start snapping necks, stealing planes, and blowing up buildings to get her back. And they say they don't make films about families anymore.

This all leads to a climax in which Arnold takes on an army of mercenaries who all shoot at him as if they were cross-eyed, except when he's running from them or standing perfectly still, in which case they don't shoot at him at all.

The production values are okay and the film moves along at a pretty good pace, occasionally coming up with a new idea or two, but it renders itself so stupid that even the most exciting scenes were greeted by as much derisive laughter as applause.

Highlights include Arnold breaking a chain lock with his bare hands and not even straining; his rummaging through an army surplus store that contains enough firearms to supply a third-world nation; and a South American mercenary who says, "A little girl's throat cuts just like butter." In another scene, Arnold tells a bad guy that he "eats Green Berets for breakfast." Is this a challenge to Rambo?

In fact, Commando takes most of its ideas from Rambo, including the lone hero on a mission format, the father figure officer who stands in awe of his student's capabilities (James Olson), and the ultimate uselessness of regular soldiers, who are all either shot down or too late to do any good. About the only thing missing is superpatriotism, but then can you imagine Arnold saying, "I am proud to be a Yankee"?

Actually, Schwarzenegger does a pretty good job of bringing a light touch of humor to his part, probably the best strategy considering his material. Unfortunately, his more emotional scenes are awfully thin, proving that the closer he comes to playing a real person, the less believable he is.

Rae Dawn Chong turns in a good performance, though it's the thankless job of being the romantic interest in an action movie. In one scene, the script had her babble on for what must have been at least twenty seconds, prompting a fan in army fatigues behind me to tell her to "shut up."

Though it's good for a laugh, Commando is simply too lightweight to make any real impact on the viewer. In fact, when it was over, I made a point to ask a Stallone fan friend of mine what he thought of it.

"It was so stupid," he said. "I mean Rambo was real—in comparison, I mean."

It's time you changed your socks!

"I just go out and try to have fun," Bing said. "I know that sounds corny but I don't know how much longer I'm going to be able to play at this level of competition so I'm just trying to enjoy myself."

Bing has had so much fun this year that people, especially opposing coaches and players, are beginning to take notice. Bing was named to the all-tournament teams at the Akron (Ohio), Iona, and UMass tournaments. Bing was named the outstanding offensive player at the Iona event. All honors were determined by the votes of opposing coaches.

All this recognition hardly resembles the attention given to Bing during his first year of varsity play, when he was trying to adjust to the college level of play.

"I have seen a 100 percent improvement in his play as compared to a year ago," Gettler said. "Around the middle of last year, he started his first game and he told me to get ready to take him out after the first ten minutes. Now he goes the full ninety minutes."

"The biggest difference has been in his confidence," Gettler said. "But that's normal, it usually takes a year for the guys to get used to playing at the college level."

"I definitely think I've adjusted more to the college game," said Bing, who played soccer at Princeton Day High School as well as baseball and basketball.

"Last year I was kind of awkward. I think I've learned to be more effective and not get pushed around. I try to learn from every game and use what I've learned everytime I go out on the field," he said.

Even though he broke into the starting lineup late in the season in '84, Bing led the midfielders in scoring with five goals by the year's end.

While Bing possesses exceptional speed and strength, certain intangibles impress his coaches.

"His sense of anticipation is very good, even excellent," Gettler said. "That's what makes him such a good player, his ability to 'read' the action. He just sees the game ahead of a lot of the other players."

Specifically, Schmiechen points to Bing's ability to "make the through pass, the pass that beats defenders and opposing teams.

"It's easy to make the pass to the right or the left but he makes that forward pass that gives his teammates chances to make shots or passes," Schmiechen added.

"I don't think I have a lot of responsibility as a center halfback," Bing said. "I just try to open up the whole field and find the open man. I try to get good balls to the open men and make things happen. When I have the ball I just try to beat my man."

If there is one part of the game that Bing enjoys the most it is the one-on-one confrontation. In these situations, Bing likes to think his physique gives him an edge.

"I think I'm deceptive looking," Bing said. "My opponents see this tall and skinny guy coming at them and they think, 'what's he going to do'. So I try to catch them off their guards."

While Bing adeptly handles his responsibilities as a player, he prefers to leave the responsibilities of team leadership to the senior members of the club.

"In practice I just listen and try to improve," Bing said. "When gametime comes the captains and the seniors do the job out on the field. Everyone knows their responsibilities anyway. You have to let the coaches do the coaching. I'm not much of a leader."

"We have players that take care of the outward leadership because they are experienced," Gettler said. "But Andy leads by doing, he picks us up with his play."

Soccer beaten by Connecticut, 2-0

Men lose New England title game, winning streak snapped at seven

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

STORRS, CT — Scoring opportunities do not come often against the University of Connecticut and the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team squandered the few that it had as the 18th ranked Minutemen fell to the seventh-ranked Huskies 2-1 yesterday.

"We should have had a goal, maybe two goals," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "We had four good chances in the first half. You hope that you are going to get goals when you create opportunities."

The Minutemen's best threat came just 9:26 into the contest. UMass was awarded a direct kick 8 feet from the UConn goal. The Connecticut defenders formed a human wall in front of their net. Junior Ferdie Adoboe fired a shot that was blocked by Huskie goalkeeper Andy Pantason. The rebound came out to the right to Junior Anders Hedelin. The forward's shot hit off the top cross bar and back in front of the net. Sophomore Kevin Knopf headed the ball toward the goal, but UC defensive back Tony Rizza deflected the shot away.

"We had our opportunities," said Andy Bing, UMass' leading scorer. "I don't know how some didn't go in."

The two teams played even for the first half and went into the locker rooms knotted at zero, but Connecticut began applying more pressure in the second period.

The brilliant play in net of Senior Don Donahue kept the game scoreless for a while longer. The UMass' keeper continuously denied the UConn attack, including a spectacular diving one-handed deflection of what appeared to be an open net shot.

"He made some incredible saves," said Bing, "and the fullbacks made some incredible saves too."

Connecticut finally broke the drought at the 56:22 mark. Senior Matt Addington took a pass from Junior Greg Barger, split the middle of the UMass defense, and hit a shot from 20 yards past Donahue's right. The goal was the forwards eleventh of the year and his fifth game winner.

A key to the play was when UConn back Thouki Stavrianidis won a loose ball at midfield and fed Barger along the left sideline. The Huskie defenders controlled the midfield area all afternoon and were able to keep the majority of play in the Minutemen's end.

"We were not as tight at midfield as I hoped we would be," said Gettler. "The game was one or lost at midfield."

"We gave them to much room," said Bing. "My man, number 5 (Stavrianidis) was all over, so I deserve some of the blame."

"We didn't care if they had the ball most of the game. We wanted to keep the ball in front of us, then make long runs. That's physically exhausting. They are a great team, they deserve all the credit."

Connecticut's second goal came on a great individual effort by Freshman Dan Donigan. The forward rushed the middle of the UMass defense and blasted a shot from 30 yards into the top right corner of the net . Sophmore James Forgette was given an assist on the play.

Pantason recorded his seventh shutout of the season. The UConn keeper has allowed only six goals in 15 games this year.

The loss broke a six game winning streak for UMass and dropped their record to 11-4 on the season. The Minutemen entered the contest ranked second in New England, just ahead of Boston University. Gettler feels that the defeat to Connecticut should not hurt his teams position.

"I still think we are second, I don't know," said the coach. "I would still like to come back here at the end of the year (in the national tournament) and give it another shot."

No letdown for stickers, UM wins, 2-1

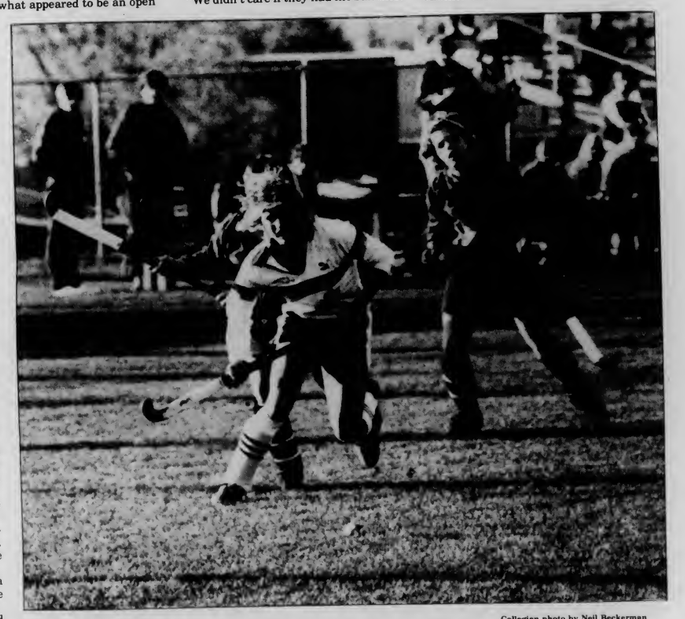
By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

There was no letdown for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team as it defeated Harvard University 3-1 on a wind-swept NOPE Field yesterday afternoon.

UM coach Pam Hixon feared her fifth-ranked Minutewomen would be complacent after big victories over Temple and Old Dominion this past weekend. That and the absence of senior All-American defender Megan Donnelly (playing for a week with the U.S. national team) had Hixon worrying about the game with the Crimson.

"Last season, after the Temple and Old Dominion games, we lost to them (Harvard) 1-0," Hixon said. "But today we came right out and went after them, forcing them to run and getting good shots on net. It was a good effort for us."

UMass, now 9-2-1, got two goals from senior back Chris Kocot, who moved into Donnelly's position for the game.



UM's first goal however came from sophomore middie Amy Robertson, who scored at the 22:01 point of the first half, picking up a rebound in the circle and firing it in past Crimson goalie Denise Katsias.

The lead remained one for the rest of the half despite UMass' domination and control of the tempo.

Kocot put the game out of reach just 1:29 into the second half, scoring on a free hit after a Harvard penalty. Lil Hulton picked up the assist. The Minutewomen made it 3-0 on another Kocot goal with 17:02 left.

Harvard's only tally came with 6:08 left when Alicia Clifton took Leelee Groome's hit and put the ball in the bottom of the cage.

"It was important that we scored early in the second half," said Hixon. "It helped us to establish our lead and kept them from getting anything going."

Andy Bing:

Making an impression in soccer

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

For a tall, skinny kid from New Jersey, Andy Bing does all right.

This fall, the 6-0, 165 pound sophomore has emerged as the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team's strongest offensive threat while providing his share of help on defense.

Bing, a midfielder, leads the team in goals, tallying eight, and assists, dishing out eight in the 14 games the Minutemen (11-3) have played this season. The Minutemen, ranked second in New England, have climbed into the national poll, acheiving a ranking of 18th.

"Andy penetrates for us, moves our offense, and makes our midfield go," UMass coach Jeff Gettler said. "But on defense he's a sneaky player who sort of steps up out of nowhere to make the play."

Bing is not the type of player that runs over his opponents, overpowering them. Instead, he is the type of player that runs around them.

"Andy is a mental player, a smart player," UMass assistant coach Tim Schmiechen said. "He uses more finess than power to beat his opponents, relying on his exceptional skill as opposed to his physical attributes."

Bing's motivation for playing as he does

Parents Day tomorrow

By LISA BABCOCK
Collegian Correspondent

More than 1,700 parents of undergraduate students are expected to attend the first Parents Day at the University of Masaachusetts tomorrow which will feature tours, exhibits, movies, panel discussions and a football game.

"Parents are a great constituency. They really appreciate the fact that you're making an effort," said Valerie Falk, coordinator of the event. She said most of the parents who will participate in tomorrow's events are from Massachusetts and some of them are alumni.

An orientation will begin the day's activities at 9:30 a.m. to introduce parents to the 10 schools and colleges within UMass. It will also feature the University Chorale and a fanfare by Walter Chestnut, UMass music professor. The orientation along with helium balloons will be a "kickoff" for the rest of the day, Falk said.

"The Last Quarter Century" is the theme of Parents Day because most of the parents are a quarter century older than their students, she said. Contrasts between the 1960s and 1980s will be made in the panel discussions about the University's development and other activities.

Walking tours, movies, professional art exhibits and the football game against the University of Maine have also been scheduled in the day's program.

"Parents love being on campus with their student and enjoy feeling like a part of things. The overall feeling about it is good," Falk said.

This is the first Parents Day that all undergraduate students' parents were invited. Until this year, Parents Day was limited to parents of freshmen or Dean's List students because of the large number of parents who would be involved.

Falk said she was inspired to hold an open Parents Day last year after 100 percent of the parents who attended last year's event rated it as "good to excellent."

Fac. Sen. votes down campus jail

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate voted yesterday to oppose the proposed construction of a temporary holding facility on campus at the University of Massachusetts.

"It's simply a question of liability," said Maria Tymczko, a comparative literature professor. "Towns no longer have liability insurance, but that's not our problem. The town of Amherst reaps additional tax benefits for having the University and this is just one of the lumps they have to take."

The proposal, created by a University advisory board, advocates the construction of a holding facility to detain people arrested or placed under protective custody by UMass police.

People detained by campus police are presently transported to the Amherst police station and held there until bail is posted. Any woman arrested on campus is held in the jail in Northampton.

"This is something the University must begin to think about seriously," Arnold Silver, an English professor and member of the board, said. Silver, who argued in favor of the proposal, said that the senate failed to consider the demands put upon the University by a new state law which requires police to physically check each detainee every 15 minutes. In addition, Amherst town officials have expressed concerns about the town's liability in handling detainees from the University.

"The Rules Committee asks for alternatives, but what are the alternatives?" Silver said. "Can we beseech the town to continue doing something they don't want to? The town is uneasy about being sued."

"My opinion is that it is the responsibility of the town and counties," Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Dennis Madson, said. "The University should cooperate with the town, but no holding facility should be constructed on campus."

"I do not believe the University should be engaged in activities which are not central to our mission," David Booth, chairman of the Rules Committee, which authored the veto, said. "I'm skeptical about departing from that goal."

"In our quest to become the best university in the Northeast, I don't think we would set the ball rolling by being the first university to have a jail," he said.

Silver said the University of California at Berkley and the University of Michigan both have holding facilities. He added that the advisory board's document makes no proposal. "We hope to stimulate thought and discussion," he said. "Should there be a jail at an ideal university? No, but then should there be crime at an ideal university?"

The senate's opposition states that it "strongly opposes the construction of a temporary holding facility on this campus, and urges the administration to explore all other alternatives to the proposal."

Silver's proposal, which was defeated, asked that the administration "beseech the increasingly reluctant town officials of Amherst and Northampton to continue to use their jails."

President of the Graduate Student Senate, Jerry Ashlock, said the graduate senate is against the concept of a holding facility.

Local Better Chance program prepares Fall Foliage Walk

By JEFFRY BARTASH
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst Committee for a Better Chance is preparing for its annual Fall Foliage Walk fundraiser Saturday that supports the education of inner-city children.

The committee is entering for its 18th year and is designed to give "bright, gifted individuals an education in the Amherst public schools that, due to the nature of the systems that they come from, they would not ordinarly obtain," said Jacqueline Smith-Crooks, president of the committee.

Residential Directors Mitchell and Liz Smith, along with their two children, are currently acting as surrogate parents for 10 boys at 74 North Prospect St. and provide opportunities to reinforce racial and cultural differences that otherwise might be lost in the new environment.

"It's a good experience to live in a residence hall with a family because it give the guys a good family environment," Mitchell Smith said.

Amherst depends exclusively on funds raised locally and "relies heavily on the success of the Fall Foliage Walk," Smith said. "It's a 12-mile walk through the Robert Frost Trail and local merchants donate snacks for the walkers. It's a good time for young children and their families to come together for a good cause," he said.

"The rest of the funds comes from civic organizations, local churches, businesses, private citizens, and the Hampshire Community United Way. It's rewarding to see community members come together to support this program," he said.

The Amherst committee selects students that it feels will benefit the program, from a pool formed by the National Better Chance Program pool.

Students with exceptional academic talent are referred to the National Better Chance Program through a national network of teachers and principals.

"It's a good time for young children and their families to come together for a good cause,"
—Mitchell Smith, Amherst Committee for a better chance director

Anton Smith, a 15-year-old Long Island, NY resident, is one such applicant that was chosen by the Amherst chapter. His mother said she learned of the program from a fellow social worker and after some tests and an interview, her son was accepted.

Anton said the program "offers me a better education. I have learned how to conduct myself in a better manner." He said he aspires to be an anesthesiologist and attend Harvard Medical School.

He said it was easy to make friends and that most of the students in the program participate in school sports.

The Amherst committee started in 1968 and is the second oldest national public program, Smith said. It is part of a national network of 170 programs.

Navy analyst convicted

BALTIMORE (AP)-A federal jury yesterday convicted former civilian Navy intelligence analyst Samuel Loring Morison of espionage and theft of government property; for leaking three U.S. spy photographs of the construction of the Soviet Navy's first nuclear-powered aircraft carrier.

Morison, 40, was convicted of two counts of espionage and two counts of theft of government property, each count carrying a possible 10-year term and $10,000 fine.

U.S. District Judge Joseph H. Young did not immediately set a sentencing date.

The verdict was reached after six hours and 15 minutes of deliberations on Wednesday and yesterday.

Morison was accused of endangering national security by giving a British military journal, Jane's Defense Weekly, three photographs of the Soviet Union's first nuclear-powered aircraft carrier under construction at a Black Sea shipyard.

The photographs were taken on three days in July 1984 by a U.S. Spy satellite.

He also was accused of theft of the photos and theft of government documents that described a May 1984 explosion at Severomorsk, the main ammunition depot for the Soviet Union's Northern Fleet.

Morison admitted giving three photographs to the magazine, but maintained he was innocent of spying and theft of the potos, which were taken from a coworker's desk.

Duarte sends family to U.S. sanction of refugees urged

WASHINGTON (AP)—Rep. Joseph Moakley, D-Mass., citing the decision of El Salvador's president to send his daughters and grandchildren to the United States, yesterday urged President Reagan to stop deporting Salvadoran refugees.

"The recent decision of President Jose Napoleon Duarate to send his family members to the United States to wait out the storm dramatizes the fears that so many Salvadoran refugees who have fled their country must feel," said Moakley, sponsor of a bill that would grant a temporary stay of deportation to Salvadoran refugees already livilng in the United States.

"We can all understand President Duarte's anguish in sending his family to the United States for temporary safety. However, I believe we should also recognize that the Salvadoran refugees who are now in the United States have the same concerns," Moakley wrote.

The Reagan administration, in opposing Moakleyl's bill, have argued that many Salvadorans came to the United States to seek greater economic opportunities, and not because they feared for their safety. Reagan has refused to grant temporary asylum to the refugess from El Salvador and that refusal prompted Moakley to introduce his bill last year and again this year.

Urging Reagan to change his mind, Moakley said, "Granting Salvadorans temporary safety from the current violence in their homeland would be a great humanitarian gesture and could very well result in the saving of many innocent lives."

Moakley also said that the general condition of violence and the tactics of the guerillas opposing Duarte's government also provide justification for giving the refugees a temporary stay of deportation.

Duarte earlier this week sent three of his daughters and his grandchildren to the United States, saying he had received kidnap threats against his family.

Cuomo says he's not running for president in '88

WORCESTER (AP)—Persistent questions about a presidential run in 1988 used to annoy New York Gov. Mario M. Cuomo, but he now finds the talk brings in donations from around the country.

And the money, Cuomo says, will be used for his gubernatorial re-election bid.

"I simply don't see the rationale for setting my sights now on the presidency," said Cuomo. "And if you did, then you shouldn't run for governor. I am comfortable as governor."

With $4 million, his campaign fund is well short of the $25 million Cuomo said thel Republican Party plans to send in an attempt to force him out of the governor's mansion next fall, The Worcester Telegram reported.

Cuomo's comments came at a press conference Wednesday after he had addressed about 1,100 people at Mechanics Hall, where he repeated his announced intention to run for re-election.

Cuomo said he believed he is the best-qualified candidate for governor of New York, but not for president.

He said he expects Massachusetts Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, Colorado Sen. Gary Hart and even Arkansas Sen. Dale Bumpers to seek the Democratic nomination for the presidency in 1988.

In his address, Cuomo said Gov. Michael S. Dukakis "ought to think about running for president."

Cuomo, who electrified the 1984 Democratec National Convention with a keynote speech, again recalled the socially consciously, can-do spirit of the Democratic party.

"The free enterprise system at its best will not include everyone," he said, adding that goverment has an obligation to help those left out, including the old, the weak and the frail.

Philip Capella, 25, of North Chelmsford holds up a copy of his winning Megabucks ticket yesterday at the Massachusetts Lottery headquarters in Braintree. Capella will split the $21.7 prize with 7 other winners.

Two claim their shares of Megabucks jackpot

BRAINTREE(AP)—A young Chelmsford paint company operator and an Ashburnham watiress were the first yesterday to their one-eighth share of $21.7 million Megabucks jackpot.

The eight winning tickets on the richest payoff in Massachusetts lottery history we sold in stores chiefly in the eastern half of Massachusetts, officials reported yesterday.

The first of the eight to arrive at lottery headquarters was Philip capella, 25, of North Chelmsford, who owns A & J Paint & Paper Co., spokesman David Ellis reported.

For the each of the eight, the payoff totals $2,714,315 spread over 20 years, or $135,715 yearly before the 25 percent tax deductions.

Capella, who is married, told of choosing all the numbers from dates in the life of his infant son, Adam Joseph, whose initials were used to name the A & J company.

"He told me he had borrowed $600 from his mother yesterday to buy a car for his business and still has the $600 in his pocket," said Ellis. He said the first thing he is going to do is pay her back—with interest.

An Ashburnham waitress, Laurie Caouette, 20, termed it an early birthday present when she learned Wednesday night she is among the eight sharing the top prize. Her claim, however, will not be honored until her ticket has been cleared by the Lottery Commission.

"I couldn't believe it until my uncle verified it through the lottery," Laurie Caouette told The Gardner News. "I was shocked."

Acid rain's effect on corn studied

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

Responding to the needs of Commonwealth farmers, University of Massachusetts plant and soil science Professor Lyle E. Craker is currently conducting and developing several studies on the effects of acid rain on crops and pesticides.

"Our work responds to the problems experienced by members of the Commonwealth's agricultural community," Craker said. "We orient ourselves to the needs of the Commonwealth and the United States, and our laboratory interests relate to stress on plants. Acid rain represents serious stress on the environment."

Craker said he is presently conducting research on the effects of acid rain on corn crops. The research takes place in University labs and on the University farm in South Deerfield. Craker's work now concentrates on whether acid rain is decreasing the yield of corn crops by inhibiting reproductive processes.

"Corn is a crop that is very exposed," Craker said. "Of course this means that the corn is also very exposed to rainfall. We are trying to find out if this exposure to acid rain reduces crop yield by possibly reducing the number of kernels per ear."

Research on the reproductive process of corn began one year ago. Craker said he expects the analysis of the field experiements to be completed by June, 1986. Funding for this research came from the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Craker hopes receive approval and funding for a second series of research concerned with the effects of acid rain on other vegetable crops. He said he expects funding to come from the Massachusetts Food and Drug Administration.

Craker will also be working on a third research project. This project will study the effects of acid rain on the fighter toxicity of pesticides, he said. Since acid rain falls on the leaves of plants which are also the target areas of most pesticides Craker wants to examine the effectiveness of chemical workings on plants following exposure to acid rain.

"We hope to determine if acid rain changes the physiological effects of pesticides on plants," Craker said.

Craker said the University has been conducting studies on acid rain for the past five years and that he expects completion of the latter two projects in two to three years. Craker is now searching for additional funding on these two projects.

The final data from the experiments will be distributed in several manners, Craker said. Data will appear in various scientific journals and publications; be presented on regional and national levels; be discussed at field days and through University extension services and appear in reports for the sponsoring agencies.

"This is all part of research on acid rain that effects agronomic crops," Craker said. "The effects of acid rain on crops are of concern Massachusetts; and other state and federal agencies and we hope to have definitive answers to these problems in two to three years."

Pre-retirement programs developed

By EILEEN MCDONOUGH

Harvey Friedman

It began with the closing of a garment factory last spring which forced many people into early retirement. Faced with the problem of assisting the displaced workers, a University of Massachusetts professor has since then developed pre-retirement programs now being implemented by state department offices.

Harvey Friedman, director of the Labor Relations and Research Center at UMass, was asked to develop services for the many displaced workers by the state offices of the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Economic Affairs.

Many of the 230 workers who were retired from the Lesnow Manufacturing Co. of Easthampton were women in their late 50s and early 60s and were unable to re-enter the job market. In researching the problem, Friedman recommended that a pre-retirement program be established at the Industrial Services Unit, which is funded by the state.

"Not only is it good, it's a must," Friedman said. "Only 6 percent of all Americans get any help preparing for retirement."

After conducting a series of pre-retirement workshops this summer in Easthampton, Friedman said he is cautiously enthusiastic about tentative plans for the labor research center to conduct similar programs in the future.

In addition to Friedman's workshop series, the former Lesnow factory workers were offered a variety of services including counseling, job fairs, a re-training program and a Holyoke Community College high school equivalency program.

The positive effects of pre-retirement planning on prospective retirees' attitudes toward retirement is perhaps the greatest reward, Friedman said.

"The greatest benefit is a sense of tranquility that can come to many of these people when they understand they share certain concerns and problems with most other people in their category, and help is there for them," he said.

The Labor Relations and Research Center, established in 1965, functions primarily as an academic program. However, the staff's responsibilities include speaking and advising on the broad spectrum of problems affecting the labor community.

Several community professionals took part in this summer's series and addressed issues of financing, housing, Social Security and part-time jobs. "The program can run as a service to the community because many people are willing to volunteer their services," Friedman said.

Program to educate about AIDS

By PAMELA BURRELL
Collegian Correspondent

In an effort to educate the Five-College community about Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, two branches of the University of Massachusetts will hold lectures and discussions about the disease and issues concerning it.

At 10 a.m. today in Campus Center Room 917, Dr. Jerome Groopman and Janet Bath of New England Deaconess Hospital in Boston, will speak about AIDS.

In November, University Health Services in coordination with other sponsors will hold an open house panel discussion and produce a half-hour video tape presentation.

According to UMass Health Educator Ron Mazur, Health Services is planning a question and answer session in order to meet the needs of the community in terms of what its concerns are. "There are a lot of misconceptions about AIDS. Public education is critical," he said.

The November discussion is sponsored by the AIDS Action Committee of Boston and the Valley Health Plan.

Under the direction of UMass student Joan Goodwin, the informational videotapes will be duplicated and distributed to dormitories. They will also be shown regularly in the Student Union and Campus Center.

University Health Services is currently working on guidelines for the treatment of AIDS victims, Mazur said. "We have to do all we can to stem the tide until a vaccine or effective treatment is found. The search is on. Until we have these tools, education is our most important ally," he said.

A myth about AIDS is that it is a "gay" disease, Mazur said. "I can't stress enough that AIDS is not a homosexual disease, it is simply a virus that has hit the male homosexual community quite suddenly."

According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services AIDs may be transmitted by sexual contact, intravenous needle sharing or, less commonly, through blood or blood components. The risk of having the disease is increased by having multiple heterosexual or homosexual partners.

Confidential testing for the AIDS virus HTLV-III can be obtained at University Health Services.

Preliminary results of studies released in August show that most people infected with the virus remain in good health, according to the U.S. Health and Human services department.

Refugee brothers to speak Sunday

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Correspondent

Two Guatemalen brothers who have been given sanctuary in Leverett since July will speak at 10 a.m. Sunday at the Unitarian Universalist Society of Amherst.

The brothers, who go by the pseudonyms Pedro and Joquin Valesquez, have been receiving sanctuary from the Leverett Mount Toby Meeting of Friends, sanctuary committee member Ruth Hawkins said.

Pedro, 33, was a radio announcer in Guatemala and read his own poems about the plight of the Mayan Indians in Guatemala over the air. Although the brothers are of Spanish background, they are both very concerned about the plight of the Mayan Indians, Hawkins said.

Pedro's speaking out about the persecution of the Mayans "made him a person that the government did not want to have around," she said.

Joquin, 23, was a member of a theater group that tried to help people in his native country unite against persecution. When several theater members were assasinated, Joquin fled from Guatemala with his older brother.

The brothers came to the Mount Toby meeting through their associations with a sanctuary committee in Tucson, Arizona. Hawkins said that although "there are perhaps a million refugees from Central America in this country," not every refugee wants to make a public statement about their plight and the plight of their people.

The Friends are sponsoring the two brothers because "this was one way of helping to change the situation for them in those countries," Hawkins said. "People in the U.S. don't know enough about the situation."

Although the two brothers are the first refugees from Central America that the Friends have sponsored in Leverett, they are part of a continuing tradition of showing concern for those in need, Hawkins said.

Before the Mount Toby Meeting was formed, the Friends were a major supporter of the Underground Railroad before the Civil War. During World War II, the Mount Toby Meeting helped refugees from Nazi Germany escape and brought a Japanese-American woman from a relocation center to Mount Holyoke College.

Women's group to raise funds

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The only organization providing shelter and other services to women in Hampshire County will be holding a "Move-AThon" fundraiser tomorrow in Northampton.

Necessities/Necesidades will hold its 2nd annual Move-AThon where staff member Sonja Enlow, said "participants can move in any way they wish." In other words, people may walk, run, bike, use a wheelchair or skate the 5-mile course beginning and ending in Pulaski Park in downtown Northampton.

"It is vital that we rely on community support," Enlow said because, "In general there are alot of women seeking shelter. And our shelter is often full to capacity." She added that Necessities/Necesidades operates mostly on a volunteer basis and serviced more than 300 women and 600 children last year.

The organization also operates a safe-home network, where women and men offer space in their private homes when the shelter is full. Enlow said Necessities/Necesidades "would love to expand the shelter so we could bring in more women, but with the funding we have now, it is really impossible."

Last years Move-AThon raised more than $3,000 which helped fund the centers services, including a 24-hour crisis hotline, therapy, child-care, and education for women who have experienced emotional or physical abuse, along with education for the community.

Enlow stresses that women of color are strongly encouraged to look for help at Necissities/Necesidades. She said affirmative Action efforts over the past two years have begun to change significantly the makeup of the staff, which is now made up of 50 percent of minority women.

Man held for drugs, conduct

A 19-year-old University of Massachusetts student was charged with possession of hashish and marijuana and lewd and lascivious behavior Wednesday night in Patterson House, UMass said.

The man was allegedly drunk and was masturbating in the hallways. He was put into protective custody, police said.

In other police reports:

A 1976 Fiat received extensive damage when it caught fire on Stadium Road Wednesday evening, police said. The fire was extinguished by UMass police and the Amherst fire department, police said.

A stereo receiver, valued at $500, was reported stolen from an unlocked room on the first floor of Mackimmie House Wednesday afternoon, police said.

A radar detector, valued at $250, was reported stolen Wednesday afternoon from a 1983 Jeep in lot 22. The windshield also received $200 in damages, police said.

Gays to confer tomorrow

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A weekend conference titled "Celebrating Our Diversity and Unity—A Gathering in Celebration of Lesbians, Gay Men, and Bisexual Persons," will be held tomorrow and Sunday at Hampshire College.

The event, sponsored by the Valley Gay Alliance, the Lifeline Institute, Face to Face: A Lesbian and Gay Speakers Bureau, in association with the Hampshire College Women's Center and private individuals, will include more than 30 workshops on various topics.

"It is a personal growth conference which will allow an oppurtunity to learn and grow and also honor and recognize the differences between us," said Joseph Lamott, a conference organizer. "We also want an opportunity to network with each other," by getting different groups together concerned with different issues, he said.

The conference will be attended by people from the greater New England area, and parenting, relationships and health and legal issues will be discussed, Lamott said. There will also be a wide range of lesbian/gay/bisexual films and presentations by spokespersons from the six-state region representing various organizations, he said.

"The big emphasis is on having a good time," Lamott said. "I hope that many people will renew old friendships and make new friendships and recognize solidarity."

Presentations of distinguished awards for private and public service will be awarded as well as the "Turkey of the Year Award,"which will be given to Gov. Michael Dukakis for his stand on a foster care issue.

A news conference will open the event at 11:45 a.m. tomorrow in Room 106 of Franklin-Patterson Hall on the Hampshire campus. Workshops, craft exhibits, and group discussions will follow and a dance tomorrow night will be preceded by a catered dinner and awards banquet

Fall celebration is tomorrow

Tomorrow the Orchard Hill and Central area Governments will be sponsoring their traditional fall festival, compolete with live entertainment, sporting events, and refreshments.

The festival will begin at 9 a.m. in front of Webster dormitory with a 3.1 mile road race, followed by a volleyball tournament at noon.

Throughout the day on the Central area basketball courts will be performances by four local bands: First Circle, Free Will, Way Off, and The Modern Plaids. Refreshments will be sold Outside of Greenough from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Octoberfest is a free outdoor celebration of Autumn, but in the case of rain, the festival will be inside the Student Union Ballroom on Sunday.

Rally on Soviet Union today

A rally focusing on negative aspects of the Soviet Union will be held at 12:30 p.m. today on the steps of the Student Union Building.

The rally, sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Republican Club, is intended to point out to students that the Soviet Union is the "primary problem in terms of human rights," and "worst in its potential," said Loren Spivack, president of the club.

The rally will focus on the Soviet Union's alledged human rights, military, and peace treaty violations, Spivack said. The rally, he said, is in part a reaction to anti-apartheid rallies regarding South Africa. Spivack said apartheid is disgraceful but "it is not the worst problem in the world." Instead, he said, the Soviet Union is worse, and students should be aware of this.

Selecting for boys only

Deborah Kutenplon

Sex selection clinics are slowly but insidiously growing across the country. Like a mold.

Sex selecation clinics are places aspiring parents can go to have their semen sample manipulated to increase their chances of conceiving a child of the sex they want.

I recently read about a private clinic in Springfield. A cheerful lab technician (I admit it, she sounded chirpy to me!) told the newspaper interviewer, "Oh, I just love working in this field! It's so rewarding to help couples choose the sex of their baby! And the procedure for separating X sperm from Y sperm is really very simple."

As the interview went on, it became calear that Y sperm could be selected for, but not X sperm. In other words, couples could get help selecting a boy only. The procedure to separate out the X sperm, for a girl, it "still experimental," the technician admitted.

Interestingly, this point did not come out until near the end of the article, and then was treated as insignificant. But it's not insignificant at all. Can you imagine the uproar that would be caused by clinics producing only baby girls? We'd start hearing panic about the lesbian conspiracy to take over the world.

In any event, we are not seeing the growth of sex selection clinics, we are seeing the growth of male selection clinics. Now most species have some adaptive male to female ration (which often changes depending on environmental conditions). But I am not particularly worried about an overglut of human males destroying the ecological balance since everybody knows they periodically decimate their numbers, through wars.

What I am worried about is men thinking they're even more than they already believe. I mean, if parents are knocking themselves out to get boys, it's got to make members of that sex feel pretty good about themselves.

Already people in this culture (and many others) are taught that men are the most important creatures on earth. As young boys, all the active characters in their children's stories were male, unless they were mothers. Even the active animals were male. All the radio of television shows and movies were written from a male point of view, and so boys learned that this was the right one to identify with. All the heroes were men, from Joe DiMaggio to Abe Lincoln to Aristotle.

As adults, men see other men predominating in the news, holding nearly all the political offices, making and enforcing the rules from various positions of power. Even their God is male. Besides, they can play football. All these reflect importance in our society.

So it is no wonder that many men consider themselves to be rather important. And we are seeing the effects on our earth of this imbalance. Certain industries kill creatures, even to the point of extinction, not just for necessities but also for human luxuries. Development takes over animals' habitats. Companies mine and farm and drill and pave the earth using methods She will never recover from. Countries go to war to maintain control over the earth's natural and human resources. These are actions of people who rate their own importance firmly above the importance of others. And the overwhelming majority of these people, the decision-makers in industry, development, and politics, are men.

Of course not all men believe they are that imlportant. But enough do. Enough to threaten our now-fragile planet.

Male-selection clinics are just one more in a long series of messages telling how much more desirable they are than anything else that walks the face of this earth. Thoughtful women and men are trying to change those attitudes, in themselves and in others, and male selection clincs are not helping.

Women's abortion right threatened

On Nov. 5, the Supreme Court is going to decide on two cases involving the extremely vital and personal issue of abortion. These cases, which involve two lower court rulings in Pennsylvania and Illinois, would allow states to restrict women's right to abortion. If the Supreme Court upholds these lower court rulings it would effectively overturn the 1973 Roe V. Wade decision which gave women the right to choose abortion.

This summer, the Justice Department, under the guise of President Reagan, filed a "Friend of the Court" brief which asked the Court to overturn the Roe V. Wade decision. This is the first time in history that the government has asked the Court to revoke a constitutional right. There are certain political realities involved in the timing and the intent of this Reagan Administration brief. In 1968, California was the first state to legalize abortion. This bill was signed into law by then-governor Ronald Reagan. As Ronald Reagan made his ascent up the political ladder, and actually become the Republican Party's nominee for president in 1980, he gained tremendous support from the anti-choice factions of the Republican Party. Since most polls indicate that the overwhelming majority of North Americans are pro-choice (meaning that they support a woman's right to choose abortion), Reagan realized that anything beyond lip service to the "pro-life" cause would be political suicide in his first term.

Before abortion was legalized in 1973, hundreds of thousands of North American women obtained illegal abortions each year and each year thousands of women died from the unsafe practices of the back alley abortionists. Under the impending threat that we may soon revert back to those days, women have begun to tell their horrifying stories of illegal abortions. Women struggled to gain access to legal abortion and we are still struggling to maintain that right. Even if all women had access to effective birth control, a minimum of half a million ulnplanned pregnancies would occur each year. The fundalmentalists preach that sexual abstainence and a new "sexual morality" are the solutions to this problem. As college students in the 1980's we know the reality of such a suggestion.

The right to have control over one's body is a fundamental human right, one which men have never been denied. We are talking about women's lives. None of us, female or male, can afford not to learn more about this issue. This weekend there is going to be a free conference at UMass which will discuss the issue of abortions and the other vital issues of women's reproductive freedom. I urge you please to attend and to learn about some of the most important issues which our nation is facing today.

No preconceived political purpose

Stephen Erickson's column in Wednesday's Collegian makes several incorrect assertions about SPECTRUM, which SPECTRUM would like to answer.

First, Erickson claims that "the magazine represents a narrow portion of the political spectrum." SPECTRUM does not perceive itself as having any preconceived political purpose. In choosing the theme, "The Third World and A New World: Color in the Gaps," We were seeking a cultural diversity beyond the scope of our own local self-interests, trying to stimulate artists rather than restrict them. Certainly some artists found this constricitve. But, by-and-large, the theme did in fact stimulate the artistic community to think in terms of a larger world view than what we usually receive, and with excellent work as well. The artworks were political, as all art is, and much of the artwork was explicitly political. It was, after all, a political theme and political art is a major art movement of the 80s.

At the back of the magazine, there is the traditional disclaimer that "the views and opinions expressed in SPECTRUM belong to the individual authors and artists. All selections were made on the basis of the artistic merit of the work as well as its relevance to the theme."

If we had received any work and, at that, good work, from let's say a first world perspective, it would have been considered, but we did not receive a single piece upholding the status quo as the solution for Third World problems. We did receive many, many pieces which criticized this point of view, some of which were published. When Erickson charges that we are "narrow" the onus is on him to support his claim with some sort of evidence that a quality artwork was excluded from publication on the basis of its point of view. There is no such evidence. SPECTRUM has no hidden political agenda.

The second assertion that Erickson makes is that there is some economic relationship between SPECTRUM and Libya and Afghanistan. We don't really know how to respond to this because we don't really understand Erickson's point. In any event, we would like to clarify the episode which he has inaccurately portrayed.

It is true that SPECTRUM sponsored a vendor in 1984 who sold Afghanistani sweaters, but nothing from Libya. (The vendor stated that these sweaters are made from people who are associated with anti-government forces in communist Afghanistan.) SPECTRUM never really considered this issue; we merely had asked the BOG Vendor Coordinator at that time if there were any vendors available to us for fund-raising purposes, and we were assigned a vendor. This helped us to put out the 1984 edition. We looked to a vendor because of the increasing budget cuts that have occurred in the arts over the past two years, in particular with SPECTRUM. In any event, it has no bearing on the funding of this year's SPECTRUM.

Erickson could have asked us about this; instead he chose to write from ignorance and his own rather obvious political viewpoint. Who appointed Erickson as editorial watchdog, and, if he is self-appointed, doesn't he still have a responsibility to be fair and accurate? Otherwise the watchdog becomes an attack dog.

C.F. Carroll, Production Editor
SPECTRUM* Magazine

Columnist Stephen Erickson apologizes for errors made regarding the accusation that Lybian sweaters were sold by a SPECTRUM sponsored vendor and the implication that the selling of the Afghan sweaters in anyway supports the Soviet puppet regime in Afghanistan.

KAL incident reference clarified

In yesterday's Collegian article on "Commando Movies" the author of the article referred to "the 007 crash." The editors of the Collegian should remember that Korean Airline's Flight Number 7 "crashed" because a Soviet MiG fired a heat seeking missle into one of its engines, resulting in the destruction of the wing on that side of the aircraft.

CASA helps university

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

This fall, a national campaign is underway to gather support to get supplies and financial aid sent to the University of El Salvador.

Doug Calvin, a member of the Central America Solidarity Association (CASA) went to El Salvador for 10 days this summer as part of a delegation for the "US Students for Academic Freedom and Peace in El Salvador" to investigate the conditions at the university and the situation in El Salvador today. The trip was sponsored by the US Students Association which consists of over 500 student governments.

On June 26, 1980, with classes in full swing, army tanks, helicopters, and 800 members of the Salvadoran strike force invaded the campus and killed over 60 students and professors and forced the university to close. Duarte was president during that time. "He claimed the university was a center of armed subversion. They dug into cellars and bombed buildings, but they never found anything. It was just an excuse to suppress voices other than the government's," he said.

Calvin learned about the situation around the time it happened. "I learned about the situation through solidarity work. A large part of that learning came from self education and educating others. About that time (1980), attention started to be focused specifically on the university," he said.

During the time of the invasion, the university continued to function out of store fronts, backrooms, and anywhere they could manage. CASA hopes to raise $2500 "Which will go towards the reconstruction of the University of El Salvador, funding of the medical clinic and the re-building of the student offices which were totally destroyed during the invasion. We're also looking for material aid such as microscopes and educational supplies," Calvin said.

CASA has been monitoring the situation in El Salvador since last January. "We're a relatively new organization, but already we're seeing results. A new printing press and supplies to help have been delivered to the university to help reopen the student-run medical clinic," he stated.

The situation has changed very little since 1980. "The university reopened in 1984 due to international pressure and internal unrest. However, the government is denying the school a full budget and is very actively threatening the school with continuing physical oppression. The disappearances of students and professors continue," he said.

The president and vice-president of AGEUS, a student association at the University of El Salvador, are in the United States to talk about the situation in their country. They are on a death squad list. "Most of the people on the list have fled the country, but they decided to remain so they could help fight the oppression. However, they are worried about returning because they could easily be kidnapped at the airport," Calvin stated.

The week of November 10-16 has been designated as the time to participate fully in the national campaign. "UMass will participate in this event. We are trying to gather strong support for this campaign," he said.

If anyone is interested in helping or would like more information, contact the CASA office at 545-2148 and leave a message. "We welcome all sectors to become involved. We're looking for all kinds of involvement from writing letters to participating in the week by doing an event," he said.

Network trying to bring unity

By ALFRED GETONGA
Special to the Collegian

(Editor's Note: Alfred Getonga is a senior at Amherst College and is a economics/political science major. He was a former president of the Five College African Students Association.)

On October 10th, a group of people gathered in the Babbot Room at Amherst College. In terms of their social and cultural background, they were not a homogenous group. However, they all had one thing in common, they were all of African descent.

A series of "networking" meetings have been held at the University of Massachusetts and at Mount Holyoke College with the hopes of increasing the dialogue between the students of African descent and the Afro-American students in the Five College area.

This network has many goals to accomplish, but no one can deny the opening remarks of one of the program's coordinators, Kango Lare-Lantone of Togo. He said, "At least the program has managed to set a foundation for official lines of communication to established within the whole community of students of African descent in the valley." The program has the full backing of the Five College African Students Association which has managed to bring the community of African students together under one umbrella.

At the start of the meeting, Sherwood Thompson, director of the Office of Third World Affairs at the University of Massachusetts, pointed out the fact that, "It is necessary to break down the stereotypes that have been created within the community."

Throughout the meeting, it was clear that there exists stereotypes that have forced students to take more pride in being associated with a particular college than with the fact that they are African and not Afro-American. The terminology of identifying one's self as being black, Third World, African, or Afro-American became more important than being a person of African descent and proud of it.

Sharon Jackson and Christopher Williams, students at the University of Massachusetts, expressed their disappointment at the minimal amount of interaction that goes on within the Afro-American community in the area. Donna Ferguson, a sophomore at Smith College, said, "When she first came to the area, it was a totally alien environment to her because while growing up in New York city, she had been led to believe that there was more interaction amongst the community."

David Moore, a junior at the University of Massachusetts, pointed out his disappointment at the reaction he received from the Africans within the area.

Clearly, "Network" has a big job to accomplish. But, it would be made easier if the whole community was devoted to making it work. The struggle is far from over and it is only within ourselves that we can make it work.

Chairman of NAACP to speak Monday

The Office of Third World Affairs Fall Lecture Series will present Dr. William Gibson, Chairman of the National Board of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at 8 p.m. Monday in the Student Union Ballroom.

Gibson will discuss "The Challenge for a Discrimination Free America."

This program is free and open to the general public. Further information is available at the Office of Third World Affairs at 308 Student Union Building, UMass, Amherst.

Balletap's hot trotters

By SUE IZZO
Collegian Staff

How would you describe an up-beat, newly-formed dance troupe specializing in a combination of ballet and tap? How about spectacular?

Balletap was formed by Maurice Hines, of Cotton Club fame, and Mercedes Ellington, former June Taylor dancer, in 1984. Using both ballet and tap, as well as a little break-dancing, they put on a show that has gained them critical acclaim.

The evening began with a warm-up, utilizing every dancer and every possible tap step. Even though there was no music, the dancers' feet spoke for themselves. Following this was a take-off on M-TV, highlighted by Mercedes' entrance as The Wife of Frankenstein. Afterwards was breakdancing by Hines' two youngest dancers, probably aging from five to seven. The audience was treated to a pinball game, ala tap dance.

The second act contained solo work from Mercedes and Hines, leaving the beginning of act two weak. The 'finale' of the evening made that lag forgivable, after all, what better way to end an evening than with a good bedtime story, especially when the story contains some amazing dancing? This dance sequence channels the energy of the entire company including both Mercedes and Hines, dancing the leading roles of Pretty and the Wolf-kind of a mix between Red Riding Hood and Guys and Dolls, if you can imagine it. It left the audience in awe, not quite knowing what to do except clap until their hands were red.

The standing ovation proved it-if tap dancing is making a comeback, Balletap is where it will be made.

"Macbeth" goes Star Trek

MACBETH
The Rand Theater
Oct. 17-19, 23-26

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

When Shakespeare is transported beyond his own century, tragedy is often the result. Sadly, the UMass Theater Dept.'s Macbeth is no exception.

This is through no fault of the actors. David Alun Spencer's kindly Duncan and grief-stricken Macduff were spectacular, and Nick Plakias' tormented Macbeth is bound for Masterpiece Theatre. Sheryl Stoodley's Lady Macbeth was sufficient in the more intense scenes, but Stoodley fell into reciting her lines during the lulls. On the whole, the cast was valiant, and is to be commended for managing to do Macbeth in the round.

It surely was no mean feat to get into character while dressed as Star Trek's Romulans. While the costumes were attractive and appealing, they were inappropriate for the play. Having Shakespearean folk clad as the Jetsons was distracting and detracted from the performance, rather than enhancing it.

The futuristic foibles got out of hand during scene in which Macbeth asks the witches for guidance. Rather than a face appearing in smoke above a cauldron, a steaming, hi-tech cylinder drops from the ceiling and advises Macbeth in a taped, ridiculously robotic voice.

The production also committed the sin of provoking audience laughter at inappropriate moments: the death of Banquo, Lady Macbeth's madness, and--most unforgivably--Macbeth's demise.

In the tradition of UMass Theater Dept. productions, the set is stunning, complete with magically moving platforms and a truly imaginative angular design.

But even that, coupled with the actors' noteworthy determination, couldn't save this Macbeth from its own ambitions.

FRIDAY FILM FOLLIES

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

A film columnist's nightmare: lots of films to write about but no space to do it. First a look at the malls. Well, they're big buildings with lots of stores inside. Next a look at the movies in the malls.

Remo Williams, The Adventure Begins: dumb movie, no adventure.

Plenty: Meryl Streep takes the fall of the British empire personally. In her sad anger she destroys the lives of all those around her. Sting, Geilgud, McKellen and Chance also star.

Silver Bullet: Another doomed Stephen King movie. Werewolves.

Agnes of God: Shrink Fonda must find out if young nun (Meg Tilly) strangled her newborn baby. Bancroft plays the protective mother superior in this involving, somtimes funny mystery.

Commando: Arnold single-handedly kills 300 badies. Stupid.

Jagged Edge: Lawyer Close must defend publisher Bridges in trial of his wife's brutal murder. Good flick. See it.

Sorry fellow prisoners, that's all I've got room for. See ya.

Stickers riding momentum into NH

Soccer, volleyball, cross-country also in action

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team, riding a three game winning streak, will be at New Hampshire on Saturday in one of the many games UMass teams are involved in this weekend.

Preparing for tommorrow's game against the eighth ranked Wildcats, UMass head coach Pam Hixon said that it will be important for the Minutewomen to control the tempo and not allow UNH the opportunity to gain momentum.

"This is emotionally a very big game between us because we've always had a rivalry," Hixon said. "New Hampshire is a tough, physical team that has always been good."

Hixon said that a pulled hamstring suffered by freshman midfielder Julie Stuart may force her to miss tommorrow's game. Junior Nancy O'Halloran is expected to start in her place.

Aside from battling a team in the nation's top ten, Hixon said that she anticipates playing before a vocal crowd and that the home field advantage may be very important in a game between two teams looking toward the top.

"At this point in the season no one has emerged as being untouchable, so you have to respect your opponents," she said. "Playing New Hampshire, it will be important to keep them from getting on track because the fans are a factor, and they can be if we let them. But I think we're ready, and we have to use that to our advantage."

The UMass's men's soccer team will be looking to rebound after its 2-0 loss to UConn, facing a tough Brooklyn College team on Saturday in New York.

10-7 win at Northeastern. Crowley leads UMass with 12 receptions for 181 yards. He will be replaced by freshman Dan Rubinetti (three catches for 27 yards).

UMass lost 20-7 at Maine last season, the low point of a forgettable 3-8 season. This season, sparked by an aggressive defense that is ranked first in Divison 1-AA in scoring defense (9.2 points-per-game), the Minutemen will be looking for a payback.

Maine is 3-3 overall and 0-2 in the conference. The Bears, under first year coach Buddy Teevens, gave top-ranked Richmond a battle before losing 37-24. The 3-3 record is deceiving as Maine has beaten the likes of American International College, Howard and Central Connecticut, all Division II teams.

Teevens' biggest threat is quarterback Bob Wilder. The 6-2, 222 pound sophomore has completed over half of his passes for 1,129 yards and nine touchdowns. Maine has thrown more recently, looking to sophomore split end Sergio Hebra (32 catches for 487 yards and six touchdowns).

On the ground, the Bears have freshman tailback Doug Dorsey (87 yards-per-game). Defensively, linebacker Mark Coutts, and all-conference selection, made 20 tackles and had an interception against Richmond.

"Maine is a good team and we will have a battle," Stull said. "I'd like to establish our offense and continue playing our good defense. The defense has been outstanding, I can't ask for anymore from them."

UMass will be looking to pressure Wilder with nose guard Mike Dwyer (nine sacks). Linebackers John McKeown (a team-high 78 tackles), Paul Manganaro, Todd Rundle and Vito Perrone have played well. Co-captain Paul Platek, Duckworth Grange, Bob Shelmire and Chris Wood have allowed only 141 yards of passing a game, good enough to be 16th in the nation.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Defensive back Chris McCray has been shifted to linebacker to bolster depth there. . . punter Dimitri Yavis is averaging 40.8 yards a kick. . .he has been conference rookie-of-the-week for the past two weeks.

The men, ranked 18th in the nation, are 11-4 on the season.

The UMass volleyball team will be at the Delaware tournament, looking to keep its second ranking in the Northeast Division II poll intact.

The Minutewomen took second in their last tourney, at Southern Connecticut. UMass is 20-3 on the season.

The men's cross country team will be in the Eastern Championships in Burlingston, Vt. this weekend. The men took second in their last meet at Boston's Franklin Park.

The UMass crew teams will be at the Head of the Charles Regatta in Boston on Sunday. In other action, the women's tennis team is at Dartmouth.

The UMass women's rugby team will host the Hartford Roses on Saturday at 1 p.m. on Lower Boyden Field.

Finally, the UMass men's lacrosse team will scrimmage Holy Cross and Westfield State on Sunday afternoon on Lower Boyden. This is the first game action for Garber's Gorillas this season.

fielder Denise Harkins (9-22-40) is a big help around the net as is foward Denette Pollack (10-6-26). The Panthers have tied Villanova and Keene State, both by a 2-2 score, in its last two outings. UMass trounced Keene State in its season opener 9-0 and also beat Rutgers, 3-1, a team that knocked off Adelphi 2-1.

Lurking in the background are games with Harvard, having a tough year at 3-5-2 after losing to UConn on Wednesday, 1-0 in overtime on Tuesday in Cambridge and a game next Saturday with third-ranked Boston College (6-0-1) on the turf at Chestnut Hill.

Freshman returns from injury, leads Minutemen against Maine

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Dave Palazzi has returned, finally.

The freshman quarterback that led the University of Massachusetts football team to a national ranking before separating his shoulder four weeks ago, will start Saturday when the Minutemen take on the University of Maine at Alumni Staduim.

Palazzi returns three weeks earlier than planned following the second degree separation of his left shoulder during a 27-3 victory over Holy Cross. The 6-2, 198 pound redshirt began practicing on Monday with UM head coach Bob Stull announcing Thursday afternoon that he would start against the Bears.

Palazzi, in three games, was 27-of-54 for 313 yards and three touchdowns. He also rushed for three scores and 152 yards as UMass averaged 26 points-per-game.

Since the injury however, the Minuteman offense has sputtered. First senior Jim Simeone and then sophomore Bob Williamson were tried at quarterback, with litle results. UMass lost two of three games, scoring an average of 5.3 points-per-game. Simeone and Williamson were a combined 14-of-36 for 124 yards and five interceptions as UMass failed to score a touchdown for a string of 10 quarters. The Minutemen finally broke their drought against Northeastern, scoring on a nine-yard run by Anthony Strickland, but that touchdown was set up by a blocked punt on the Huskie 10-yard line.

In Palazzi's absence, UMass did not put together a good drive. He may not have the raw talent of UMass' other quarterbacks, but Palazzi made things happen.

"Dave is a big-play type of quarterback," said Stull. "He doesn't have the arm strength of some of our other guys, but that doesn't always matter, it's more of a mental thing. The offense was making a lot of mistakes and didn't have that spark."

Stull said on Wednesday that he hoped to get a game out of Williamson before going with Palazzi next week against Boston University, but after evaluating his practices, Stull elected to bring Palazzi back ahead of schedule.

The UMass defensive players are probably the most happy to see Palazzi return. Since the separation, they have allowed only three touchdowns, two due to opponents recoving fumbles deep in UMass territory. The defense has played well enough for UMass to be 5-1 this season. Palazzi's injury, to say the least, has been the biggest factor this season.

UMass, 3-3 and 0-1 in the Yankee Conference, is still hounded by a series of injuries. Linebacker Steve Silva underwent a knee operation on Thursday and is lost for the season along with punter Jim Tandler (knee), and offensive guards Sheldon Hardison and Peter Borsari (knees).

Starting defensive tackle Bruce Strange (knee) is out for another few games, tight end Mike Kelley (shoulder) may see action near the end of the season, defensive tackle Eddie Sullivan (ankle) is questionable for Maine and return man Andrew Thomas' hamstring will keep him sidelined for at least another game.

The biggest loss may be starting flanker John Crowley. The junior's hamstring has given him problems on and off during his career and he reinjured it late in last week's

Backup center quits women's hoop team

JOHN A. NOLAN

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team will be without the services of its second leading scorer this season, UMass head coach Barbara Stevens said yesterday.

Forfeiting her scholarship, backup center Karen Fitzgerald cited a recurring knee injury and mounting academic pressure as the primary reasons for her departure from the team.

"I want to get more into my major, do better and improve my grades," Fitzgerald said. "I haven't done poorly but I would like to enjoy my college life more."

Fitzgerald averaged 8.9 points-per-game last season, second only to senior Barbara Hebel who averaged close to 11 points per game. She also was responsible for 4.3 rebounds-per-game coming off the bench for much of the season. Fitzgerald saw starting action early last season when starting center Sue Burtoft suffered an ankle injury.

The decision did not come as a surprise to Stevens who said that it was well thought out and had been discussed with the coaches and Fitzgerald's parents before it was decided two weeks ago.

"Initially I was upset. We were shocked," Stevens said. "But its been a struggle for her. She had lots of potential and could've been very good for us if she was willing to do what we were asking from her.

"She didn't want to disappoint her teammates, the coaches or herself," Stevens said. 'In the long run, it will be better for her. I want it to be known that it was an amicable split. We'll miss her.'

Fitzgerald said that she also didn't think that she would be able to perform at her best because of torn cartlidge in her knee that had prompted a pair of operations during the past two off-seasons.

"I'm very happy now, but I'll really miss it," Fitzgerald said. "I'm glad everyone understands. But, I'll still be around."

Women's soccer plays at Adelphi

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Being the number one ranked team in the country doesn't make University of Massachusetts women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda feel any easier going into tomorrow's game with unranked Adelphi University on Long Island.

"Anything is possible," Banda said. "We can't afford to be complacent. We have to keep out standards up and not play down. On any given day, we could lose a game."

The undefeated Minutewomen, 11-0, face a Panther squad that is on the verge of breaking into the Top 20. And Adelphi has already beaten Harvard, who UMass hasn't stopped in two years, 1-0.

"I just hope we don't overlook the smaller teams," goalie Jan Holland, who brings a 0.00 goals against average into the match, said. "Being a freshman, there (the opposition) all the same to me. We can't look down on anyone."

Massachusetts will look to unleash its offense and speed on the 7-3-2 Panthers.

Freshman Beth Roundtree has been the catalyst in the last five games with six goals and three assists, including the game-winners against Connecticut and Rutgers. Roundtree has a team-high nine goals and four assists for a team-high 22 points.

Sophomore Monica Seta (7-6-20), Carolyn Micheel (5-8-18), who is four assists from tying the UMass single-season record of 12 set by Kelly Tuller in 1978, and freshman Michele Powers (8-0-16) also contribute to the scoring punch.

UMass has outshot (205-20) and outscored (48-1) its opponents by staggering margins. The Minutewomen have never lost to Adelphi in three meetings, beating the Panthers 6-1 last year.

Adelphi, who has slumped in its last two games, has people who can score. Mid-

Anti-semitism is on decline, official says

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts has made significant gains in dealing with anti-semitism since 1979, the coordinator of the Office of Human Relations said last night.

"To say that the University has not eliminated anti-semitism is an understatement of some magnitude," Judy Davis said. Davis spoke to an audience of 30 at the Jewish community of Amherst building on Main Street.

"But we've come a long way from a time when anti-semitism was a word that could not be said, to a time when it is openly discussed on campus," she said.

"About six and a half years ago," according to Davis, grafitti on dormitory walls and "diatribes" in Nummo News caused pressure to be brought upon then-Chancellor Henry Koffler to form the Committee on Civility and Human Relations, which culminated in the Year Towards Civility. Davis said the goals of the Year Towards Civility were to develop strategies for fostering "non-anti-social behavior on campus," and to "raise awareness on campus of the multiple dimensions of incivil behavior."

At this time the Office of Human Relations was founded to deal with racism, sexism, homophobia and anti-semitism, Davis said.

Thanks in part to "an explicit sexual harassement policy," Davis said that "we have raised campus standards on what is and is not acceptable behavior."

"We have also lowered the threshold at which complaints (of a civil nature) are reported," Davis said. Hence the number of reported incidences have gone up in recent years, she said.

"Victims of civil abuses are not as likely to suffer in silence as they used to," Davis said.

Davis said she has found that to attempt to educate campus students, faculty and staff is to risk backlash. "For every poster we put up on anti-semitism, somebody paints a swastika," she said.

Davis said that the University should continue to develop regulations concerning anti-semitic incidents, as well as other civil offences. She also said that the University should further develop and offer education for students faculty and staff.

"We've made enormous strides on the student level," she said of efforts to educate students in civility. "We've found that educating our peers (faculty and staff) is much more difficult than educating students," she said.

Anne Nusbaum, Sunderland, said she attended the talk by Davis because she was "surprised" to hear of anti-semitism at the University.

"It effects the community in every aspect. Anti-semitism will effect how graduates will do business and raise their children," Nusbaum said.

Alcohol use is examined beginning today

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Correspondent

Beginning tomorrow, students will have a chance to learn more about alcohol use through the week-long second annual Alcohol Awareness Week.

Every day from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. there will be an information table on the Campus Center concourse with University Peer Alcohol Educators on hand to answer questions regarding alcohol issues.

"The campaign is usually a short-term process to get people to think about alcohol use," said Carlene Riccelli, chair of Committee on Alcohol Use at the University Health Center.

Residence halls will hold various workshops and show films throughout the week and an Alcohol Hotline for problem drinkers needing counseling and information will also be available.

Last year, the Alcohol Use Committee won a national award for its work on the first alcohol program.

"Last year's program was only one-tenth of this year's efforts," Riccelli said.

Alcohol workshop issues will include: "Thinking About Drinking," "Law and Liability," "Health Issues," "Family and Friends" and "Party." THe theme of "Party," featured on Friday, will stress ways of socializing without alcohol, according to Riccelli.

A mime performance of "On the Road Again," by Marck Morrison, will be performed today at 12:30 p.m. on the concourse. Morrison has been granted permission to perform in six lecture halls, allowing approximately 2,500 students to see the show, Riccelli said.

Every day except Thursday, from 12-1 p.m., t-shirts can be silkscreened for free at the education tables on the concourse.

Town Meeting begins tonight

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

Members of Amherst Town Meeting are expected to decide tonight whether to appropriate money to cover increased town insurance premiums and create a fund to protect the town from lawsuits.

The town lost coverage protecting it and individual police officers from liability on June 30, and has been insuring itself since. Because Amherst has been unable to buy police insurance for any price, Town Meeting will be asked to secure $198,500 to continue protecting police officers against claims.

By insuring itself, the town has the opportunity to avoid out of court settlements which an insurance company might request because of a desire to avoid attorney's fees.

"We don't like the appearance of an admission of guilt," Town Manager Barry DelCastilho said, though he maintains that the town will need to get police liability insurance.

Premiums for the town's existing fire and theft and general liability insurance are rising, and Town Meeting will be asked to appropriate another $198,500 to cover the costs. Additionally, it is being asked to establish a permanent fund to cover any unpaid claims.

Other articles that may come up at this fall's first session of Town Meeting, when it convenes at 7:30, are:

- A $12,000 request to fund minor improvements at Puffer's Pond.
- An $11,000 for reconditioning a 1968 fire pumper.
- A $220,000 request for renovations to Town Hall to make the building accessible to physically handicapped persons.

Before it adjourns for the season next week, Town Meeting will review two highly controversial articles on rental housing in Amherst. A rent subsidy article proposes that the town allocate $200,000 to subsidize residents who are paying more than 35% of their gross income for rent. An article which requests the establishment of a board to review rent increases in Amherst is the last article on the warrant.

Anti-Soviet rally gets heckled

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

Speakers protested Soviet communist policy and praised President Reagan despite heckling, as an estimated 100 students turned out for a rally in front of the UMass Student Union Friday.

"A new form of fascism has come to the forefront of the world political scene," UMass Republican Club President Loren Spivack said, "Fascism of today is communism."

Addressing the upcoming arms talks, another speaker said the Soviet Union was trying to weaken the United States.

"The Soviet Union cannot be considered a trustworthy friend," Lynn McCabe said, "Don't be fooled by the wolf in sheep's clothing."

In retort of McCabe's comments, a heckler in the crowd shouted "fear breeds fear."

Near the speakers, who were all Republican Club members, a member of the UMass Peacemakers and a Hampshire College student displayed a banner reading "United we stand, divdied we fall." The banner depicted portions of the Soviet and American flags united in a "yin-yang" symbol.

"I'm doing this for humanity," Hampshire student and protestor Karen Winheld said.

Speaker Tony Rudy said democratic countries usually ignore foreign threats to them "because it (democracy) hates doing what it needs to do to stop them.

"The Reagan doctrine has transformed America's passive view of the world into an active one," Rudy said.j

Though speaking between heckles and laughter, Jenny Abrams warned that there are many nations on the verge of joining the 30 communist states in the world.

"It's up to the U.S., as guardian of the free world, to say 'stop' to the Soviet Union," Abrams said.

The Peacemakers and the Radical Student Union gave studetns at the rally leaflets refuting the belligerence of communist nations.

Panel raps Reagan stance

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

The Reagan administration is trying to mold the American family back into the traditional, nuclear, white, patriarchal family through its use of funds and anti-abortion laws, a panel on reproductive freedom concluded Saturday.

"It is quite evident that the Reagan administration's objective is to dismantle family planning and prohibit legal abortion to bring us back to the Victorian era," said Amina Ali, of the four-member panel.

The panel, sponsored by the Committee for Equal Rights and Reproduction Freedom, was part of a day long workshop titled "Reproductive Freedom: A Multi-Cultural Approach" and dealt with the reproductive rights of women from all cultures.

Alit said that the Reagan administration has created "squeal laws," that require the parents of girls under 18 to know if their daughters get an abortion at a federally funded clinic.

Ali also said that dispensing information about abortion is prohibited, and funding for abortion services is denied in an attempt by the government to use money to shape the lives of women.

The rich get richer and.....

David Valade

In a few weeks President Reagan will be meeting with the leader of the Soviet Union, Mikail Gorbachev. As this summit approaches, hopes are increasing that some form of arms reduction agreement can be reached. These hopes are fed by the increasing rhetoric as the encounter approaches. For some, however, there is only cynasism, resulting from past disappointments and contemplation of the nuclear arms race.

There will be no nuclear arms limitations agreement reached at the Reagan-Gorbachev summit. Expectations will rise until the meeting, but the cold reality will become apparent. It is not in the interest of Ronald Reagan or the lobbying forces in Washington to reduce the number of nuclear weapons.

The new right and Reagan have unleashed and attack on "welfare" programs. They are vehemently oposed to any attempt by government to redistribute income from the rich to the poor. They have, however, given complete support to the military, which serves to redistribute income in the other direction.

Our tax system, coupled with military spending contracts, ammounts to a welfare program for the rich. A history of fraud and cost overruns in weapons systems billing make clear the profitability of arming the government. The money spent to pay these bills comes overwhelmingly from taxes paid by the poor and middle classes. Most of the dividends paid on the earnings of corporations producing weapons go to the wealthy. In additon to this, we are footing the bill for government borrowing needed to finance deficit spending. The poor are bearing the cost for the rich to get richer.

The reasons for not producing an arms control agreement go even further. The stated purpose for the military escalation in this country is to provide for peace through strength. It is expected tthat once we acheive nuclear superiority, the Soviet Union will bargain with us and the agreement reached will be favorable to us. This has created a vicious circle of weapons building. Once we reach a position of strength, the Soviet Union won't negotiate. They will procede with their military build-up until they are stronger. We will be where we started. The only differenc ewill be an increased capacity to destroy the world.

The appearance of "nuclear superiority" won't allow for a better negotiating position. It will, however, make it possible to facilitate a more aggressive stance in Central America. Grenada was a mild foray compared to what iwll become possible with a properly equipped armed force. Weapon superiority will make it feasible to attempt invasions of Nicaragua and Cuba. At the very least, the intimidation factor is being used in an attempt to force policy changes.

The military build-up in HOnduras is believed by many to be a precursor to an invasion of Nicaragua. The most extensive military manueurs in U.S. history, known as Big Pine II, are a blatant attempt to influence the internal policies of Nicaragua. The Reagan administration will not be content until the Sandanista government is dead and buried.

The real reason behind our military build-up is to provide some sort of security against Soviet retaliation after an invasion in Central America. Any appearance of weakness could result in a nuclear confrontation. By creating the facade of superiority, this can be avoided.

Reagan's military has reached the level necessary to provide intimidation toward the Soviet Union. The only thing protecting Nicaragua and Cub now is the attitude of the American public. An extensive propaganda effort is being undertaken to soften our fear of another Vietnam. We have fought and died for the right to self-government. Shouldn't others be entitled to the same right?

David Valade is a Collegian columnist.

Sanctuary: the reasons why

After having read Peter Dow's column "U.S. Sanctuary Idea Naive," I wondered who was being naive. Obviously, Dow was unaware of our government's historical involvement in Central America and the nature, length, and extent of this involvement.

Our government has not been merely acting like a concerned neighbor. We have been very instrumental in shaping (or misshaping) the situation in Central America as it exists today. The key issue is not the snactuary movement in itself, but what brought it about, i.e., what made otherwise law abiding citizens feel that it is necessary to "aid and abet" these so called "illegal aliens."

It was our governmetn's policies, posture, and actions in the Central American region that generated the sanctuary movement. The U.S. presence in Central America has been long standing, exploitive, and, "a rose is a rose by any name," it has been colonialist. That is to say that we have been treating Central America as though it were our colony and clevely disguising our actions as "supporting our neighbors." All the while manipulating, shaping, and intervening with military power, all in the name of our "National Security" and "National Interests."

In realilty, we have denied the people of Central America that which we hold so dear in our country—freedom to pursue their own destiny. I am speaking not of the few welathy and elite landowners and business man of these countries, but rather of the people that make up the vast majority.

The majority of the jpeople in these countries have been subjected to poverty, starvation, and death thanks to repressive governments supported by our country, vis-a-vis corporate interests. Over the past decade or so, conditions have worsened because of local crop failures and a faltering world economy. The people had to act or they would die. Whereas in the past they were fighting more for their sovereignty, they were, and are now also fighting for their lives.

They began to speak out more against the oppression that they had been subjected to as the momentum of this revolutionary process grew. Their governments and the U.S. government began to sense the threat to their control and began to move against them. They (the governments) began to resort to coercion, political imprisonment, and assassination. In the past five years they've even resorted to mass genocide.

This leads to the formation of more confrontational rebel groups. Those people who chose not to become rebels, but chose instead to openly work for freedom, found themselves targets of the infamous "Death Squads." They had to choose between silence, death, or fleeing to another country.

There are those in this country who in good conscience decided to respond to the situation and began the sanctuary movement. Our goal in sanctuary is not "the undermining...(of) our National Security...," as Dow stated, but rather the preservation of life and peace in Central Amrica. We would like to see an American foreign policy that reflects the American ideals of "Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness."

The impetus for the local sanctuary movement comes primarily from the Mt. Toby Friends Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends—the Quakers. The Society of Friends has a time honored tradition of working toward social reform and peace. Hardly an impulsive group of "naive," "useful idiots."

Nor are we in any way under the direction of any "far left" political group, as Dow's vague but pointed use of a Lenin quote implied. Personally, my politics have always been just "left-of-center." I firmly believe in the American system of government as is spelled out in our Constitution and Bill of Rights. However, I disagree with the way our stystem is being manipulated to suit the needs of corporate America. Furthermore, as an ex-Marine I've personally been involved in past U.S. actions very similar to Central America—Viet Nam, 1968-70. Don't tel. me I'm naive.

I invite Dow and anyone else who holds his opinion, to really take an indepth look at the Central American situation, and not accept to readily the image presented by our media. remeber, as Noam Chomsky observed, there is a "subserivence of the media to power and official ideology."

Carl McNeely is a UMass student.

Letters

Right to free expression inclusive

I'm writing in response to Nancy Emond's column published Thursday titled "Fraternity's Rude Behavior." Let me first point out that I consider myself liberally oriented when it comes to politics, and that I am not a brother of any fraternity.

I fail to understand Emond's position on free speech. Her letter condemns the BKO fraternity for exercising its coleletive right to jfree expression simply because they did not agree with her and her band of seemingly anti-establishment peace activists. I find it appalling that she would use the "Plowshare 8" as a good example of nonviolent protestors. Maybe it's just me, but I don't find anything honorable or heroic about a bunch of lawless bandits who broke into an Amreican naval base in an attempt to sabotage the very weapons that keep us free and the world at peace. History has shown us over and over again that we can only achieve peace through strength.

I'm not condoning BKO's actions, but I must support their rights to express what they believe, just as I must support Emond's right.

I must also refute Emond's claim that BKO reflected poorly on the University. On the contrary, BKO reflected the UMass spirit of involvement and interest that we all agaree is good for the University.

Finally, I'm curious to find out if Emond has ever gone to bootcamp or had any connection whatsoever with the military. If not, and I doubt she has, she's most unqualified to make any statement regarding the so-called "dehumanizing training" received by our young service men and women. It's ironic indeed that the same military that she attacks and insults is the one that is there to protect her right to speak out against it.

Korean alphabet phonetic, simple

The article in last week's Collegian says, "Japanese is the simplest of the three languages of the East Asia." This may be misleading. The simplest for word processing? If it applies to simplicity and completeness, Japanese is no contest with Korean.

Korean has 24 characters in its alphabet: 14 consonants and 10 vowels. One can learn how to write and read it in an hour. The king, named Se-Jong, and a group of scholars invented Korean alphabet 40 years before Columbus discovered America. They declared, "Now, we can write any sound, even the sound of wind." They didn't know that there was the Roman alphabet on the other side of the world.

Unfortunately, they couldn't foresee that people would use typewriters and computers later. So, Korean, instead of being written in rows of individual characters as in English, is written in blocks of a few characters forming one syllable at at a time. This makes it complicated to do word processing in Korean. But, with development of computer technology, this problem can be solved in the near future and w can do word processing in Korean esse ially with 24 alphabetical characters.

If we open our eyes and minds and remove the prejudices, we would fin that there are lots of wonders and beauti s unnoticed in the world.

"Ironically, sex education programs and information about prevention of pregnancy are not included in the administration's approach of illegalizing abortion and changing the sexual lives of Americans," she said.

The government is denying people on federal insurance abortions, she said adding that those affected range from active military personnel and their dependents to women on Medicaid who, Ali stressed, are the "neediest of the needy."

"Abortions have only been legal since 1973," said Shoshonna Ehrlich, an attorney on the panel," but it is important to realize how newly founded and shaky this right is," she said.

Abortions were freely practiced in pre-Christian societies, with no civil codes against it, Ehrlich said, explaining that the moral question of abortion only came into play" when the medical profession was trying to separate their knowledge from that of the untraditional doctors."

"The question of whether the fetus was a living soul was determined by the medical profession as proof of their knowledge and power," she said.

Ehrlich said that when abortion was illegal women never stopped having abortions.

"People who didn't have power or money went to the butchers," she said.

Maria-Idali Torres, a former member of the Holyoke Infant Mortality Task Force, said those most affected by the new abortion laws are black, Hispanic, and poor women.

"These are the waomen who depend on Federal money and they are the ones who will have to pay for abortions out of their own pocket. They are ignored by the government who claim that there is nothing they can do about it," Torres said.

Minutemen handle Maine, 20-7

Palazzi throws 2 touchdowns as defense stuffs Bears, UM now 4-3

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Take an exciting young quarterback and add an older bunch of veterans out to make up for past sins, and you have what's turning out to be a good Univeristy of Massachusetts football team.

The Minutemen, paced by two touchdown passes freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi and their usual ferocious defense, defeated the University of Maine, 20-7 on a muddy Alumni Stadium field before 5,644.

The wins put UMass 4-3 on the season and 1-1 in the Yankee Conference. It also gives UMass the most victories since 1982 and the first back-to-back wins since 1983. The Minutemen also paid Maine back for a 20-7 loss in Orono last season, considered by many the low point of a forgettable season.

The Minutemen won in the manner they're accustomed to, having Palazzi make the big plays while the defense makes the big hits.

Palazzi, a redshirt freshman that returned to the starting lineup after separating a shoulder for four weeks ago, showed little loss of the mobility that has helped him direct UMass to a 3-1 record. Palazzi was nine-of-14 for 147 yeards including a 24-yard scoring pass to freshman Dan Rubinetti and a 69-yard bomb to Tom Cioppa. Fullback Al Neri busted a 10-yard run to account for the other score.

"I felt good, real good," said Palazzi. "I wanted to play and the coaching staff and everybody else had confidence in me to go out there and run the team. It was a good win for us."

Ther UMass defense, now down to 8.8 points allowed per-game, forced eight Maine fumbles, recovering five. UMass also intercepted two passes and sacked Maine quarterback Bob Wilder four times. The bears, 3-4 and 0-3 in the conference, were held to 77 yards rushing.

"I'm pleased, we played a good game," said UM coach Bob Stull. "We took advantage of their turnovers to score some points and once again the defense was tough. They've played well all season and now our offense, with Palazzi back, is scoring some points."

UMass opened the game with Palazzi, the Yankee Conference rookie-of-the-week for the second time this season, driving the team to the Maine 43 before he was sacked for a 14-yard loss. Dimitri Yavis punted to the UMass 13.

Two plays later, Maine quarterback Bob Wilder was intercepted by UMass co-captain Paul Platek at the 28, returning the ball to the 24.

Palazzi took advantage, throwing 24 yards over the middle to freshman split end Dan Rubinetti for a touchdown with 10:30 to go in the first period. Stan Kaczorowski added the extra point.

Maine turned the ball over four times in the first half, UMass gave it away three times, twice on fumbles. Senior co-captain George Barnwell continued to have problems holding onto the ball, losing the ball after a 10-yard gain to the Maine 12-yard line. Wilder was intercepted by Duckworth Grange at his 34 with the cornerback returning it to the 16. UMass drove to the seven as Palazzi was stopped on a run. Kaczorowski missed a 36 yard field goal as UM missed another scoring opportunity.

The UM defense set up another score as Rich Philpott crunched Maine punt returner Stu Pelkey and Tom Moran recovered his fumble setting up Al Neri's 10-yard run four plays later. Kaczorowski added the point.

Maine drove 73 yards on eight plays for their only score as Mike Walsh went 12 yards with 13:02 left in the game. UMass then drove to its 31 before Palazzi went over the middle to John Crowley.

The pass tipped off Crowley's shoulder, falling into the hands of Tom Cioppa who went 69 yeards for the score. The kick missed, but it was 20-7 and garbage time.

Freshman linebacker John McKeown was co-Yankee Conference defensive player-of-the-week with 14 tackles. Ted Barrett led UMass with 69 yeards on 19 carries. Maine is now 3-4 and 0-3 in the conference.

Volleyball takes tourney

NEWARK, DE.—The University of Massachusetts volleyball team proved this weekend that they are a force to reckon with in any division.

The Minutewomen, one of two Divison II squads at the Delaware Invitational, stunned 14 other East Coast Division I teams as they won the tournament for the first time ever, knocking off James Madision in the finals, 9-15, 15-11, 15-6, on Saturday.

"I just can't believe it," coach Elaine Sortino said. "It's like a dream come true." Massaemjusetts, ranked second in the Northeast, improves to 25-4.

The Minutewomen opened the tournament with a 15-13, 15-11 win over New York Tech but faltered in their next match, a tough 11-15, 15-12, 11-15 loss to Townson State in a match that ended at midnight on Friday.

UMass showed its mettle, qualifying for the invitational playoffs by coming from behind to beat the top seed in UMass' pool, UPenn, 8-15, 15-13, 15-9 at 7:30 a.m. Saturday morning.

The road to the finals wasn't easy in a 19-17, 15-7 win over Westchester State and a win over the Eastern Athletic Conference leader Drexel, 15-9, 15-8.

UMass struggled with James Madison, who knocked off three-time champion Princeton, in the first two games. But the Minutewomen rallied to roll in the third and decisive win to twin the match, 9-15, 15-11, 15-8.

"It was an all-around effort by everyone," Sortino said. Still, seniors Sally Maher, Anne Ringrose, and sophomores Marcy Guiliotis and Violetta Gladkowska stood out. Setter Juilet Primer excelled throughout the tourney and Ann Marie Larese provided some added relief help off the bench in the finals.

"Our goal was only the semis," Sortino said. "This is gravy. This assures us of a winning season and a great season."

Men's soccer wins, 2-1

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

It would have been easy to letdown after Wednesday's tough loss to Connecticut, but the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team bounced back Saturday to defeat a good Brooklyn College squad, 2-1 in New York.

"It was a great win for us," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "It was a great way for us to get back on track after Connecticut (a 2-0 loss)."

The victory improved the Minutemen's record to 12-4 while dropping Brooklyn to 7-3-1 on the season.

UMass struck first, just 8:18 into the contest. Freshman F.J. Zwicklbauer scored on a pass from junior John Shannon. Junior Ferdie Adoboe was also given an assist on play.

Brooklyn tied the game on a goal by Carl Azord at the 42:45 mark. Brian Anderson was credited with an assist on the score.

It took the Minutemen only 27 seconds to regain the lead on a great individual effort by Shannon. The midfielder stole a pass and hit a volley shot from 20 yards over goalkeeper Robert DeGale's head.

The goal was Shannon's thrid of the season and his first game winner.

UMass goalkeeper Sam Ginsburg's record in now 7-0. The Brooklyn score broke a streak of three consecutive shutouts for the freshman.

Gettler cited the play of Kevin Knopf, Ferdie Adoboe, and Zwicklbauer. Rich Baldwin was moved into the stopper position and according to Gettler, played very well.

Women's soccer shrugs off Adelphi

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The top-ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team found the cards stacked against themselves as they knocked off unranked Adelphi University, 5-1, Saturday on Long Island.

"I don't like to talk about the referees but they really wouldn't let us get into our game," senior co-captain Jamie Watson said. UMass, 12-0, got called for 44 fouls and three yellow (warning) cards while the homestanding Panthers were called for only 18 fouls.

Adelphi, 8-4-2, scored its only goal on a controversial call with 18:20 gone in the second half and UMass leading 3-0. The Panthers had a direct kick in front of the goal and the shot by Sue Steele hit the crossbar and fell straight down.

UMass goalie Jan Holland, who was standing in the goal, stoppped the ball next to the post, but the referee claimed it had broken the plane of the goal.

"We all thought it was just a great save and then the ref raised his hands for the goal," Watson said. "All during the game, (coach Kalekeni) Banda was trying to get us away from being upset at the refs. We managed to keep our cool."

Cathy Cassady gave UMass the 1-0 lead just 5:40 after the opening whistle. Carolyn Micheel assisted. All-American Kristen Bowsher (Beth Roundtree assist) scored on a breakaway 2:15 into the second half and Monica Seta's (Cassady assist) goal six minutes later made it 3-0.

Cathy Spence took a pass from Bowsher ten yards out and made it 4-1 with 12 minutes to go in the game. Debbie Belkin (Micheel assist, her tenth of the year) finished the scoring with a goal with two minutes to go.

UMass outshot the Panthers by a 9-2 margin and Spence, Watson and assistant coach Carl Beal received the first yellow cards the Minutewomen have gotten all year.

Gibson calls on community leaders

Dr. William Gibson

It is the time for all peoples to come together and a time for strong leadership in the black community, Dr. William Gibson, chairman of the national board of directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) said in a lecture at the Student Union, last night.

"We're living in some troubled times," he said. "Not just for black people, but for others as well. A whole lot of them don't know they're in trouble."

Gibson claimed that the NAACP and the Legal Defense Fund, "will be filing more legal suits against your (present) U.S. government than (against) the previous four (administrations)."

Gibson said that Reagan went after the black people first. "He's been coming after us ever since he granted tax exempt status to Bob Jones University which is a segregated, private university. He'll be coming for the Hispanics next with cuts in the bilingual education program. He came for the farmers, most of whom voted for him, and they aren't farmers anymore."

Gibson said that Reagan is "the most actively anti-black, anti-feminist, anti-minority president that we have ever had. Turning back the clock spells troubls and trying times."

He believes the kind of leadership we need now is one that is unselfish and uncorrupted. "There is no simple definition of leadership. Those of you in leadership positions should expand on and pursue your roles. You should feel honored and proud. If you are a leader, you should not be leading for your ego or glory, but because you have a cause and you believe in that cause," he said.

He cited these characteristics of a successful leader. "A successful leader must have integrity because nothing can substitute for that. A leader must be informed and know something about what they are trying to lead. A leader must have a sense of humor and be able to laugh at

Money appropriated for police insurance

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Town Meeting voted last night to appropriate $128,500 to establish an account to cover possible claims against the Amherst police department, which has been working without liability insurance since June 30.

Last night was the first night of the Town Meeting (see related story p.4).

No longer are insurance companies automatically offering coverage to any town that requests a policy. Instead, many carriers are pulling out of the municipal insurance market, leaving towns and cities vulnerable to expensive court settlements stemming from civil law suits, according to James Lindstrum, Amherst town administrator and planner.

To magnify the problem, carriers are backing out after little warning, forcing local officials to scurry for new policies and in the interim, operate without coverage.

The situation is similar to the recent problems bars and taverns faced in obtaining liquor liability insurance. The cost of coverage skyrocketed, causing some owners to close their doors.

On the Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts, students, faculty and some administrators are experiencing a dry campus for the first time, after the University lost its alcohol liability insurance this summer. UMass can no longer sell or serve alcohol on its premises.

In September, legislators created a liquor liability insurance pool that is expected to bring down the cost of coverage and help campus bars return to normal.

But, towns finding themselves in the midst of an insurance crisis are not that lucky.

"It's a real problem for us," Lindstrum said. "As an official, I wouldn't want to work and at the same time jeopardize my house and fortune." Barry Del Castilho, Amherst town manager, said he believes the record of civil claims against his town discourages the companies.

Under the terms of municipal insurance, a city or town is protected up to a certain amount, from having to pay out huge sums to plaintiffs who would be suing, for example, the police department and board of selectmen for handling an arrest.

There is no Massachusetts law stipulating a community must carry insurance, and if a community is not covered, officials or employees named in a suit are liable for damages awarded to a plaintiff.

In Amherst, Lindstrum said the town was notified by the carrier, National Union Fire Company only days after it was decided that the annual $20,000 premium Amherst was paying for a building, fire and theft policy would double.

In addition, the annual premium for a policy covering public officials, also offered by National Union, would rise from $2,000 to $6,000.

UMass police handle lots of calls last weekend

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

A unusually high amount of incidents handled by the UMass police this past weekend could not be explained, especially since it was neither a concert or large campus event weekend, said Gerald T. O'Neil, director of public safety.

"I really don't know what happened," O'Neil said of all the problems the police had to handle. "Saturday the game was wonderful and Friday night and Saturday morning was basically routine until the unfortunate accident." O'Neil was referring to the incident where a 19-year-old died from head injuries he sustained from a fall behind the Fine Arts Center (see related story p. 3).

"Things just happened," he said, and "we can't even blame it on a full moon."

An 18-year-old resident of McNamara House was arrested Saturday night and charged with assault and attempted rape. He was held on $10,000 bail, police said.

The resident director of John Adams Tower received a cut on her face when she was assaulted by two men early Sunday morning in the stairwell of the 11th floor, police said.

The men were in the lobby of John Adams and were allegedly drunk, rowdy and disruptive. The resident director asked them to leave and they ran away from her into the elevator. She followed them to the stairwell where she was hit in the face with a bottle. Police have a description of the two men, they said.

A foot locker caught fire on the 7th floor of Webster House late Saturday night when a student was using a portable coffee maker on top ot it and it caught fire. There was no damage done to the dormitory, police said.

A student was injured Sunday night when she sell down the stairs of George Washington Tower during a false fire alarm, police said. She was treated at University Health Services for an injured ankle.

A student slipped and fell down five steps of the Fine Arts Center Saturday night. She was taken to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton where she was treated for a possible back injury. The stairs were wet from the rain, police said.

Thirteen payroll checks valued at $2000 were reported stolen Saturday morning from the fourth floor of the Student Union building. The director of SCERA reported the theft, police said.

A homemade bomb exploded next to Hamlin and Knowlton Houses Saturday night. There was no damage, police said.

Other bombs were discovered later in the Northeast residential area. There are suspects, police said.

A 17-year-old Springfield resident hit a telephone pole, damaged a light pole and a curb, when he lost control of his car on Governor's Drive near the entrance to lot 31.

After leaving, Craxi asked to form a new government

ROME (AP) — Bettino Craxi was asked to form a new government yesterday, four days after he resigned as prime minister. Politicians expect him to try to resurrect the same coalition that fell apart over the Achille Lauro hijacking.

"I will immediately start work to resolve the political crisis, which does not lend itself to easy solutions," Craxi told reporters after President Francesco Cossiga named him premier-designate.

Politicians said Craxi would try to form a goverment with the same four parties that joined his Socialists in the former coalition—the Christian Democrats, Republicans, Social Democrats and Liberals.

Hopes for a solution to the latest of many goverment crises in postwar Italy boosted prices on the on the Milan Stock Exchange. Shares regained two-thirds of the 6 percent they lost after Craxi's resignation Thursday.

Award against firm upheld by U.S. Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, without comment, yesterday let stand an $850,000 award against the manufacturer of an oral contraceptive found to have caused a Massachusetts woman to suffer a crippling stroke.

The court rejected the appeal of Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp., which contended it provided adequate warnings of the drug's risks.

Carole D. MacDonald of Worcester began taking Ortho-Novum contraceptive pills, as prescribed by her gynecologist, in 1973, when she was 26. Mrs. MacDonald three years later suffered a stroke that left her permanently disabled.

A jury awarded her $800,000 and her husband, Bruce, $50,000.

A judge threw out the verdict, but it was reinstated by the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court.

The state's highest court said the jury properly may have determined that the drug company was negligent for failing to warn users that the pills can cause "strokes."

The drug packets did contain warnings that Ortho-Novum may cause blood clotting and death.

But the state court noted that Mrs. MacDonald said she had known about the risk of stroke.

Convicted San Francisco murderer commits suicide

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Former Supervisor Dan White, whose City Hall murders of Mayor George Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk rocked San Franciso in 1978, committed suicide yesterday, according to Supervisor Quentin Kopp.

"Dan White killed himself about an hour ago. I don't know the details," said Kopp. Supervisor John Molinari, the board president, confirmed the report.

White shot Moscone and Milk, a popular gay supervisor, on Nov. 27, 1978. He won a conviction on voluntary manslaughter instead of murder on a defense of diminished capacity due in part to the consumption of junk foods. The defense became famous as the "Twinkie defense."

The conviction on the lesser counts touched off a night of rioting that became known as the White Night riot and resulted in injuries and extensive damage to City Hall. The anniversary of the verdict is still marked by marches by community groups angered by the verdict.

U.S. envoy meets with Mubarak

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Reagan's special envoy said a meeting yesterday with President Hosni Mubarak was "a good first step" toward easing diplomatic tensions over Egypt's handling of the Achille Lauro hijackers and the U.S. interception of the plane carrying them out of Egypt.

John C. Whitehead, deputy secretary of state, told reporters he gave Mubarak a letter from Reagan that "expressed his continued commitment to close U.S.-Egyptian relations and his hope that we can now put our recent differences behind us."

He came to Egypt from Italy, whose coalition government collapsed over Prime Minister Bettino Craxi's decision to release Palestinian guerrilla leader Mohammed Abbas. Abas accompanied the four alleged hijackers out of Egypt on an Egyptian jetliner which took off 10 hours after Mubarak said they had already left the country.

Mubarak had accused the United States of treachery for intercepting the Egyptian airliner on Oct. 10 and forcing it to land in Sicily, where the alleged hijackers were arrested and charged with piracy and the murder of an American passenger aboard the cruise ship.

Whitehead left Cairo yesterday afternoon. U.S. Embassy spokesman Edward Bernier would not comment on his destination, but air controllers at Cairo airport said Whitehead's pilot filed a flight plan for the Tunis, Tunisia.

A visit to Tunis by Whitehead was expected to be aimed at smoothing diplomatic feathers ruffled by the Reagan administration's refusal to condemn Israel's Oct. 1 air raid on the Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters outside the Tunisian capital.

Congressmen ask students for help rebuilding party

BOSTON (AP) — Seven Democratic members of congress met with hundreds of college students on campuses around Massachusetts discussing what went wrong in the 1984 presidential election and how the party can regain support among students.

U.S. Rep. Chester Atkins, who also serves as Masschusetts Democratic party chairman, said the meetings were designed to rebuild the party's base on campuses.

"The Democrats took a lot of things for granted and they got a rude awakening last November when college students voted overwhelmingly for Ronald Reagan," said Atkins, a Concord Democrat now serving his first term in Washington.

"It's an opportunity for the Democrats to get back to basics and to do what we should have done over the last decade—make sure people on college campuses who want to get involved in a hands—on way in the political process know where and how they can do that," he said in an interview.

Sexual diseases at UMass match national average

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

Sexually transmitted diseases are rampant among college students and the number of people afflicted at the University of Massachusetts matches the national college averages, say University Health Center officials.

"Students think that these things occur with other people, in other places such as Boston, or New York, but they happen to everyone," nurse practitioner Doria Meriam, said. "These diseases are rampant in the group that's most sexually active, and that tends to be young people."

Because some diseases are harder to diagnose than others, people may tend to believe sexually transmitted diseases include only well-known ailments such as herpes and syphillis, Meriam said. She stressed that there exist more than 16 other diseases such as gonorrhea, nongonococcal urethrities, also known as chlamydia, candidal vaginitis, scabies, and genital warts.

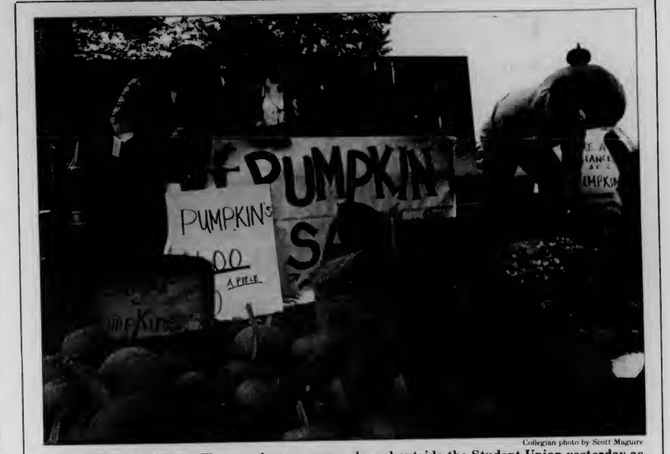
Of the 14 patients that she sees a day, six to seven cases are directly related to sexually transmitted diseases, she said. Other health service official said they were not able to give specific statistics, because their system does not record each and every case.

According to Dr. Will Whittington, research investigator at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Georgia, "There are an estimated 3 million cases per year of chlamydia, with an increase since last year." The problem in reporting these diseases, he said, is the lack of effective lab tests to test for the disease which can cause infertility in men and women.

The more sex partners one has in the course of a lifetime, the greater the risk of acquiring a disease, Meriam said. "Young people just can't seem to realize they are at a risk."

According to Meriam, chlamydia, which is the most common sexually transmitted disease today, can be difficult to diagnose because, "It can look like a bladder infection as well as non-specific urethritis." She said symptoms of the sidease include a burning during urination, and a pale, thick discharge from the vagina or penis. Women can also experience pain during intercourse.

Herpes genitalis is usually transmitted by sexual or close contact with an infected person, while genital warts can be caused by a virus transmitted by anal, genital or oral-genital intercourse. Within one to three months after contact, lesions resembling warts form around the genitals.



Elizabeth S., a University of Massachusetts senior whose name has been changed, contracted chlamydia but was diagnoses as having a bladder infection several times. "I'm worried now about infertility. I waited too long to check other possibilities out because the pain would come and go," she said.

"The important thing is to check out the symptoms just to be on the safe side. It just seems that promiscuity is nationwide but that young people just don't think about the consequences, and that has to stop," she said.

The most effective way of preventing infection from these diseases is through the use of a condom. "It is a barrier that prevents direct contact," Meriam said. "Spermicides might also have anti-viral, anti-bacterial benefits."

"Condoms are effective, but they have to be put on and used, not just left in the drawer," said Joyce Mezzano, family nurse practitioner.

Meriam said that American society gives us "mixed messages" about sex. It's important to accept yourself as a sexual being, and admitting there's a risk of sexually transmitted diseases is the first step. It's very important to really know your partner."

Prof's court report gets national media attention

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Correspondent

Although President Ronald Reagan may not appoint another Supreme Court justice, he will have left "an indelible mark on the judiciary and the course of American law," through his administration's appointments of judges to the federal bench, according to a University of Massachusetts political science professor.

Professor Sheldon Goldman's recently published article, "Reaganizing the Judiciary: The First Term Appointments" has attracted national media attention from Newsweek magazine and the New York Times. Goldman, on leave this semester from the University, elaborated on Reagan's judiciary appointments.

According to Goldman's report:

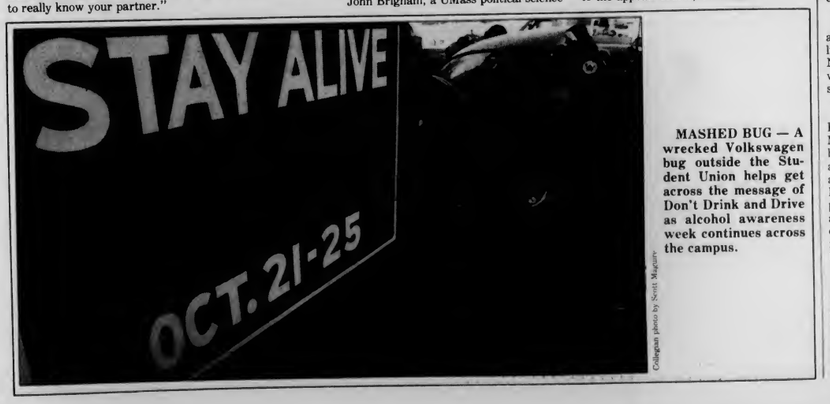
During Reagan's first term, the administration appointed white male Republicans to 97 percent of the district court positions, while only nine percent of the appeals court appointments went to non-white males.

The Reagan record in appointing women to district court slots was second only to the Carter administration record but adds the administration may have refrained from appointing women to "the more important and prestigious" appeals court to test their abilities before they are "actively considered for promotion."

Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor is a "source of satisfaction to the administration," the report states. O'Connor voted against civil liberties arguments 71 to 75 percent of the time.

John Brigham, a UMass political science professor, said that Goldman has "made people aware of how the Reagan administration appoints judges. Many people believe that an administration can appoint anybody it likes.

"But, as professor Goldman has pointed out, there is a long standing tradition of appointing good judges," which the present administration has not kept with, Brigham said.



Although Brigham could not say if anyone will retire from the Supreme Court during Reagan's second term, he said the potential nominations are Circuit Appeals Court Judge Richard Posner from Chicago and Appeals Court Judge Robert Bork from Washington D.C.

Both Posner and Bork are conservatives, Brigham said. "The Reagan administration prefers conservatives." Bork, a former Yale law professor, and other law academics are easy to evaluate for possible judgeship appointments, Goldman's report states because their publications indicate their judicial philosophy.

The Reagan record for black district court appointments is worst since the Eisenhower administration during which no blacks were appointed, the report states.

In contrast, Reagan appointments of Hispanics to district courts was second to the Carter administration. This is linked by observers to the Republican party's effort to attract Hispanic votes in 1984, the report states.

During the Reagan administration, only one black and one Hispanic were appointed to the appeals courts, Goldman wrote.

Student dies after falling from wall

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Visiting hours for Robert J. Mortarelli Jr., a 19-year-old student who died Saturday morning from head injuries he received from a fall, will be held today from 2-4 p.m. and 7-9 p.m. at the Arthur Doherty and Son Funeral home in Natick.

Mortarelli received severe head injuries after he fell off a 20-foot wall onto a cement sidewalk on the east side of the Fine Arts Center, at 4:30 a.m. Saturday morning.

He was taken to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital and transferred to the head unit of Holyoke Hospital where he died less than an hour later. There is no suspicion of foul play, UMass police said.

Mortarelli was a sophomore communications studies major at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. He was scheduled to graduate in 1988. He lived in 227 Cance House.

He was born in Natick and lived there most of his life. He graduated from Natick High School in 1984 where he played intramural sports.

He leaves his parents, Robert J. Mortarelli Sr. and Mary (Ryan) Mortarelli, one brother David J. Mortarelli and two sisters Anne-Marie and Lynne Mortarelli, all of Natick. He also leaves his paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Bruno Mortarelli of Wellesley and his maternal grandmother, Barbara Ryan of Natick.

A funeral Mass will be held at 10 a.m. Wednesday at Saint Patrick's Church on Routh 139 in Natick. The family requests flowers be omitted and donations be made to the Saint Patrick's Youth Ministry.

Alteration money passed

Amherst Town Meeting members last night rejected a proposal to appropriate $855,000 for the construction of a recreation area on a sanitary landfill—but secured $240,000 for alterations to Town Hall.

With a vote of 135 to 32, members indicated their opposition to the elaborate recreation area proposal after some members voiced concerns about a possible health hazard at the landfill site.

Because there are "household" toxins buried underneath the site, the possibilty of wastes seeping through the ground was an issue of concern to many members. Also, member Mary Wentworth stated that she felt the location of the area, which would require children to travel along Route 9, posed danger.

Jonathan Greenberg, a member from precinct 6, proposed buying land from neighboring Belchertown for construction of recreation area.

"We have the bucks, they have the land," he said, "let's make a deal with them."

Town Hall will undergo $270,000 worth of modifications to make it more accessible to handicapped persons after meeting members approved funding of the project.

In a unanimous vote, $12,000 was approved for improvements to the Puffer's Pond area.

Worse yet, the American Insurance Company, a subsidiary of Fireman's Fund, told the town its general liability policy would be dropped without the option of buying another one for a higher premium, and the Imperial Casualty and Idemnity Company would no longer carry Amherst's insurance for law enforcement officials.

"Since July, we have rebid for all four types of coverage," Lindstrum said. "We have found that there aren't any bargains out there."

According to a memo released by Lindstrum, a "wide mailing of bid specifications" was sent out by the town, yet only three bids from insurance companies to insure Amherst were received. No bids were received for law enforcement coverage.

As a result of the costly insurance, some parts of Amherst—dams such as Puffers Pond and certain reservoirs—will also go uninsured.

Operating a town without law enforcement coverage leaves Lindstrum a little concerned, but the town's police chief, Donald Maia, is not bothered.

"I'm comfortable with it," Maia said. "Without an insurance company, the town has the ability to defend its cases. Before, it was up to the insurance company to decide whether to go to court. I think if we had gone to court in the past, we would have won some cases."

A passenger in the car, a 1980 Oldsmobile Omega, was injured and taken to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. He was cited for speeding and his car received extensive damage, police said.

A 20-year-old student was arrested Saturday night and charged with driving under the influence of alcohol and drugs. His passenger was injured when he struck a parked car on Fearing Street, police said.

The passenger was checked for injuries by the Amherst Fire Department and both cars received extensive damage, police said.

A 1969 Chevrolet valued at $2800 was stolen from lot 44. It had been missing since Thursday, police said.

The glass on 24 fire alarm pull pull stations was reported broken Friday night in Lincoln apartments. All of the glass had to be replaced. It was valued at $48, police said.

A backpack valued at $150 was stolen Saturday night from the Campus Center Garage. The owner of the backpack said he left it on the ground and drove away. He returned 5 minutes later and it was gone, police said.

Six minors were arrested this weekend for being in possession of alcohol in separate incidents. Two were charged with being in possession of forged Massachusetts driver's licenses, police said.

Twenty-five million adult Americans are totally illiterate. Another 35,000,000 are functionally illiterate.

Is America creating a permanent underclass . . . an academic third world?

"Absolutely," answers Reginald Damerell, former professor of education at the University of Massachusetts in his new book, Education's Smoking Gun, which squarely places the blame on the teachers' colleges and graduate schools of education.

"This is a tough, no-holds barred attack on teachers' training that has departed from the fundamental importance of the 3 R's in favor of visual aids. When a nation such as this democracy permits its educational standards to decline because teachers are not adequately trained it is necessary for someone to cry: 'Halt!'"[1]

He contends that the introduction of black studies, ethnic studies, and bilingual programs have, in fact, harmed most, those whom they were designed to help—minorities. "He damns three practices he encountered while teaching: admittance of graduate students who have abysmal academic records in an effort to offer equal opportunity; the wide-spread attitude that the 3 R's do not come first in education; and the lack of 'a body of knowledge' in the education curriculum."[2]

"Strong stuff, this, written by one who came into education after a successful advertising career. Like many outsiders, he was appalled at the ignorant, narrow-minded illiterates who peopled the classes, administrations and faculties of far too many university education departments. . . . Damerell is sharp and informed, with little patience for the intellectual slums represented by education courses and the empty credentialism of the Ed. D."[3]

Movement misguided, gullible

Rusty Denton

Somewhere in Central America, if you know where to look, there are people whose political convictions place them in mortal danger. Exactly which nations are more dangerous to live in is a subject of some debate, but most observers agree that Central America can be a dangerous place to live. On this basis we have been asked to sanction the illegal "santuary movement" in the last few months—the underground railroad of the 1980s.

In many ways, this underground railroad is the ideal vehicle for "civil disobedience" it is dramatic, generally involves very little personal sacrifice, and flaunts disrespect for the administration currently in office. Moreover, there is the vicarious thrill of participating in an illegal alien's flight from the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Now, I won't say there's never a place for civil disobedience, but I don't equate it with taking the law into one's own hands. It seems to me that most of what passes for civil disobedience in the United States consistently takes the least imaginative and most rebellious approach to tackling a particular issue, and the sanctuary movement is no exception. It also seems to me that the movement is somewhat indiscriminate in what it accepts as fact, disregarding what will damage its case, and uncritically welcoming whatever will bolster its argument. Some may call this faith, but as a man of faith, I call it gullibility.

How gullible is the sanctuary movement? CBS reported on an INS investigation into the background of illegal aliens in "mortal peril" who were smuggled in by American churches. The INS interviewed families and friends, finding that over 80 percent of the illegals had never been in danger of any kind back home. In other words, they had lied; they were "economic" refugees. Perhaps there were political motivation which biased the INS report, but at least its claims were documented and verifiable, unlike those of the sanctuary movement.

As misguided as the sanctuary movement is in how it perceives its refugees, it is even more misguided in its solutions. The Americans involved may call themselves churches, but they consistently ignore biblical mandates which place a church under certain constraints in reaching out to refugees (or any other persons). Briefly, a biblical asylum will be legal if at all possible, considerate of the asylum-granting nation, and willing to invest personal time, resources, and discomfort.

A legal solution might be to arrange safehouses in a Central American country (call it X) friendly to the United States. and amicable to refugees. A considerate approach would be to establish industry in country X so that refugees don't compete for native jobs. A true commitment would be to invest oneself at the refugee site. This could meet the needs of economic refugees as well. A logical next step would be to lobby lawmakers so that refugees could someday come to America instead.

Contrast this approach with the sanctuary movement—armchair missionaries encouraging a criminal act, and assuming local economies will support however many thousand illegals they choose to sponsor. If one didn't know better, one might get the impression that sanctuary leaders were trying to pick a fight with the government.

To me, that is typical of civil disobedience. Working toward world safety and peace and harmony by starting a fight.

Greenpeace diverse; weak

Joseph McCormack

The notion that to be on either side, or the middle, or off-center, or off-balance, of the political spectrum means that you must support all the causes and whims of that alignment does not hold water in the case of Greenpeace.

However iron-cast your currently fashionable conservative exterior is, that little liberal part of your heart cringed when you heard that some silly French frogpersons had sunk the Rainbow Warrior. (France should be held up to international condemnation for the lives lost in this incident.)

While the Rainbow Warrior lay crippled in port, whales everywhere basked blissfully on ocean surfaces, confident that their friends at Greenpeace were keeping the scurrilous Soviets and Japanese at bay.

Further north, helpless baby Harp seals lay wide-eyed and innocent on iceflows as baseball-bat-wielding men crept closer.

Meanwhile, here at UMass, "Nuke the Whales, Beat the Seals" graffiti spread as animal haters and assorted malcontents took advantage of Greenpeace's weak position.

The point of this is that Greenpeace is spread too thin; they're swamped. Animal rights is usually thought of as a liberal cause, hence Greenpeace is a liberal organization. Being liberal does not mean that Greenpeace has to vigorously throw itself into every liberal issue. Diversification is fine for corporate giants, but not for militant animal rights groups.

Some eyebrows were raised this summer when Greenpeace boarded up sewage outlets leading from a chemical plant to a river. There was speculation that they were trying to save a nearly extinct aquatic newt that was indiginous to the area, but it turned out that they were simply protesting toxic waste.

The shocking thing about the whole affair was that they didn't even hire baby sitters to watch the seals. The whales can take care of themselves in a pinch, but not the Harp seals. Greenpeace's first priority should be to save those seals.

The next time regularly scheduled television programs were interrupted for Greenpeace's benefit, the Rainbow Warrior was sinking off the coast of New Zealand. New Zealand? Were they protesting nukes.

The protest against nuclear power is a hobby in itself. The protest circuit is time consuming; from Seabrook to Three Mile Island, to rallies in Washington D.C., and on to prevent the launching of another nuclear submarine in Groton, Connecticut. It's difficult to see where Greenpeace expects to find enough time to take care of the whales and seals. Perhaps it's time someone suggested foster homes.

With all the coalitions, fronts, and alliances, the nuclear protest movement should have enough personnel without Greenpeace. Let the hue and cry of the liberal populace be for Greenpeace to attend to our animal friends, and leave the other issues to the appropriate groups. If Greenpeace ignores such a mandate, wear that button on the inside of your raggy denim jacket until Greenpeace listens. Also, be ready to adopt a seal.

Letters

Dormitory rules made for a reason

I am writing this letter to re-inform students of a serious problem on campus. I say re-inform, because they have already been informed about the austerity of this violation at the beginning of the semester. Yet I'm sure the majority does not think twice about committing it.

Several weeks ago, while studying in the dorm lounge, I thought it wise to throw some rotten peaches out the window—biodegradable, possible food for the squirrels, and too rotten for my trash. My friends agreed—no harm done. Looking out the window, I noticed someone walking by on the other side of the grass, but didn't think anything of it. So I opened the window, and tossed out the mess.

Within the next minute, a woman was at the door and angrily asked me to accompany her to the cluster office downstairs. She introduced herself as the Residence Director, and informed me that because I had broken the law, it would be necessary to meet in a more formal setting—a pretrial conference. My immediate reaction was one of disgust.

"How stupid and unnecessary," I thought. As if reading my mind she added, "Please read page 13 of your Residence Hall Manual. This is a very srious matter, possible resulting in dorm suspension."

Back in my room, I contemplated the situation. Firstly, I didn't think too nicely of the R.D., and secondly, I easily pictured myself on a street corner with no place to live. But having sometime to think about the matter, I changed my opinion drastically. What if my peaches had instead been a chair or even beer bottles? Someone could have been injured badly. And, by the time one goes to college, one should have learned where trash belongs, and a little maturity in decision making. Also, the Residence Director is responsible for many students, and I was the one at fault.

At my pre-trial hearing, the Residence Director was very fair. Because I have no previous record, and had a positive attitude, I was lucky enough not to be suspended, or put on semester probation. Instead we both thought up a suitable punishment. I really respect the R.D.; for not only does she work well with people, she certainly has taken on a big committment, as the Residence Director.

Needless to say, the point of this story is not to relate my experience so you can have a chuckle over my misfortune, but to warn you, so you won't have one like it. Don't throw anything out the window.

Spirit of intolerance, not involvement

In response to Dana Dacharme's letter to the editor "Right to Free Expression Inclusive," we grant that BKO and others in their accordance do possess the right of freedom of speech. Yet, their statement "Nuke the Pagoda," displayed a high degree of intolerance and ignorance to what the movement represented. The aim of the Pagoda is to establish the sanctity of peace, without interfering in the lives of others. Since said statement was one without regard to the rights of those involved with the Pagoda, how could it ever represent UMass' "Spirit of Involvement?" Instead it appeared to be an individual attempt at the annhilation of peace, and was highly lacking any spirit.

Noisy library — unneeded irritation

During the long Columbus Day weekend, I took what I thought would be the perfect opportunity to find some quiet time to prepare for my upcoming management midterm. To my delight, the second floor of Goodell library was nearly abandoned. There were only about five people there. I found a table all to myself at the center of the room. Everything was perfect for a while.

Soon I was joined at the next table by a group of four baby-faced students. I was surprised to see them there during a holiday weekend. I have heard that the University admission standards have risen in recent years and I took this to be a result of that trend. How wrong I was. It started with a few giggles which were at first ignorable. Next came a four person tag team game of "footsie" followed by a really neat contest to see who could pop their knuckles the loudest. By the time they started to fight over a Mars bar I had had enough.

I left the sanctuary of the library for a more peaceful environment. I think that this kind of behavior is inexcusable. Perhaps we should implement some sort of library monitoring system where responsible adult staff members such as the librarians warn inconsiderate fools to shut up or have their names sent to the Dean for disciplinary action.

I know this suggestion sounds condescending and possible anti-student but the sanctity of the library is something that has to be respected in a serious learning environment. I call on the SGA, faculty, and library staff as well as students to get together to stop this constant and unnecessary irritation.

Soccer gets test, stickers tie

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team goes up against the top ranked division two team in the nation, Southern Connecticut State University, in an important New England contest at 3 p.m. today in New Haven.

The Minutemen (12-4) are vying with Boston University for the second New England spot in the NCAA tournament. The Terriers played Southern (11-1-1) to a scoreless tie earlier this season, so a win for UMass today would help its chances.

"It's a must game for us," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "BU and UMass are up for grabs for the playoffs."

The Owls promise to be a tough opponent as their only loss this season was to Clemson, the number one team in division one.

"They (SC) are super talented," said Gettler. "They keep the ball on the team and are very dangerous."

Southern is led by forwards Elias Zurita and Marvin Etienne. "They are fabulous players," said Gettler. "Both are real good one-on-one players."

The Minutemen must also look out for Brian Bliss, a member of the US National Team this summer. Bliss can play at either midfield or sweeper back.

Gettler is looking for a big game from his front line. "The forwards have to keep the ball on the team. We need to be upbeat."

"We have to shut them down in the important parts of the field, in front of our goal, and keep pressure on them."

Senior Don Donahue (5-4, 1.65 goals average) will start in goal for the Minutemen.

Despite poor weather conditions and a sloppy field, the fifth ranked UMass field hockey team continued its last second heroics, scoring on the games final play to salvage a 2-2 tie with the University of New Hampshire on Saturday, extending the UMass unbeaten streak to seven games. The stickers play Dartmouth today at home at 3 p.m.

The dramatic goal came with just two seconds remaining as Senior Judy Morgan sent a drive past the UNH goalkeeper off an assist from Sophomore right wing Amy Robertson. (Collegian Staff member John A. Nolan contributed to this story.)

Look for freshman forward Duane Chase when you're there, this kid has the tools to be a great one. We're talking major dunks here, big ones.

Finally . . . the Cardinals in six, UMass 24, BU 10 on Saturday, the Celtics from wire to wire and me to catch even more hell from New Yorkers. Happy Birthday on Friday to my Mom.

Navy Gold:
Forged in a Tradition of Excellence

Because the Officers wearing it are the best in the world at what they do . . . they have to be

It takes a special breed of aviator to meet the challenges of Naval Aviation. Strong, dedicated professionals who can control the world's most sophisticated aircraft. There's no room over the oceans for aviators that are second-best.

Beneath the surface pulses a unique environment few will ever challenge. Only an uncompromised standard of excellence earns a submariner his dolphins. The Navy's Nuclear Propulsion Officers wear them.

UM gets one for Coach Reid

Maine victory was a big one for Minuteman assistant

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts defensive coordinator Jimmy Reid was uncharacteristically quiet the week before the Minutemen played the University of Maine on Saturday.

Usually, all you have to do is ask the assistant coach a single question and he rattles off a stream of football consciousness.

But he changed for a week, getting little sleep, spending long hours in his cramped office, crouched over defensive play charts, determined to find a way to not just beat the Black Bears, but to shut them down.

Reid's defensive unit, Division 1-AA's top-ranked team in scoring defense, knew something was up. Coach Reid had something to prove.

An assistant coach at UMass since 1974, Reid graduated from Maine in 1973. He paid his dues as an assistant, putting together defenses that dominated the Yankee Conference. The 1978 team allowed just 13 points-per-game on way to the 1-AA national championship game. He saw one of the stars of that team, defensive end Steve Telander, become a fellow UMass assistant as he waited for his chance.

He was named interim head coach when Bob Pickett retired after the 1983 season, but saw Bob Stull come from Washington and be named to the top position. He waited some more.

Maine seemed perfect for Reid. It was his alma mater and the school had the same work ethic he grew up with in Medford, a tough Eastern Mass working-class town where sports provided an avenue to college.

His hopes of finally landing a head coaching job were raised when he was named one of the finalists, but Reid lost the job to Boston University assistant Buddy Teevens, who was just a senior in college when Reid's defense was menacing the Yankee Conference in 1978.

And now he was facing Maine, wanting a game more than he had in quite a while. His defense called a meeting before the game, Coach Reid wanted the game it was agreed, let's get it for him.

It was Reid's type of game, played in a cold drizzle on a muddy field and dominated by the defense, his defense. UMass forced seven Maine turnovers, setting up the offense for two easy scores. They allowed only one touchdown and gave Reid the game ball in tribute. He had proven his point.

"Hey, he's the best coach I've ever had, I mean ever," said big nose tackle Mike Dwyer, who contended with double and triple teams all day to open up tackles Mike Kowalski, Steve Robar and Manny Fernandez. "We had to win this game."

"Coach Reid is well . . . we love the guy, there's nothing we wouldn't do for him," said freshman linebacker John McKeown, the latest in a long-line of UMass defensive stars. "He didn't say anything to us, he's like that, but we knew, we knew he wanted it. It was a special day for him."

Reid sat in the locker room after the game with his son Matthew, back to his mile-a-minute self, a burden off his shoulders and another goal met.

"I didn't say anything all week, I just let it dwell in my mind . . . this was Maine," said Reid. "This means so much to me, I've got a game ball. This is great."

It's not every day that an assistant coach steps into the spotlight, but not every assistant coach is a Jim Reid either. He's one guy who deserves any glory he gets.

Top-ranked UM women at Harvard

Soccer, 12-0, gets tested

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The record is deceiving. But University of Massachusetts women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda isn't fooled by Harvard University 4-5-3 record.

"Don't write them off," he said. "They're strong. They're not pushovers. They always have a sense of urgency."

Harvard is also a squad that has beaten the top-ranked Minutewomen twice in the last two years. UMass' only win over the Crimson since 1982 came in last year's NCAA playoffs.

The two squads renew their rivalary in Cambridge this afternoon at 3 p.m. and the 12-0 Minutewomen will be facing one of the top goalies in the nations, Crimson sophomore Tracee Whitley.

"Beating Harvard means beating Whitley and its as simple as that," Banda said. Whitley has almost single-handedly kept the Crimson afloat this season.

Harvard has had trouble scoring, scoring only nine goals in 12 games, while giving up eight. "They'll be looking for the long ball and looking for the quick goal," Banda said. "They are still looking to make the playoffs and they'll do everything they have to do."

UMass hasn't had a lot of trouble scoring with 52 goals to the opposition's two but Banda is stressing defense defense to his undefeated squad. "We have to win the 50/50 balls right off the bat," he said. "We have to be fast and hard."

As its been all season, strong defense has sparked the Minutewomen offense and Banda expects today's game to be the same. Freshman forward Beth Roundtree and sophomore Monica Seta share the team scoring lead with 22 points. And UMass keeper Jan Holland has given up just one goal all year.

The squads have had five common opponents. UMass beat Dartmouth 6-0, Adelphi 5-1, UConn 1-0, Vermont 3-0 and the University of New Hampshire 4-0. Harvard lost to Adelphi 1-0 in overtime, UConn 1-0 in overtime, and beat New Hampshire 2-0, Vermont 2-0, and Dartmouth 2-0.

More impressive is the fact that Harvard tied third-ranked Boston College 1-1. But it will take more than impressive previous performances for the Crimson to knock off the nation's number one team.

"We don't want to leave anything to chance," Banda said. "We don't want to make their season."

UM women win x-country meet

By PHIL SAYLES
Collegian Correspondent

Both University of Massachusetts cross country teams returned to action last weekend as the men placed third at the Eastern Championships at Burlington, Vt., while the women emerged victorious at the Holy Cross Invitational in Worcester.

For the women, senior hill specialist Lauren Heyl nogotiated the rugged course well enough to place first in an impressive time of 18:27.

"This was Lauren's type of race," said Massachusetts head coach Caroline Gardener, "She really runs her best on the tough courses."

Rounding out the top three for the race were UVM's Diane Hanks and Holy Cross' Katie Redden, with time of 18:33 and 18:35, respectively. For the Minutewomen, Karen Holland finished eighth overall and Doreen Erickson was 14th.

"This was a big victory for us," noted Gardiner, "It will give us good momentum going into next week's meet (at New Hampshire)."

In the Easterns, the men were the victims of the Providence College cross country juggernaut, as the Friars low team score of 21 was 60 points below the nearest competitor, Southern Connecticut. The Minutemen, however, were able to salvage a respectable third place finish among the 15 team field with a strong overall team effort.

Dwight Evans and Jackie Gutierrez to Kansas City for either Danny Jackson or Mark Gubicza? I'd hold out for Jackson, but settle for Gubicza.

But why do I have the feeling that the Sox will stay with the status quo, happy to draw fans, make money and never contend.

At least trade Mark Clear, to anybody, please.

Would you have pitched to Jack Clark in that situation? Who will the Celtics keep? How about them Bruins and who will win the Heisman? Boy, do I love this time of year.

News Item: Pat Ewing throws an elbow at Steve Stipanovich and the two get ejected after a fight. It's Ewing's third fight and the season hasn't even started. Who does this guy think he is, he's got a lot of growing up to do before becoming a force in the NBA.

Put money on it now, lots too, the Patriots will lose to Tampa Bay this week.

Speaking of New Yorkers: If NY schools are so wonderful (as I've been told many times recently) why aren't you there? I was going to go to Ithaca but couldn't stomach the thought of four years of not being able to see the Celtics on TV.

Rent control proposed for Amherst area

Two housing rental proposals for Amherst will be addressed at this week's Town Meeting, after the town's Rent Control Study Commission (RCSC) reported that many tenants in the area are paying a large amount of their income for rent.

A town warrant article sponsored by RCSC Chairman Kenneth Mosakowski proposes that the town establish a rent review board to examine cases of high rental housing costs on a case-by-case basis.

As a alternative to Mosakowski's plan, the Pioneer Valley Housing Association (PVHA) is proposing that the town establish a $200,000 fund to subsidize individual families who are paying more than 35 percent of their gross yearly income on rent.

Under the PVHA's play, a committee would be created which would decide who is eligible for a subsidy and how much cash they will receive.

But the PVHA, made up of local landlords, has not decided whether college students living away from their parents will be eligible for rent subsidy as permanent residents.

But Mosakowski said he feels the $200,000 which the town would spend under the subsidy plan would be better

Negotiators given power to strike

By PHIL SERAFINO
Collegian Staff

Union employees of the Lord Jeffery Inn, who are currently negotiating a new contract, cleared the way for a possible strike when they voted yesterday authorize their negotiating committee to call for any action necessary to break the contract deadlock.

"Anything we can do to avoid a job action at this point we will do, within reason. We're not going to sell our souls, however," said Robert Traber, area director for local 217 of the hotel and resteraunt employees union which represents the employees.

Negotiations between the union and the Inn, which is 75 percent owned by Amherst College, have been going on for three weeks. The employees' contract expires at midnight tomorrow.

Of the 70 employees whose contracts are being renegotiated, over half are University of Massachusetts students.

Traber said that negotiations were planned for last night and tomorrow. "We are looking for a fair and reasonable contract, and that includes a raise. We are opposed to a two-tier pay system," he said. He added that if an agreement is not reached by 10 p.m. tomorrow, the negotiating committee will meet to decide what action to take. If a strike is called, it will begin Friday morning. The employees voted 53 to 2 to authorize whatever action the committee feels is necessary.

Edmund Patterson, a desk clerk at the Inn and a union steward, said that with the new contract the management wants to take away the employees' right to set their own schedules and would eliminate health insurance that the Inn now provides for employees.

Patterson said the management of the Inn would also like to insititue a two-tier pay system under which new employees would not be able to achieve pay levels that current employees achieve. He said management is trying to cause a division between current and future employees which would result in the elimination of the union.

Eric Nussbaum, the manager fo the Lord Jeffery Inn, declined to comment on negotiations except to say, "We are negotiating with our employees face-to-face, not through the newspapers of the press."

The negotiating committee for the union is composed of Traber, Connie Holt, who is a union organizer, and 10 Inn employees. The management negotiating team is Nussbaum, an assistant manager of the Inn, and a lawyer who was hired by Amherst College.

Traber said that as of now, a job action is likely. "This vote, against the Inn, is more directed against Amherst College, which owns the Inn and which is demonstrating its disdain for the community," Traber said.

Phone service could cut rates by 30 percent

By BRIAN BLOCK
Collegian Correspondent

A long-distance discount service called UMATEL, which m akes use of inactive circuits already installed at the University of Massa chusetts, is now being implemented for on-campus residents.

UMATEL is a campus-based trial version of "MCI" or "SPRINT" developed to expand the previously installed long distance service used by University employees, Roger Barbeau, assistant telecommunications manager, said.

Student subscribers can expect a 25 to 30 percent savings below conventional rates. The savings are greatest in the calls made within the 617 area code, he said.

"We lease circuits that management use during the day to make long distance calls and are not being utilized at night," Barbeau said. To accommodate the new service, the telecommunications department bought additional switching equipment which transfers long distance calls locally.

Unlike most other systems, Barbeau said, studetns who subscribe to UMATEL do not have to make all their long distance calls with the University system.

"We want to make sure that if anything happens to our long distance switch that they can still get out," he said.

Instead of a monthly fee, a $50 down payment is required to start the service and goes towards bill payments. But if $50 worth of calls are not made, the remaining money can be carried over to the next semester's charges or can be refunded, Barbeau said.

UMass women reflect on meeting

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Four University of Massachusetts women who attended the Non-Governmental Conference for Women in Nairobi, Kenya this summer said yesterday their time in Africa allowed them to get close to a "diverse" group of women who "shared common problems."

"17,000 women attended the conference and came from every known part of the world, but basically women are essentially dealing with the same set of issues," said Barbara Love, associate professor of the school of education who is involved in that school's division of international leadership.

Love recalled a conversation she overheard between a male American reporter and the wife of a leader in a third world country in which she said the American took on a patronizing tone. "He asked her why women were given no equal rights in her country and she replied, 'why haven't you passed your ERA (Equal Rights Amendment).'"

Remi Pai, who also works for the center for international Leadership, said the issues of reproductive rights and health are ones womens in the first and third worlds are currently facing. She stressed that the Reagans administration's attempts to implement a Natural Family Planning Policy will ultimately affect women in the third world.

"Developing countries are placed in a dilemma. If they do something they think may alleviate problems, it is linked to perhaps receiving or not receiving aid," Pai said.

"Imagine if you worked in a small clinic (in a third world country) that provided contraception services and abortion to women and you're told you must sign a contract saying the only thing you will provide is education about the (rythym method) and stop giving abortions," she said.

As an example of other roles the US plays in the third world, Pai pointed out the in 1982 the US government funded a $15 million project in Bangladesh where, in order to cut down on a growing population, women would be "forcefully sterilized and given the equivalent of one dollar if they went through the operation."

Barbara Love, associate professor in the school of education.

Director of the Office of Third World Programs in the Fine Arts Center Roberta Uno Thelwell, said her experience in nairobi was "extremely and immediately a disappointing one at first."

"There was never one time when we all sat down together to decide what our plans, what our agenda was." Because there were no "conference reporters," and because "things were done on a very individual basis," it revealed, "the marginal condition of women," Thelwell said.

"They are still being locked out of true power and real definition," she said.

Thelwell did add that she was "inspired" to see that "in spite of there being no main central organization for women, they sat down and said, 'this will make a difference in our lives'."

Dukakis signs bill: buckle up

BOSTON (AP) —Massachusetts became the 16th state with a mandatory seat belt law yesterday when Gov. Michael S. Dukakis signed a bill that he said would save lives and also save on automobile insurance costs.

The law, which takes effect Jan. 1, calls for a $15 fine for front-seat and back-seat passengers who fail to buckle up. State officials said they expected it to increase use of safety restraints from the current 14 percent to more than 60 percent.

The bill-signing ended a long campaign by Dukakis and a coalition of seat belt advocates to reverse years of legislative opposition to a mandatory law. A similar bill was killed in the House last year by more than a 3-to-1 margin.

"When we began, very few people thought we would win. Today, we not only have a bill and a good bill, but very broad public support for it," said Dukakis, who demands that all passengers in his own car buckle up before the vehicle can move.

"We're not trying to make lawbreakers of people or raise money," he said. "We're trying to deliver the strongest message we can: Wear your belt."

Public support of the mandatory law will be tested in a non-binding referendum in November 1986. Legislative opponents said they will push to repeal the law if Massachusetts residents vote against it.

The law calls for police to use secondary enforcement, in which they would cite motorists only if they were pulled over for another infraction. Each passenger who fails to wear a belt could be fined $15, with parents being held responsible for youngsters under age 16.

Soviets charged with violation

Washington (AP) —Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger charged yesterday the Soviet Union has begun deploying a new mobile nuclear missile in violation of the SALT II accord and said this provided fresh justification for President Reagan's "Star Wars" program.

Weinberger confirmed the deployment of the new SS-25 missile in the course of attacking administration critics who believe "that arms control is a more ethically justifiable course of action than attempting to strengthen deterrence through defensive weapons."

"Recent history shows that arms control has hardly been a raving success," Weinberger told a conference sponsored by the Ethics and Public Policy Center, a conservative Washington think-tank.

"Today, I can officially confirm that one of their new ICBMs, the mobile SS-25, is now being deployed and is an unquestionable violation of Soviet assurances given to us under the SALT II accord," he continued.

"The SS-25 is road-mobile and can be housed in launcher garages equipped with sliding roofs. This makes it an extremely versatile weapon. The SS-25 violates the SALT II agreement that permits development of only new type of ICBM. Their first new type developed, the SS-X-24, is now being tested."

Eight blacks reportedly killed in S. Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Rioting flared outside major cities yesterday with up to eight blacks reported killed, and a white South African minister said he and five other churchmen want to talk with the African National Congress, the main guerrilla organization trying to overthrow the government.

President P.W. Botha warned that a meeting would "amount to a challenge of the state's authority."

Security police reportedly arrested a leader of the United Democratic Front, the main multiracial organization opposed to white-minority rule. Colleagues of Trevor Manuel, a member of the front's national executive who is of mixed-race ancestry, said he was detained under a security law that allows police to deny the victim a trial.

"They just walked straight up to him, handcuffed him and took him away," said Veronica Simmers, an office worker for the front who said she saw Manuel being detained in the group's Cape Town offices.

Witnesses said rioters swarmed around the black and mixed-race neighborhoods east of CapeTown, where it is becoming increasingly dangerous for whites to travel the highways linking the city to its international airport.

The roads skirt black and mixed-race townships, and young ambushers heaving stones and gasoline bombs have been attacking white motorists.

Flynn calls for rejection of treaty proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new extradition treaty proposed by the Reagan administration would ally the United States with Great Britain in the conflict in Northern Ireland, Boston Mayor Raymond L. Flynn told the Seante Foreign Relations Committee yesterday.

Flynn urged the committee to reject the treaty, which is aimed at preventing Irish Republican Army members accused of crimes in the United Kingdom from seeking asylum in the United States.

Flynn, who said he opposed terrorism by the IRA, said the treaty would deal with only part of the problem, and would have the effect of aiding terrorism, rather tha opposing it.

"A significant body of evidence is available to this committee demonstrating that the violence by the British security forces against unarmed Catholics in Northern Ireland, along with the denial of due proces rights, amount to a very real form of official terror, as well as an ongoing source of Catholic alienation from the institutional structures of Northern Ireland," Flynn said.

Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., who has been a harsh critic of terrorism on both sides in the Northern Ireland conflict, asked that the Foreign Relations Committee staff assemble a report on violence committed by the British against the Catholic minority in the six northern counties of Ireland.

Grad senate forms protests against URF

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

An ad hoc committee of the University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate is currently investigating graduate students options for actively protesting the Universal Resource Fee.

Senate Executive Officer John Hayes is heading the committee, which is attempting to collect the ideas of graduate students concerning the issue and consolidate them into a plan of action.

The Universal Resource fee merges student fees into a single account, which therefore charges graduate and off-campus students for the debt service fees on dormitories and dining commons which they don't use.

"We plan to start with small-scale actions while we try to convince the chancellor to talk to us and at the same time get graduate students involved and interested in working on the issue," Hayes said.

Hayes asked students to fill out various forms such as the change of address and the Prince House housing application to create more administrative bookwork for the University.

"These are just small, aggravating actions that don't hurt anyone badly, but just pressure the smaller administrators to pressure the higher ones to do something about the URF," he added.

Hayes said if no progress is made on the issue by the end of the semester, the committee may ask TA's to withold grades in January and may even urge graduate students to refuse paying the fee in March.

The committee will work closely with the Commuter Area Government which is also organizing a protest of the fee, Hayes said.

A differential fee, which would be higher for dormitory/dining commons users, was one option suggested for the committee to propose to the administration.

Hayes also said that the committee will consult the Legal Services Office to explore graduate students' rights and responsibilities concerning the fee and their protest of it it.

Also last night, the senate tabled a motion endorsing a petiition being circulated by the Union of Concerned Scientists because there was not a copy of the actual motion available.

Food eng. gets new head

By RHONDA SWAN
Collegian Correspondent

"Delighted" was the word John R. Rosenau used to describe his reaction to his recent appointment as the head of the department of food engineering at the University of Massachusetts.

Rosenau, who joined that department in 1973, has participated in several research projects designed to improve both the food engineering and food processing industries.

"It is a logical program that people interested in engineering should look into."

—John Rosenau

Rosenau said he has several goals, including seeing "a closer tie develop between the undergraduate program and the school of engineering." In addition, he said he would also like to extend those ties to the food engineering and processing industries.

Rosenau expressed concern for the limited number of engineering students who are aware of the food program. "Our undergraduate program is a bonafide engineering program with excellent placements of graduates in the food processing industry and not too many people know about it."

"It is a logical program that people interested in engineering should look into," he said.

One project Rosenau looks forward to is combining the efforts of the food engineering department with those of the plant and soil sciences department to computerize the process used to maintain and control the atmosphere storage for apples without the use of preservatives. "Computerizing this process will better keep the product without labor intensive monitoring."

"Business Woman of the Year" Susan Lowance.

Member of Smith honored

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

In observance of National Businesswomens' Week Oct. 19-26, the Business and Professional Womens' Club of Hampshire County named Susan C. Lowance, director of the Smith Management Program, "Business Woman of The Year."

Honored for "her serious commitment to the education and advancement of women as managers," Lowance said, "Our nation is not very far along for women who are managing a career and faimly at the same time. There are a lot of opportunity before there is any support system is in place."

She pointed out that though women may be moving up in business fields, things like family management and male awareness are still not considered important issues in American society. "It's like having a Ferrari before all the roads are paved," Lowance said.

Lowance has been the director of the Smith Management Program since 1982. She explained that the program gives formal management training to women who have worked their way up to the middle-management level but who do not have a graduate degree in business administration.

Calling the program a "huge success," Lowance said Smith aims it at middle-managers because, "since women had not yet moved far enough up to join the majority of the programs offered by the business schools that focus on upper and middle-upper managers."

She explained many business schools offer similar programs, but studies show that 97 percent of the participants are male.

"At that period of time, (1982) it had become apparent that a dual career was not only preferred but necessary for American families," she said.

Participants come to the Smith College for two-week periods over two summers where women are taught by faculty from University of Massachusetts, Harvard and Dartmouth College, and Yale business schools. Lowance adds that the program is "a fine way to move theory into practice" in that students are required to complete a project on the job before the graduate from the program.

Lowance is a former chairwoman of the Amherst Planning Board.

Computer use mandatory for frosh English

By KATHLEEN KENNEDY
Collegian Correspondent

This semster, first-year students are giving up their pens and pencils for 30 Digital Decamate Word Processors available through the Freshman Writing Program.

The word processors, which were requested by Professor charles Moran, Dean of Fine Arts and Humanities, were implemented this year into the Freshman Writing Program to allow freshman access to computers and to enable them to edit and revise quickly.

"The technology makes us able to teach revising. You may say to a student, 'Try another first sentence,' Well now they can rewrite the first sentence 15 times and not have to rewrite the entire paper to squeeze it in," Moran said.

Word processors don't teach you how to write, Moran said. In class, studetns work on grammar and style with the guidance of a teacher, who allows students to build on their own potential. Freshmen in the writing program have two hours of regular class and one hour devoted to the word processors.

The University is the only school in the Five College area to have word processor labs.

"Outside of this area, Westfield State and the University of Connecticut have programs, but they are half the size and not as elaborate as ours," Moran said.

Contest: create a cool dorm room

The results are in, and the winners are...

By Renee Bacher
Collegian Staff

In the quiet month of August, before the University of Massachusetts filled its residence halls with roughly 11,000 students, Collegian staffers brought a stark, empty dorm room to life with the help of items donated by local merchants.

This season's first living section (Back-to-School issue Sept. 4) featured the finished room in a piece titled, "Designing a dynamite dorm room," complete with suggestions for students who would be staring at four similar blank walls. We listed the ingredients used in our creation, and delivered a challenge to on-campus students.

In the interest of inspiring creativity, our challenge appealed to those who thought they put a special effort into designing the ultimate crash pad.

A panel of judges made up of Collegian editors, a photo technician, and a graphics specialist have chosen the following winners who were awarded accordingly from the stash of items donated for our sample room:

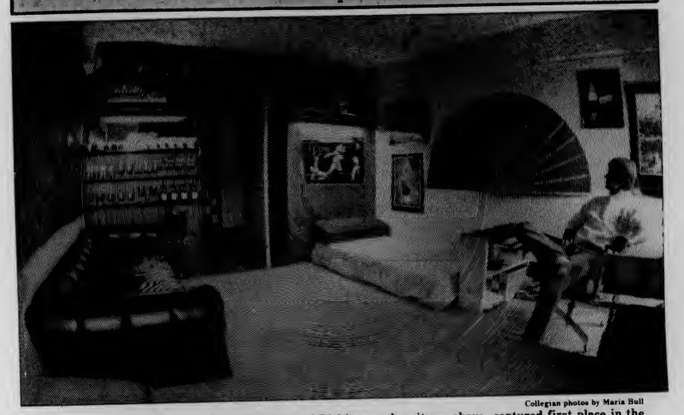
First place—Scott McGaunn of Dickinson dormitory

Second place—Mark Shelby and Ted Selig of Chadbourne dormitory

Third place—Charlene Pina and Lisa Horan of Dickinson dormitory

Scott McGaunn, a senior HRTA major and resident assistant, has a double room without a roommate. This has presented Scott with both an advantage and a disadvantage: his room was decorated with only his personal taste in mind, yet he has had to conjure up enough creativity for two and supply twice the materials as a person with a roommate. Scott calls his room a "warm, comfortable crash pad which is good for entertaining."

Most of his materials were acquired from home or friends, although he did invest in some tag-sale glassware and prints from a Campus Center print sale. As far as the picture perfect state of his room, Scott says it's consistently clean.



"I'm always neat, it's part of my major," he says.

Mark Shelby, junior landscape architecture major, and Ted Selig, junior engineering major, say their room creates a "contemporary atmosphere which is warmer than most." According to Ted, the two are good friends who are able to tell each other when they don't care for something. Together, they've been able to tear undesirable things down and throw them out. They're most proud of their Ansel Adams print and an enlarged photo which Ted took.

"We've kind of developed an art collection," Ted says.

Charlene Pina, sophomore astronomy major, and Lisa Horan, junior English major, were inspired by an oriental scene painted on their door to decorate their room based on that theme. Charlene said the two women "pooled their resources" from home to create a "warm, lived-in atmosphere." Charlene says that the tapestry covering the ceiling took the most time and energy, yet it is one of the unique touches that makes their room special.

Cooking: not my cup of tea

Dode Levenson

I never claimed I could cook.

I always thought home cooking meant that you opened the can at home. My recipe for good cooking is fast cooking. The quicker it is to cook, the quicker I can eat it, and the quicker I can get back to the activity all students participate in: procrastinating.

Salads? As long as it comes prepared with its own bowl and salad dressing (not bleu cheese), I'll have some. Making a salad the old fashioned way, starting from scratch as it were, is not my bag. It takes more time choosing the lettuce head than it would to eat the entire salad. I don't need my food that personalized. Basically, if it's good enough to be put in a can, it's good enough to be on my plate.

Greg C., one of my roommates, is a meat-and-potatoes man. His idea of a complete meal is the same as Swanson's. Dinners should consist of 1)Entree; — this usually means a tantalizing salisbury steak, or some other meat by-product, 2)Some lovely vegetables, like freshly canned corn, or stuffing; 3)Fresh mashed potatoes made from grade A powder; and 4)an eye-catching dessert, like a brownie. For Greg, the "mess factor" isn't a main concern. In fact, to show how important it is to have a complete meal, he doesn't let the pots and pans bother him. It bothers us.

Another roommate, Itaru K., is from Japan and cooks some amazing concoctions. As we're watching the tube and our stomachs grumble so loudly the neighbors complain, we know then that it's time for dinner. This is convenient, however, because it takes two people to prepare Itaru's dishes.

He uses me for all canned resources. Over the years, I have become proficient at opening a can, and artistically spilling its contents into the wok. Itaru uses the finest ingredients. Actually, all the ingredients are written in Japanese, so I have no idea what he puts in there. I also don't know the name for the dishes he makes. Neither does he.

What would you call a dish that has rice, some kind of noodles, some green stuff,accented by some thick red stuff, mixed in with a healthy amount of curry, spices, chicken, and of course canned corn? I just call it delicious.

Pete D., yet another of my roommates is a big boy. He's 6 foot 3 and 220 lbs. of carnivore. When he snacks, it usually means time to get another five lbs. of hamburger and a loaf of bread.

He, like me, likes things to be quick and easy. "You can have a pizza here in a half hour? Great." The prep work involved in Pete's eating requires a finger in good working order and a telephone. The cleanup afterwards is as easy as crumbling up a box and depositing it in an overflowing trash can. Wouldn't it be great if everyone could eat that way?

I know I have left nutrition completely unmentioned. I trust those folks at the cannery. I mean, how could they in good conscience put something that was not nutritious in a can? I realize this is no way for someone to prepare food for the rest of his or her life; but for college, it'll do.

Terrorism as a reaction

Terrorism is a problem that has plagued us since we have become "civilized." Lately it has become a topic of great concern among Americans. The news gives us renewed accounts of violent acts committed by terrorists almost daily. We need only think back over the last few years and the myriad of bombs exploding in cars, stores, embassies, air bases, etc. remind us of a growing problem and a rising death toll.

Groups such as the PLO, FALN, IRA, Shiite Moslems and any others have become familiar to us all. We see them as blood thirsty takers of innocent lives. We as Americans blame them for the death and destruction that their bombs have caused. I agree, they are responsible for the infringement of many human rights and are responsible for the deaths of thousands, but I also believe that part of the blame falls on our own heads.

In examining war (i.e.terrorism) from a moralistic point of view several assumed rules must be established. War must be fought almost exclusively between combatents, excluding innocents (non-combatents). For this reason, we condemn terrorism because it frequently involves non-combatents and takes away innocent lives. Combatents must fight on a uniform battlefield and have access to each other. It one is going to kill, one must be prepared to be killed.These rules apply to terrorists as combatents. In many instances the United States has fought militant groups and denied them the right to retaliate.

By shelling the Shiite militia in the hills of South Lebanon with United States warships, we thus entered into a conflict with the Shiites. Not only did we kill innocents but the United States also denied them a chance to retaliate (as required by the moral code of war). Instead the Shiites were forced to find other means to retaliate — car bombs that killed many innocents. We supply the Israelis with weapons, thus becoming involved in a conflict with Israels enemies, yet we deny them a chance to retaliate. Again they turn to terrorist activities.

Arguments can be made against what I have said, but I think we must ask ourselves, why are Americans consistently targeted by terrorists? Are we condemning terrorists withoutexamining all the facts? I believe that we, as United States citizens, are partially to blame for some of this violence and itis about time we accepted some of the guilt. If we can admit that we are responsible for some of this then maybe together we can begin to find a solution to the problem to terrorism which, in the end, is most important.

Libraries must be quiet

How come every time I go to the first floor of the Tower library to study, I get an overwhelming urge to stand up in the middle of the room and yell at everyone to shut up? Since when did the library turn into the UMass hot spot of social hours? I thought it was built so students, like myself, could study in a peaceful, academic surrounding. However, it appears to me that it it, more or less, a place for "pseudo-studying"; where giggling, gum-snapping individuals meet, dressed to impress, and where the latest gossip is likely to spread the fastest.

To those of you who fit this description (of course you will deny it), I think you are inconsiderate and rude. I have a right to study at the library in PEACE because that is one of its main purposes and I should not be forced to go elsewhere to do so. Therefore, next time you are standing in the middle of the library chatting casually with friends and someone glares at you from a nearby table, remember-they may think of you as I do, sit down and shut up.

Peace is an ideal for all

Well spoken, Nancy Emond. Your Collegian letter concerning the BKO fraternity behavior summed up the opinions of countless on this campus. Few, if any, could've expressed it better. Members of the peace movement are neither dead nor Red, and rally for peace because we love this country and world. As Americans, we openly oppose President Reagan's nuclear policies—a privilege that we are proud to have.

I saw the peace walk advance towards Amherst (past BKO incidentally) and gritted my teeth at not being able to join in the festivities. As far as the generally low turnout by UMass students is concerned, perhaps it can be attributed to the religious appearance of the walk. Granted, the theme was world pjeace and by no means is that a strictly Buddhist ideal. But to the casual observer, the walk appeared to have religious overtones. The low turnout did not in any way reflect the interest of peace. Rest assured, as far as peace lovers go, the University is teeming with us.

To each an interpretation

It's hard to say which is the more objectionable aspect of Rusty Denton's recent article: their sexism, or their presumptuousness about what "the Bible says".

The Bible is not any one person's interpretation of it. Three world religions embrace it as their sacred text, and within each, readers without number find different ways of applying it to their daily lives. My own religious tradition, Judaism, holds that without understanding the oral teachings that accompany the biblical text, you cannot know what it means. In other words, the Bible doesn't simply "say" anything. It's up to us to discover its current meaning by posing questions and coming up with creative interpreatations—carryong on a dialogue with God over what it should mean.

Now, relations between men and women make up on e of the liveliest debates going on within religious circles today. Somehow, though, Denton thinks he can short-circuit the wholoe discussion simply by flourishing a few quotations. How dare he? Does he think his words can substitute for God's?

Women who desire to live proudly have already rejected Denton's patronizing message. Women and men seek to live devoutly should refuse to turn the Bible into a false god, toon.

Housing crisis in Amherst

The town of Amherst suffers from a housing shortage, a problem which students contribute to, but are victims of also.

In addition to the overburdened and occasionally disorganized on-campus housing "option," off-campus students are often subject to skyrocketing rents, difficult or discriminatory landlords, and uncertainty about vacancies in a town chock full of tenants.

Unlucky dormitory dwellers should never have to settle for "swing" space, nor should others be forced to compromise their study space.

Similarly, inflated rental costs should not force students to be vagabonds, living in unsafe conditions or depending on the goodwill of others for a roof above their heads.

The diminished capacity of the University to house students came when enrollment expanded by 19,000 from 1960 to 1983, while housing space rose by only 8,000 in the same period.

The continued requirement of underclass residency despite an inability to handle the number of occupants, and the renovation of former dorms into administrative centers reflect the University's and the Legislature's negligence in going about solving this problem.

While University administrators may be re-examining the on campus sophomore living requirement, permitting students to move off campus at an earlier time will not alleviate the housing crisis.

Amherst has grappled with a housing shortage for 10 years. The most recent rent control study commission found that a serious shortage of residential rental housing exists in town; that there are unnecessary obstacles to the construction of new, low and moderate cost rental housing; and that tenants face continuing problems finding affordable housing.

A town of many committees, Amherst's strict zoning by-laws make building new housing prohibitively difficult. Rent control has been consistently voted down at Town Meetings, attesting to the influence of landlords, many of whom are owner-occupants renting out one or two units.

A compromise Housing Review Board will come to a vote at Town Meeting this week. Proponents of this initiative believe the creation of the board with the authority to approve or reject rent increases on a case-by-case basis is a step towards equal housing opportunities for all.

Critics of this plan contend such practices translate to government control of private property; the Pioneer Valley Housing Association, a group made up of landlords, proposes a $200,000 a year subsidy program for low-income tenants, specifically for those who pay more than 35 percent of their income on housing costs.

A third item on the agenda asks the Planning Board to review town zoning maps and by-laws to see what changes could be made to allow more construction of rental housing in Amherst.

These steps that the town is taking are to be commended. Amherst benefits greatly from student business, and by taking steps to solve the housing shortage, the town is acknowledging the contribution we make to it.

Meanwhile, the state has a responsibility to ensure its students have access to proper housing. Building new facilities, despite the expense, should not be ruled out. Expanded bus service to outlying towns should be explored.

Another option that has been employed successfully in other college towns is cooperative living. Like fraternities or sororities, but without the pledge, cooperative houses instill in residents both a sense of community and interest in the upkeep of the house.

Students can help alter their reputation as risky tenants by acting appropriately in rental situations. A concerted effort by all parties involved — landlords, tenants, town and University officials — can alleviate the problem this community faces.

This is also an opportune time to boost student empowerment. Working within the political system, by supporting our peers at Town Meeting tonight, and by taking active interest in local affairs, students can assume a vital role in protecting our interests.

After all, it's in our interest.

Assessing conservative cause

Stephen Erickson

Although many self proclaimed political analysts hesitate to label themselves, they are often anxious to label and characterize others who view the world from different political perspectives then their own. Nowhere is this practice more common then when refering to conservatives, who are frequently portrayed as selfish, uncaring, warmongering, and even racist. In many ways this is reminiscent of McCarthyism, as liberals and socialists were accused of being Soviet Communists. In spite of such unfair characterizations conservatives have a world view as humanitarian as any other. Peace, prosperity, freedom and justice are the conservative's goals, although the assessments of, and means to solving, world problems may be quite different from that of leftist ideologies.

Almost certainly, Marxism is the challenging proposition of the twentieth century, whether it be redistributionist welfare state policies, Soviet Communism or something in between. Contemporary conservatism is primarily an attempt to hold the line against ideas rooted in Marxism, in favor of the more traditional concepts of the eighteenth century Enlightenment.

Poverty, tyranny, and disease have been the overiding themes in history, and indeed are still with us today. The plight of the Third World is nothing new. What is unique to the world, is that for the first time in the history of humankind, significant numbers of people (primarily in the Western world) live under a republican form of government largely free of economic want. This unprecedented development is a direct result of capitalist industrialization intertwined with the political/economic ideas of the Enlightenment.

Mechanization, instead of creating lower wages and unemployment as Marx predicted, increased productivity, thus forcing consumer prices down relative to wages and actually created wealth for an expanding world economy. The long term effect of what conservative Michael Noyak has termed "democratic capitalism" has been to create an average standard of living never before dreamed of.

Today, ideas that challenge the free enterprise system tend to be Marxist in nature. Strangely, without a single successful socialist model in the world, "intellectual" circles in the West consider Marxism a viable alternative. Redistributing wealth has never created more prosperity, but has only served to stagnate economies. The rising standard of living in the U.S. (including the lower classes) has been curbed, not improved since the U.S. government embarked on large scale social spending. Likewise, socialism has been an abysmal failure in the Third World. Capital investment is the only proven means to raise standards of living in the developing world (i.e. Taiwan and Singapore).

The Western world is also unique in that it is an island of democratic ideals in a sea of oppressive states. Whereas some of these are right wing governments, many are of a Marxist-Leninist nature. Right winggovernments have a tendency to turn to democracy (i.e. Brazil and Argentine), while Marxist-Leninist states never do. Led by the Soviet Union, these nations have plainly stated in both words and deeds that their chief object is to impose their totalitarian system on the world, thus threatening the future of both global human rights and prosperity. For this reason, Marxist-Leninism is the primary foreign policy concern of the conservative.

Hopefully, then, it can be seen that the conservative world view is a humanitarian one, concerned ultimately with the well being of the earth's people. Conservatives are not the selfish ogres they are portrayed to be. This realization is the first step to considering the conservative position objectively, and if one really cares about the future of humanity, the rational weighing of ideas ought to be one's goal.

Quotes presented in misleading way

Although I appreciate the Collegian's continuing effort to cover issues of human relations and in particular the talk on anti-Semitism I presented Sunday night at the Jewish Community of Amherst, I need to correct at least one quote from the Oct. 21 article that is inaccurate and inadvertently misleading.

The purpose of the talk was to describe the University's attempt to deal with anti-Semitism — in the context of addressing all forms of anti-social behavior — and to discuss not only the positive results of that effort, but some of the seemingly negative consequences as well. Among these are: (1) the rise in the number of reported incidents as victims are increasingly less likely to suffer in silence, and (2) the potential rise in the actual number of incidents as educational programming in the area of social issues always risks stimulating latent anti-social behavior.

It was in this context that I said "The more posters there are about Holocaust Memorial Week, the more likely we are to find a poster defaced with a swastika." Th s is very different than "For every poster we put up on anti-Semitism, somebody paints a swastika," the phrase attributed to me not only in the article, but repeated — completely out of context — in the shaded "Inside" box next to the article. The difference between these two statements is more than simply a difference in numbers.

Taj Mahal electrifies

Taj Mahal
Iron Horse Cafe
Northampton
Tuesday, Oct. 22

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

Taj mahal belted out his brand of blues to a sold-out crowd at the Iron Horse Cafe last night. he sang a combination of traditional blues, folk songs, and even a Jamaican tune.

Taj mahal, once a veterinary medicine major at UMass, electrified the audience with a blast of feeling in every song. As he wiggled his fingers across the keyboard of the piano, or up and down the guitar strings, he moved in time with his rhthym. His whole body shaked and his hips gyrated as the music took hold of him.

His songs and ecstatic feelings were transfered to the audience and they began to feel a little of his energy. He sang a jamaican song called "Johnny You're too Bad" where he got the audience to sing in the chorus. The crowed never actually sang words in teh songs, only phrases like "Whoooooah" or "Bop Bop de Bop". Even though they were singing nonsense, Mahal's energy made them sing loud and clear.

He also sang "Fishing Blues", "Walking Blues", and "Ain't Nobdody's Business But Your Own". He also dedicated a song to Elizabeth Cotten, who has had an important influence on his style. These songs were sung in Taj Mahal's usual abandon.

Concert Review

As he sings, he jerks his head back and forth as if in ecstasy with his eyes closed and a smile on his face. Taj Mahal and his guitar are in perfect harmony and move together.

Frank Christian opened up for Taj Mahal and was no amateur when it came to a guitar picking. On songs like "Brother Can You Spare A Dime" and "Big time Bob," Christian fiddled with those strings as well as some of the best folk-singers. He sangs a wide array of songs from love songs to a humorous tune about divorce. His voice was cool detached, if uninspired. His singing was a direct contrast to the emotionalism of Taj Mahal's blues.

'Coca-Cola Kid' is touching

THE COCA-COLA KID

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

The Coca-Cola Kid is inoffensively irreverent towards big business corporations and the people who run them. Eric Roberts is a Southern troubleshooter for Coca-Cola, who is sent to Australia to increase sales for the company there. He is beseiged by a sexy secretary (Greta Scacchi), a CIA employee, the local soft-drink baron who is competing with coke, and Australian culture.

The director, Dusan Makavejev, tries to satirize Coke, as well as various other corporations, but he portrays all their money-grubbing, amoral methods as cute. Roberts, as the biggest corporate buffoon of all, turns out to be a really nice, caring guy. For example, Greta Scacchi, who has been rebuffed by Roberts, tricks him into coming to her party and proceeds to humiliate him. As Scacchi fights with her former husband, Roberts slinks into Scacchi's daughter's room and, with tears dripping down his face, he tells him not to cry. This is one of the most touching scenes in the film, but it doesn't fit into Robert's character. He's supposed to be a macho, all-American capitalist, who thrives on money, not feelings. The last thing he should do is shed tears, or have any pangs of conscience; yet, eventually, he forsakes everything for love. A real macho capitalist wouldn't be caught dead in such a vulnerable situation.

Robert's character isn't as ruthless as he appears, but Scacchi's character acts and is sexy. Scacchi chases after Roberts for the entire film and it's difficult to understand how he could resist her for so long. She permeates erotic energy as she removes her shoes, crosses her legs, or bites her lip. Roberts drolly resists her advances and, until he gives in, the contrast between his sexual repression and her sexual expression is very funny.

Makavejev has made a clever comic film, not a satire, for a satire is much more ruthless. Roberts was supposed to represent Coca-Cola, as a major corporation, and how heartlessly it sought profits and sales.

'Silver Bullet' is off target

SILVER BULLET
Directed by Dino de Laurentis
Starring Gary Busey and Everett McGill and Corey Haim.
Mountain Farms Theaters

By HERB RAMY
and MATT MACHERA
Collegian Staff

To date, there has been no truly great movie made from a Stephen King novel. It could be argued that The Shining or possible Salem's Lot were good, but neither of these lived up to their potential. Sadly, we once again have only a mediocre offering in King's latest attempt Silver Bullet.

King has stated that the reason his novels have never translated well into movies is because he never wrote the screenplays. in Silver Bullet he was given his chance, but failed to produce.

The movies major flaw, was that it was a fairly simplistic werewolf saga. If nothing else, we have come to expect a degree of originality from King's works. This problem could probably be traced back to the fact that the movie was adapted from a novella instead of a full length novel.

As a result of this all of the movies characters lacked depth. Gary Busey was completely wasted as an alchoholic uncle talked into believing in werewolves by his niece and nephew. It was impossible to feel for him or any of the other characters because we don't know enough about them. Instead of us learning about these characters through their actions, we are simply told what they have done or are capable of doing. All we are left with is stereotypical, Hollywood, plastic figures.

The movies special effects were good, but unoriginal. They were nothing that we hadn't already seen in American Werewolf in London or The Howling.

Even with all these flaws, the movie was entertaining to some degree. If you're die hard Stephen King fan, then the movie is probably worth seeing. One can only hope that The Stand, King's next scheduled adaptation, is what we are all waiting for.

New movie is 'Roug-ish'

Insignificance
directed by Nicolas Roeg at the Academy of Music, Northampton

by BRADFORD VERTER
Collegian Staff

Nicholas Roeg's Insignificance treads the fine line between culture and kitsch. Involking pop figures of the fifties, this entertaining and well-constructed film makes powerful statements against nuclear expansion and the misuse of power.

The narrative takes place one night in New York. Albert Einstein (Michael Emil) is visited by a fan of his: Marilyn Monroe (Theresa Russell), who tries to seduce him. Meanwhile Senator Joe McCarthy (Tony Curtis!) attempts to coerce Einstein into testifing at a anti-communist hearing and Joe DiMaggio (Gary Busey) attempts to retrieve Monroe, his wife. At no point in the film are the personalities ever named, there is even a disclaimer. Yet their identities are obvious: pictures of Monroe are a recurrent motif and Einstein wears a Princeton sweatshirt.

While the film ostensibly deals with the conflicts that arise between the characters, it is more significantly about expolitation. A parallel is drawn between McCarthy's Red Hunts and Nazi persecution. At one point McCarthy uses the phrase, "the Jewish question." McCarthy is also tied to Nixon at one point when he begins an explanation, "Let me make this perfectly clear." Will Sampson, whom you remember from One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, points out America's assimilation of Indians. "We are all Americans," the once proud Cherokee says.

Most clearly depicted is misogynistic exploitation. Throughout the film we are led to leer at the lovely Theresa Russell. We watch her strip for drooling adolescents and lecherous producers. We see her Cubist calender pose in sleezy bars. And we hear her description of the filming of the scene in The Seven Year Itch, "I just spent the last four hours of my life getting my skirt blown up around my ears." When she demonstrates the Theory of Relativity to Einstein, she asks him to show her his legs as reward. This mixture of humor and pathos is charateristic of the film.

spent on construction of new housing in Amherst. This could help alleviate the rental housing shortage, he said, which is the cause of the town's high rents.

"The town should ask the University for land which could be used for new housing," Mosakowki said. "UMass has plenty of land which could be used."

While Mosakowski said he feels construction of new housing would help, he is proposing that the five-member rent board be created to alleviate the burden on tenants who cannot afford rent increases. In the last four years, rent increases have been between 7 and 102 percent, he said.

Jane Nevin, a PVHA spokeswoman, said subsidy is the best alternative because it would keep the housing market value high and would maintain the town's tax base.

"If a landlord can't make sufficient profits, he will cut costs," Nevin said. "The landlord would tend not to pay as much attention to the upkeep of the unit (and its value would decrease.)"

Mosakowski stresses his rent review proposal is different than existing systems of regulating rental costs, which are commonly known as rent control.

"As rent control is practiced in Brookline and Cambridge, it is not appropriate for use in Amherst," he said.

DUNCE!

Twenty-five million adult Americans are totally illiterate. Another 35,000,000 are functionally illiterate.

Is America creating a permanent underclass... an academic third world?

"Absolutely," answers Reginald Damerell, former professor of education at the University of Massachusetts in his new book, Education's Smoking Gun, which squarely places the blame on the teachers' colleges and graduate schools of education.

"This is a tough, no-holds barred attack on teachers' training that has departed from the fundamental importance of the 3 R's in favor of visual aids. When a nation such as this democracy permits its educational standards to decline because teachers are not adequately trained it is necessary for someone to cry: "Halt!"[1]

He contends that the introduction of black studies, ethnic studies, and bilingual programs have, in fact, harmed most, those whom they were designed to help—minorities. "He damns three practices he encountered while teaching: admittance of graduate students who have abysmal academic records in an effort to offer equal opportunity; the wide-spread attitude that the 3 R's do not come first in education, and the lack of 'a body of knowledge' in the education curriculum."[2]

"Strong stuff, this, written by one who came into education after a successful advertising career. Like many outsiders, he was appalled at the ignorant, narrow-minded illiterates who peopled the classes, administrations and faculties of far too many university education departments.... Damerell is sharp and informed, with little patience for the intellectual slums represented by education courses and the empty credentialism of the Ed. D."[3]

Education's Smoking Gun—"Passionate, lucid, a great polemic, the book belongs in every lively public affairs collection"[4]—read it today!

"More than $40,000 was spent on the word processors and printers," he said. "An ideal for us would be that the students are given the opportunity to buy the machines and take full responsibility for their warehousing and maintenance."

"You need to know how to use them because they are all around and you'll have an edge over others in the job market," Carole Sirois, a pre-HRTA major said.

In the class of 1989, 30 students will be asked to work in the labs next semester for four to six hours a week helping new students. In return, they will be allowed to use the word processors for their own purposes.

While most long distance telephone services charge for calls by the minute, UMATEL charges by the one-tenth of a minute. But because the system has not way of telling if a call has been answered or not, a customer may have to pay for a call that rings more than seven times, whether or not a connection was made.

The service, which began at the beginning of the semester, will be offered for the remainder of the school year as a trial service. Barbeau said the subscription rate will determine if the service will become permanent.

"We are learning and implementing as we go along," he said.

An authorization card and a code number, which is dialed before the long distance telephone number, will be given to students who fill out an application and pay a $50 deposit to the telecommunications office in room 602 in the Goodell library.

UM shows Harvard no mercy, 5-0

Women's soccer rolls, now 13-0

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE—There wasn't any chance of a Harvard upset over the top-ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team yesterday.

There wasn't anything the 20th ranked Crimson could do, even play on a smaller field, to stop the Minutewomen from rolling to their 13th straight win, 5-0.

The only ones that stopped the 13-0 Minutewomen were themselves. After a stellar first first, UMass was flat in the second period.

"It's tough to play up 5-0, I don't care how good your team is," UM coach Kalekeni Banda said. "They know that they can play better; I'm not going to dwell on it."

What UMass did do well was move the ball and score in the first half. "We forced them to make mistakes and finished (the plays) well," Banda said. The defense pressured the Crimson and made things happen as the first two goals were scored by fullbacks.

Defender Chris Schmitt scored the first goal, stealing the ball from a Crimson forward and firing a shot from 20 yards out past Harvard goalie Tracee Whitley, who gave up a career high five goals.

Sophomore back Debbie Belkin made it 2-0, taking a pass from Kristen Bowsher and sending a shot into the upper right side of the net. Sophomore forward Cathy Spence scored a pair of goals sandwiched around a Bowsher tally. Bowsher's goal was a great effort as she was knocked down by a Harvard defender while shooting, but managed to blast a line drive past Whitley.

"They had some sheer brilliant individual efforts," said Harvard coach Bob Scalise. "They have the most talent of any team I've seen. It would almost be a fluke if they didn't win the national championship."

The game was played on smaller, narrow Soldier's Field because "we just felt it would help us close the spaces. It's the home field advantage," Scalise said.

Narrow or not, the field didn't hamper UMass attack. UMass outshot Harvard (4-6-3) by a 15-3 margin and had a 12-0 corner kicks advantage. UMass snapped a twoo-year Harvard winning streak with the win.

"We worked the ball well in the first half," sophomore midfielder Carolyn Micheel said. "We played good team ball."

Field hockey wins another thriller, 1-0

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Welcome to the thriller express.

For the second time in two games, the fifth-ranked University of Massachusetts field hockey team scored in the final minute to salvage potential losses, further solidifying its position in the nation's top ten.

After playing the University of New Hampshire to a 2-2 tie on Saturday, the Minutewomen, 10-2-2, overcame a sluggish offensive performance in shaking off a pesky Dartmouth squad, 1-0, yesterday at NOPE.

The winning goal came with just 34 seconds remaining as junior forward Lisa Griswold scored her seventh goal of the season taking a feed from freshman forward Kathy DeAngelis and firing from the left side past Dartmouth goalkeeper Nicki Demakis.

"I was glad to get away with this game and the one against UNH," Hixon said. "Dartmouth has been a tough team against us.

"They always have good sticks, smack the ball hard and always seem to catch us in a transition game," she said. "They didn't play to our style."

Dartmouth, the defending Ivy League champions, came into the game as clear underdogs returning only six lettermen from last year's 7-7 team. Still, the Big Green hung tough as the UMass offense failed to capitalize on its opportunities. Despite being outshot 12-4 and outcornered 8-2, Dartmouth had to feel happy with the outcome of the first half as neither team scored.

"We had a lot of scoring opportunities," Hixon said. "I haven't the vaguest reason why, but we were unable to score today. Sometimes it just happens."

With senior All-America Megan Donnelly sitting on the bench resting after a week of play with the U.S. National Team, the Minutewomen came out in the second half looking for their missing offensive punch. Despite controlling the tempo and holding the ball in the Dartmouth end for nearly the entire half, the Minutewomen failed to tally as the offense continually lost its rhythm.

Ten minutes into the second half, Hixon looked to Donnelly for the missing UMass spark, sending the midfieldr along with sophomore forward Tonia Kennedy into the game.

"We had no real enthusiasm, we were definitely flat and needed a spark," Hixon said. We didn't move the ball well at all. We were passing the ball to Dartmouth more than to ourselves. Sometimes it's difficult to play hard against teams you expect to beat."

With twelve minutes remaining the Minutewomen caught fire unleashing seven corners and five free hits on Demakis before putting the ball past her in the final minute. The score was set up off a corner to junior forward Lil Hultin who deflected the ball to DeAngelis. DeAngelis then shovelled the ball to Griswold who put away the game winner.

Tournament hopes bleak

Men's soccer beaten by So. Conn, 2-0

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

Just one week ago the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team had high hopes of qualifying for the NCAA tournament. Since then, however, matters have changed greatly.

The Minutemen dropped their second of three contests yesterday, 2-0, to the top ranked Division II Southern Connecticut Owls in New Haven.

UMass is now 12-5 on the season and odds of the Minutemen being selected as the second New England team to the tournament over Boston University are remote at best. The nationally ranked University of Connecticut would be the first NE team.

The three main criteria in the selection process after overall record are head-to-head confrontations, record against New England teams, and record against other common opponents.

The Terriers beat the Minutemen 5-0 in an early season meeting. BU is 6-1 in the region, UMass is 4-2. BU played Southern to a 0-0 tie this season, so Massachusetts' loss yesterday could be considered strike three.

The Owls (12-1-1) were led by Juan Vargas who scored both of Southern's goals. SC's Gino Etifani was in goal for the shutout.

The Minutemen will try to get back on track against Boston College this Saturday on Boyden Field at 11 a.m.

UMass volleyball at Smith

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team will travel to Smith College tonight to renew their long-time rivalry with the Northampton school.

The Minutewomen are coming off of a first-ever win at the Delaware Tournament this past weekend. UMass is 25-4 on the season and eagerly awaiting the new Division II Northeast Poll. UMass was ranked second in the last poll, but could move up.

Tonight's match at Smith is at 7 p.m. The Minutewomen are then off until this weekend when they play in the New Haven Tournament.

Students Speak on Oppression

"BOYCOTT SOUTH AFRICA, NOT NICARAGUA!"

That was the cry of four representatives of the Student Political Organization from southern Africa and Nicaragua as they addressed students in the conference room at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst on October, 15. Their primary goal was to give students first hand accounts of the experiences and st- les they face in their countries.

Josh Nessen, a worker for the American Committee for Africa was the coordinator of the tour. He also was a graduate of Amherst College. Michael Thelwell, professor at the University of Massachusetts, was the moderator for this event. Their first speaker was Ms. Virginia Montoya. Through a translater, she told of her experiences before and after the revolution in Nicaragua. Directly effected by the revolution, she as well as other students lived in fear of a normal life. "Before the revolution, it was very dangerous to be young in Nicaragua, we couldn't study in peace, we couldn't live in peace, and we couldn't amuse ourselves as we wanted to be- use at various times in my country before the revolution, we were always living in a state of emergency."

Virginia spoke of the many deaths of innocent people in her country. The Counter Revolutionaries, also known as the Contra's, make life hard for the residents of Nicaragua. The Contras have destroyed many schools and daycare centers. The U.S. government, who is financing the counter revolution, declared an economic boycott on Nicaragua. This has just made life for the native Nicaraguans tougher.

Next to speak was Clair Monapi from Namibia, South Africa. She also was a student. There was a problem for her and her fellow classmates because there was an active military base 500 meters from their school. Students lives were always in jeopardy. They protested about the location of the base, and many, including Ms. Monapi, were arrested. She was jailed for six months, two of which were spent in solitary confinement. She was tortured, and treated very poorly. There was a desparate need for freedom in her country, because of her circumstances she was more determined to fight and protest when released from prison.

Ms. Monapi, with many others, fight for freedom in her country. It is the only thing that they can do to help. "It is a fact that we are not launching the entire struggle because we like war, we were forced to fight because peace and talk do not mean anything to the racist regime in South Africa." Nine years ago Ms. Monapi left South Africa. She hasn't seen her brothers, sisters, and mother since then. She fears for them and others living in South Africa because the economy is suffering. The help that they need is here in the United State. "As the name of the tour states, Boycott South Africa not Nicaragua."

Monica Nashandi was the next speaker. She and Ms. Monapi share in the battle against their country. She is also in exile. Ms. Nashandi is a member of the Southwest African Peoples Organization, otherwise known as Swapo. She also works in refugee camps in Angola. They fight many battles as a militarized country. They fight battles of both diplomatic and political natures. The South African people are trying to politically mobilize the youth, and educate them.

Roger Uriarte was the final participant of the tour to speak. He had been fighting in the mountains against the contras since 1984. He hates the revolution, and will do anything to end it and free his country. He feels that there is a great link between Nicaragua and Africa. He says to the South African Representatives, and to the american students, "We as young people make our own decisions, and for this reason, the young in Nicaragua and South Africa, and America could band together to overcome all of these struggles."

The four representatives all fight for the same thing: freedom of their controlled countries. As young educated citizens, freedom can be acheived, with a little help. This help can be acquired by american students taking an active stand. We can make ourselves heard by the government of the United States. We, as students, can help free these countries from their captors.

South Africa ...the struggle still goes on

by Hollis Cotton
Nummo Staff

A gang of youths overturn a delivery van prior to setting it afire yesterday morning in rioting which began after three teenagers were killed in the Athlone section of Cape Town by South African Police.

This year, during the struggle for freedom in South Africa and its neighboring country to the south west, Namibia, there have been countless riots in the black townships. Violent injury and death has become a way of life for black South Africans.

The white South African government, based in Pretoria, is opposed by the vast majority of the people of the country. The reasons for this are very simple-the government in power only represents slightly more than 15% of the entire population.

The Nationalist Party government, which came to power in 1948, and has remained in power ever since, installed the oppressive system of apartheid in its first year of operation. This system, which segregates people be race, has barely changed since that time.

The people who enforce the laws of apartheid are the South African police and militia force. A number of blacks are now on the police and militia. Theirs is a particularly deadly job. The black police are the ones specifically called upon to disperse public protest. Their orders are to do this by any means necessary. The South African police are known all over the world for brutality and excessive use of force.

The black police are perceived by the majority of the black community to be traitors, spys or stooges. Therefore, their lives are in even greater danger than that of the white officers. As targets of anger and frustration, their houses are being burned down.

One police officer, Michael Modisa, said: " They burned down my house. Our children can't go to school because they threaten to kidnap them." Modisa and other police live in fear.

In addition to police officers, others are used as spies in the black community and are paid off by the police. One incident stands out because it was reported on international television. It involved a young woman, Maki Skosansa, 24, who, while

A common expression is knee-jerk liberalism. This refers to a tendency among some people to take the liberal point of view on an issue without considering the issue first. Lately I ave seen many instances of knee-jerk conservatism. For example, the way many Republican Club members have been supporting the government of South Africa. You don't have to be a liberal or a Marxist to realize that the majority of South Africans are being asked to obey a government in which they are not represented. It is well know how many Americans felt about being ruled by a government in which they were not represented 200 years ago. Recent columns in the Collegian have attempted to discredit the ANC because of its violence and its acceptance of aid from the USSR. However, George Washington was engaged in violence and he accepted help from France. One can only imagine what Dow and Erickson would have written had th-y been around then. Perhaps Something like this:

"Many people are ignorantly supporting the French-sponsered terrorists. Sure we have problems, but we don't suffer from the tyranny of the French King. The french have the most reperessive society in history and they are bent on World domination. Benjamin Franklin's visit to Paris illustrates that the Continental Army is a tool of the French. Washington's troops have killed countless people.

We cannot solve problems through violence. The Brittish government sees the kneed for reform. So much progress has already been made. We must be patient, change never happens overnight."

What's happening to the Third World organizations on campus.? Does anyone care?

The Third World Recognized Student Organization's at the University of Massachusetts are facing massive budget cuts, and possible extinction. In the past five years these R.S.O's. have had their budgets cut in half or even more.

I belive this is a clear message from the Student Government Association, saying that Third World R.S.O's are not important. The SGA has been squeezing the life blood from Third World R.S.O.'s for too long. And it's time that we as Third World students stood up for our rights. All students pay the exact same student activity fee, and should have a say in how it is used.

There are ways of beating them at their own game. The most efficient way to gain control of our R.S.O's is through participation. I mean participate in these organizations, before there are no organizations left to participate in. Put to use the resources that our brothers and sisters have fought so hard for. Don't let their struggle go to waste. It's also important to participate in the SGA. (a large problem the Third World R.S.O.'s have with the SGA, is that they don't have enough people to represent them in the SGA.) This makes it very easy for the SGA to cut our budgets because we don't have adequate Black representative in the SGA to successfully oppose the budget cuts. The voices that we do have are quickly out voted. They need your support and mine.

We os students shouldn't turn our backs on these problems. Enough things are going on behind our backs already. Stand up! Don't be overlooked! Don't let them take what is rightfully ours! You wouldn't let someone take your gold chains, or money, so don't let them take our cultural centers, clubs or organizations. You paid for them; they're yours. Don't let them be taken away. Get involved and keep the things that were created for the Third World Students.

We as black people, we as non white people are being subjected to a slow process of brain damage. It is apparent to those of us who recognize this. For us who have not, then look closer at this brainwashing machine. I speak mainly of the use of the media as a form of imprinting damage to young non-white children. The new Saturday morning cartoons lead in the succesful method of making a child feel that the only people that are heroes is the white super hero they view through the media. The media has gone backward so much so that you can count the comerials on both hands and run out of fingers watching the blonde hair blue eyes on television. Equally disturbing is the the fact that movies such as Star Wars, a masterpiece in special effects, used a technique that was used in old films,that being Black representing evil and White representing good. I noticed that television portrayals of non-whites in American Society are still showing the passive side of non-whites and deletes the realities of being non-white. The media has successfully used all forms of protests to the point in which the general public looks at non-white protestors as advocates to violence. If we as a people are to be strong, we must take the time to watch what our children are watching and our young brothers and sisters who seemed to be going backwards in time, simply by hating their real hair and processing it or straightening it to get rid of their natural black beauty.

In closing, I'd like to add, while black people all over the world are fighting to gain self governing powers many of us who reside within the U.S. have forgotten what real beauty we do possess. If to you, you feel what I have written then dwell on this. The white world uses such hair products to get body, which we already have some of, maybe have too much body in our hair. There are products for tanning skin and we are tanned all year around. Products for making the torso look round and God knows we os a non-white people have plenty of "ASS." So, what is the answer of becoming ourselves? To me, it is simply having pride in being what you are.

Lynn Walker.

Dear Readers,

It has come to the attention of the Nummo News organization that our readers are not completely satisfied with this publication. For this we apologize. It would appear that there is a general misunderstanding held by the University of Massachusetts community and administration, that Nummo represents o radical and militant way of thinking. However, we would like to make it clear that this is not the case.

The word "Nummo", means the power of the written and spoken word. Nummo News was created as the result of an early 1970's struggle when a group of Black and Hispanic students took over the Massachusetts Daily Collegian office and demanded representation in the University paper.

Thus, Nummo News is the voice of the Third World community of the University of Massachusetts. It exists to provide this community with a channel of communication; a vehicle from which to disseminate ideas and a forum for the expression of our goals and acheivements.

Nummo attempts to provide its readers with an interpretation and analysis of the news that affects members of the Third World. Because it is not published daily and is not a newspaper in the coventional sense of the word, Nummo News does not provide an account of the days events, but tries to give an enlightened understanding of these events from the perspective of the Third World.

Although Nummo is printed from the perspective of the Third World community, it invites readership from the entire university community. It is our purpose to enlighten and to educate everyone. Nummo has an open editorial policy and welcomes your questions and comments.

The Dance and the Railroad

by Marion Tinsley

New World Theatre's production of "Dance and the Railroad" a play by David Henry Hwang, explores the struggle for dignity of two Chinese men. The Play is set during the Chinese railroad workers strike of 1867.

"Dance and the Railroad" was directed by Roberta Uno Thlwell, founder of the New World Theatre and faculty member of the theater department at the University of Massachusetts.

In the play, the two men, Lone and Ma, go through a series of revelations during their struggle to find themselves and the strength of their Chinese heritage.

The Character of Lone was portrayed by John Cruz, a native of Hawaii. Cruz is an actor, dancer, and a professional musician who performs in the local area.

Lone is a dignified, self-disciplined man who "who will not bend to the evils of the white devil." Lone goes to the top of a mountain daily where he performs a ritual of dances in order to discipline himself by connecting with the heritage of his people.

On the mountain, Lone tries to symbolize the differences between himself and the railroad workers. On top of the mountain Lone is his own man, he is obove everyone else. He is unlike the collies who slave all day working on the railroad dreaming of the riches they expect to save and send back to their families in China.

mountain Lone is able to clearly see these differences between himself and the workers. They believe in the American dream; the land of milk and honey. Lone feels that they try to achieve that dream through assimilation.

The character of Ma was portrayed by Victor Ho, a native of Hong Kong. Ho is a philosophy and religion major at Amherst College. Ma is a collie, who, like the other railroad workers, falls prey ta the American dream. Speaking about his character Ho says, " to me, Ma tries to be strong by hanging with the guys because in the guys he finds strength in himself. Ma really wants to rise above everyone else. Ma is an eighteen year old, insecure boy, and to mim Lone signigies strength and integrity to him Lone signifies strength and integrity which is what Ma is after. However, at the end, Ma finds out that Lone isn't really what he thought he was after all and in turn comes to terms with what his own life means."

Beth Nathanson, Administrator at the Fine Arts Center Office of Third World Programs, said, " this is one of the few contemporary plays of New World Theatre that deals with the relationship between two men. Through this play we try to educate the people by showing them what really happened during an historical event."

attending a public funeral, was fingered as a spy. She then was attacked by a mob which beat her with sticks and destroyed her clothes. Gasoline was doused on her and she was burned to death. A television crew recorded her death.

Incidents like this one are a result of widespread police brutality, including the use of whips, clubs and tear gas on men, women, and children alike. One particularly brutal section of the police force has been the Bureau of Special Services, or BOSS. Their special service has been to destroy all political resistance to the government. A large portion of the national budget is devoted to paying the police force, now numbering about 43,000. The force is evenly divided between whites and non-whites.

The possibility of violence escalates in a situation where there are few, if any, rules and regulations governing police conduct. The police have made their own judgement as to how to conduct themselves during civil disorder, and this has led to disaster. For example, recently in Capetown during a demonstration, whites were given 45 minutes to disperse coloreds 10, and the blacks, just two minutes.

Police brutality is not a new feature of South African life. In Sharpeville in 1960, the police shocked the world by brutally killing 67 blacks. They died when the police aimlessy shot into a crowd. In 1976, the South African police once again gained national attention when they killed a young revolutionary leader, Steven Biko. He was killed in his jail cell and the police tried, unsuccessfully, to cover it up as a suicide.

Unfortunately, situations like these illustrated will remain as they ore until apartheid is finally and completely destroyed.

Recruiting... UMass Goal

by Chris Brown

In recent years the Admissions office has initiated a number of programs in an effort to identify, enroll and serve minority students at the University of Massachusetts. Members of the admissions staff have visited all Massachusetts high schools with a significant minority population in both public and private schools throughout Worcester, Springfield, Holyoke, Chicopee, and Metropolitan Boston. Admission staff members also attend the National Scholarship Service fund for Negro Students (NSSFNS) fairs in Boston, Hartford, Philadelphia, New York, and Atlanta. At these sessions, more than three thousand 11th and 12th graders in each city talk with college admissions advisors.

Admissions later contacts these students with additional information.

The total number of minorities presently enrolled at UMass is not yet available, however, Timm Rinehart, Acting Admissions Director, did cite the statistics on the numbers of minority freshman enrolled.

The freshmen class has a minority population of 388 students. These students make up a 8.5 percent of the total freshmen class. Of these 388, 135 are Black, 6 Native Americans, 104 Asians, 122 Hispanics, 21 Cape Verdians, and 54 non-resident aliens.

Rinehart pointed out future objectives are to increase the enrollment of minorities that includes, stronger recruitment efforts among non-resident minorities and admission preference to talented minority students with a high consideration of them receiving maximum financial aid and marketing attention.

New World Theatre...a road to success

by Rhonda Swan
Nummo Staff

The mass communications system in America, both the news media and the entertainment industry, has been criticized for years for both their lack of representation and their misrepresentation of people of the Third World. In view of this situation, an organization here at the University of Massachusetts is making a concerted effort to bring about a change. This organization is the New World Theatre, founded six years ago by Mrs Roberta Uno Thelwell, a faculty member of the theater department.

"New World Theatre was faunded in order to present the theatrical works of Third World peoples as a major contribution to contemporary theater arts", said Thelwell in this season's brochure. In addition to her work with the theater, Mrs. Thelwell teaches a course at the university entitled, Theater of Third World Americans. Through her efforts she is determined to "highlight the theatrical works of Third World people" and to provide a "forum for the expression of our struggles, aspirations and dreams."

A program that has developed through the theater is the New World Theatre Ensemble. The ensemble is comprised of people from throughout the five-college area communities. The members include not only students, but also children and professors, who range in age from nine to sixty-one years old. The ensemble provides an excellent training ground for people interested in all aspects of stage production. Its members are expected to learn everything pertaining to theater work, acting, as well as backstage production. The ensemble also acts as an advisor to the theater management and participates in the decision making of the organization. Each semester, New World Theatre attempts to bring at least two original plays to the university, in addition to bringing several performing groups. The ensemble plays a role in deciding what performances and performers to sponsor. Last season the theater was one of the sponsors bringing the Negro Ensemble, the performers of the play "A Soldier's Story" to the Fine Arts Center.

The ensemble is truly representative of the Third World community with members of African, Asian, and Hispanic descent in addition to many others.

Bess Nathanson, an administrator in the Fine Arts Center Office of Third World Programs, the parent organization of New World Theatre, says that one of the problems of the organization is that not too many people are aware that it exists. However, the theater has had two success stories. Laura Carrington, a director with the theater in 1980, appeared as the blind lady in the musical video, "Hello", with Lionel Richie. Also, Lee Hammond, a 1985 UMASS graduate and previous student coordinator of the New World Theatre Ensemble appeared on the October 17th episode of the highly acclaimed "Cosby Show".

Ms. Nathanson said that the purpose of New World Theatre is to "bring multi-cultural theater to the community as well as the student body, and to present social and economic reality that isn't often done in mainstream theater." The three productions that the theater is presenting this semester will try to do just that. Just like the Big House

Everyone who knows Morris Day should realize that he has the potential to put out a great show at UMASS on October 24th. He has already proved that not only is he an actor, as shown in his performance in Purple Rain, but also that he can sing and he can dance.

Morris, alias ..." The Kid", gained national recognition when he almost took over the show in Purple Rain, the movie. The Time, Morris' group, seemed to have a lot going for them. They were a good group with a different sound. Their album, Ice Cream Castles went to the top of the chart in 1984. With songs like " Jungle Love " and " The Bird " which combined Morris' seductive voice with the fresh beat of the band, who could possibly resist?

Then just as it seemed like all was going smoothly the Time broke up. Now we can see the exceptional talent that was working together to make The Time such a success.

Jesse Johnson went solo. He is doing fine with his " Revue " and other positive releases. Jerome is contributing his "know how" in another group with a different sound, The Family.

And Morris. He went solo and he's got an album out, " The Color of Success ". He is keeping busy with his " Color of Success " tour and will be here at UMASS on the 24th of October. And this is one concert that is recommended. Y'all wanna learn o new dance? Are you qualified to learn one? Come see an exciting show, October 24th at the Fine Arts Center.

The Union Program Council in association with the Duke Ellington Committee proudly presents an evening with Morris Day with special guests Full Force and Lisa Lisa; on Thursday October 24th at 8:00 p.m. in the UMass Fine Arts Center. Tickets are $12.00 for UMass students and $14.00 general public, at Fine Arts Center box office, the Springfield Civic Center and all Datatix locations in Northampton.

N.S.B.E. holds career fair

The members of the National Society of Black Engineers (NSBE) are urging those students majoring in engineering, math, computer science, or other science related disciplines to attend their Second Annual Career Fair. More than 30 Companies will attend this career fair at the Campus Center Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts on Monday, October 28, 1985. The Career Fair is open to all Five College students. The participating corporate representatives are interested in talking with students about various career opportunities within their companies. In addition, many companies will have permanent, summer, or co-op job opportunities available.

Because of the under representation of Blacks and Hispanics in engineering and engineering related areas, companies are especially interested in students from these ethnic backgrounds. For this reason, the National Society of Black Engineers is sponsoring this event.

Second Annual Career Fair is part of an on going effort towards the goal of NSBE, which is to increase the number of minority technical professionals who will support each other and are committed to aid minority communities.

Many of the companies attending are involved in high technology production. Firms such as IBM, United Technologies, General Dynamics, GTE, Ford, and Texas Instruments lead the list of companies attending from across the country. Recruiters are looking for people interested in government defense and private sector related work. Although many firms are hard hit from the recent slump in the high technology market, those same firms are searching for more engineers to remain competitive among increasingly tightening competition. Also, the demand for engineers working in defense related industry remains strong.

Semi-formal business dress will be appropriate at the Career Fair. Also, don't forget to bring copies of your resumes along.

Jackie Robinson, Hank Aaron, Bob Gibson, Willie Mays. What two qualities do these men have in common? Firstly, all of them are Black. And secondly, each one of these men has been elected into The Baseball Hall of Fame.

Being elected into The Hall of Fame is not an easy task to be underestimated. Only the hardest working, the most talented, the best baseball players are honored to be voted into this prominent institution. Robinson, Aaron, Gibson, and Mays are just a few of the Black men who have received this recognition.

Jackie Robinson signed with the Brooklyn Dodgers in April 1947. He was the first Black player to play in major league baseball. At the end of his first year playing for the Dodgers, he had already received the famed "Rookie of the Year" Award. He played various positions in the infield, but focused on second base. Robinson played for the Dodgers for the next ten years, playing in several pennants and in one world championship. When he retired in 1957, he had a career batting average of .311.

Hank Aaron started his career with the Milwaukee (now Atlanta) Braves as a shortstop. He soon established himself as a good outfielder and an even better batter. Who said that Betty Crocker made a better batter anyways? Aaron was an exceptional batter and well-known for his ability to hit home runs. In April 1974, he broke the home run record of Babe Ruth when he smashed his 715th major league home run. By the time he retired he had led the Braves to two pennants and won the National Leagues Most Valuable Player Award.

Bob Gibson was a pitcher. He was not an average pitcher by far. He hurled his way to three complete game victories in the 1967 World Series. Gibson not only led the St. Louis Cardinals to triumph in this series, but he also was voted the outstanding player of the series. However, Gibson did not rest after these accomplishments. He went on to see the Cardinals to first place of the National League while also earning the MVP and Cy Young Awards.

Willie Mays, or "Amazing Mays", received a bonus of $5,000 when he joined the New York Giants in the early 1950's. By 1964, he was earning about twenty times that amount. He was brought up to the major leagues in 1951. That year he batted .274. But, the next year Mays was drafted into the Army. When he returned in 1954, he was batting .345. He had hit 41 home runs. And he helped bring the Giants to both a pennant and World Series victories. When he retried in 1973, he had quite an impressive record. He had won two MVP's, he had led both leagues with 40 stolen bases. He wos known to be one of the lifetime homerun leaders with 654 homeruns. and he left with a career batting average of .302.

'Star Wars' petition meets UMass

By ANITA ROYE
Collegian Correspondent

A petition calling for an academic boycott of the $2.5 billion "Star Wars" program proposed by President Reagan in 1983, has reached the University of Massachusetts and Amherst College.

The petition was started last June by David Wright, a post doctorate fellow of physics at UPenn, and Lisbeth Gronlund, a physics graduate student at UPenn, to show the public that the technical community is opposed to the program, and to raise issues on campuses.

The petition, which has been on campus since Oct. 16. stresses that funding for "Star Wars" will increase the nuclear arms control negotiations, Wright said.

The petition has been circulated around the nation to over 95 colleges and universities, and has been signed by over 1,300 professors and scientists, Wright said.

University physics Professor William J. Mullin said he felt the program is not feasible because the probability of securing a 100 percent effective nuclear shield is highly unlikely.

"This type of effort is destabilizing to the United States national defense," Mullin said. The program is a waste of money that could be used for more constructive purposes, and the petition would be stronger if it was solely distributed to those who would be eligible for the research funds, Mullin added.

Mullin said he felt the program "doesn't fit the role of an academic community," because secret research is not appropriate for a campus.

The petition is being received "just fine" in the physics department, and Mullin said he couldn't speculate yet to the actual number who would be signing the petition.

Amherst College physics professor Joel B. Gordon, said "The U.S. ought to do defensive research in a quiet and judicious manner."

"The program is too vocal, too expensive, and is contradictory to peace," he said.

Gordon, who signed the petition last week, said that Amherst College would not be eligible for funds from the "Stars Wars" program. Wright believes the "Star Wars" program is very dangerous and has been "sold to Americans on false pretense." A project of this sort needs to be 100 percent effective, which it is not, Wright said.

Wright, along with professors and scientists, is concerned what the effect of the program will be to the Soviet Union. Even if the U.S. had a 50 percent effective shield against nuclear weapons, the Soviet Union would double its arsenal to counter our efforts, Wright said.

While at the University, the petition will be distributed to chemistry, computer and information science and engineering departments.

Ice-cream co-op will not open

Blue Wall coffee shop would cause competition

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The proposed ice-cream cooperative, scheduled to occupy the space which formerly held University Records Unlimited, will not open at all because of a number of unforeseen complications, according to Robert E. Jenal, business manager of the Student Activities Office.

"We found that the coffee house operating in the Blue Wall is going to swith over from soft-serve ice cream to a more expanded ice cream service," Jenal said. The expansion would place the co-op in direct competition with the coffee house, he said. "We have had a lot of experience like this in the past. The Campus Center had lost $200,000 in student ventures in competitive businesses."

The Student Government Association did not want to invest any student money in the co-op because it had no guarantee of success, Jenal said.

"Renovating the space would cost between $3,000 and $10,000, depending on who you ask. There would have to be capital investments for tables," he said. The earliest estimate for the co-op to show a profit would be six months, until then the SGA would have to pay the salaries of co-op employees, he said.

The space where the co-op was to have been located is on the lower level of the Student Union, down the hall from the Hatch. From 1979 until spring 1984, it was occupied by Union Records Unlimited which sold records and tapes. The record store never opened in the fall semester of last year due to budget, personnel, and operating problems. At the time many registered student organizations were interested in the space, such as the Sporting goods and Bicycle co-ops, the Republican Club and Circuit Magazine.

The chairman of the Board of Governors, Alex Zucker said he agrees with Jenal over the reasons behind the co-ops termination, but he said he felt there was also a problem with commitment among those involved in converting the space.

"Over the summer the project stagnated," Zucker said. "Had it been more dynamic, had more work been done with a better base for competition, they might have had a chance (for SGA funding)."

The board will decide whether the next occupants of the space will be a new student operated business or an already existing business, Zucker said. "Most likely, we allocate to a group that already exists. Otherwise we'll have to wait longer before the space is filled," he said.

UN celebrates anniversary

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

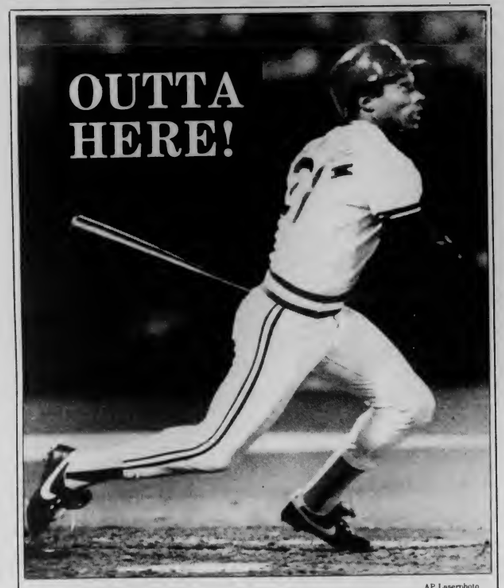
The United Nations which was created in an effort to achieve world peace and security is celebrating its 40th anniversary today.

The U.N. was formed as a result of 50 nations that opposed Germany, Italy and Japan on Oct. 24, 1945 shortly after the end of World War II in order to prevent another world conflict from happening again. It was not until Oct. 31, 1947 that the General Assembly declared October 24 as U.N. day.

"I think the best way to describe the U.N. is to say that it is a theatre . . ."
—James DerDarian

Even though it has grown to more than 150 members compared to its original 50, the role of the U.N. in world peace has been doubted.

The U.N. has founded such organizations as United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and United Nations Children Funds (UNCF) which works against world hunger.



"It is a pseudo-institution," said James Derdarian, an associate professor in the political science department. "I think that the best way to describe the U.N. is to say that it is a theatre. It is the center stage of world politics," he added.

Although DerDarian thinks that the U.N. has "no power" he does think that it opened up opportunities for the nations to unite on some level. "I think that it is good and it can give people the chance to get out their grievances on stage. It exposes people in the U.N. to cultural diversity," DerDarian said.

Luther Allen, a professor in the political science department, called the U.N. "a failure" in reference to its accomplishments, emphasizing the Iran/Iraq conflict and the U.N.'s failure to prevent it. In addition, Allen believes that the U.N. has potential. "It can be useful in the future. If there should be another middle east war, the U.N. would be helpful," Allen said. He added that it is an important organization, calling it "a place where representatives can be in contact with one another."

U.N. Day, which will be celebrated today at its headquarters in New York City and will include a ceremony where the president of the General Assembly and the Attorney General will speak. They are expected to announce the year of world peace for the coming year's goal.

UMass allows AIDS sufferers

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — University of Massachusetts generally will allow AIDS sufferers to work, study and teach on the 25,000-student campus under guidelines for dealing with the sidease that are still being drawn up, campus health officials say.

Meanwhile, an AIDS committee at Boston University is recommending that student who test positive for the AIDS virus, but who have no symptoms, should be allowed to continue normal campus life. Those with more advanced cases, including contagious skin lesions, will be asked to withdraw, said Boston University's medical director, Dr. Julius Taylor.

The University of Massachusetts' policy will include a provision barring Acquired Immune Deficiency Snydrome sufferers from campus if their behavior is considered a danger to others, Dr. Thomas McBride, medical director of University Health Services, said.

"If we had an outbread of some epidemic, a communicable disease, we might need to take precautions for that person," said David P. Kraft, executive director of the school's health services.

The virus, known as HTLV-III, destroys the body's ability to fight off other infections. The school policy also states that medical information obtained by the university on those with AIDS will remain confidential.

Duarte deals with kidnappers

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The government will free 22 jailed rebels and permit evacuatin of 96 wounded guerrillas inexchange for the kidnapped daughter of President Jose Napoleon Duarte, a friend, and 33 abducted municipal officials, Duarte's chief adviser said yesterday.

The deal could end more than six weeks of tension that nearly paralyzed the Salvadoran government while leaders negotiated with a little-known guerrilla group.

Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes said the exchange would take place "at a determined date" and would be private, according to an agreement with the rebels.

He said he expected Duarte's daughter, Ines Guadalupe Duarte Duran, 35, to join her family by Thursday morning, but gave no further timetable. He said her release would be the first step in the exchanges.

He indicated at a briefing at the Camino Real Hotel that the 22 jailed rebels had been taken out of prison or would be out almost immediately.

Alcohol abuses both genders

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Women who abuse alcohol have symptoms and problems with the drug which are special to their gender and aren't being addressed because experts fail to realize alcoholism affects women as much as it does men, according to a University of Massachusetts health educator.

A part of Alcohol Awareness Week, professor in the Division of Nursing and former director of The Women's Alcohol Treatment Program in Springfield, Nancy Fisk spoke to a group of women yesterday about how her experiences and research has shown her how "women are special" in regard to the issue of alcohol.

"We see experts saying that for every three men that are changing for women in many areas. We are beginning to close the gap between men and women who drink. The fact is that more and more women are choosing to drink," she said.

Fisk said women alcoholics have certain symptoms which are more prominent in women then in men. Factors in a women's life which make women more susceptible to the disease, include, low self-esteem, depression, heavy smoking, alcoholic parents, and rape and sexual abuse. According to Fisk, intermediate symptoms include, insomnia, a sense of inadequacy, using alcohol to ease pain or induce sleep, and a severe personality change.

"With women you see more poly-addictions (many addictions) to drugs in the Conference held here on industry

By EILLEN FRAZIER
Collegian Correspondent

A two day conference, hosted by University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph Duffey, begins today on "New England's Role on Enhancing America's Competitiveness."

The conference has been organized in reaction to a report by the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness submitted to President Reagan and Congress in January.

The report states that "the ability of American industry to compete against foreign competitors both at home and abroad . . . has declined over the past two decades." Chancellor Duffey said he feels it is necessary to assess the role we might play in the struggle for economic survival.

According to Jamie Chernoff, an associate to the Chancellor, Duffey wants to show that higher education is directly linked to industry by supplying the necessary tools for innovation and creativity in its work force.

"Presently, 90 percent of industry is technology intensive. The way in which we educate provides the skills needed for technological research and the application of it," said Chernoff, in reference to a letter written by the Chancellor. He also said that education permits technology to grow by using the latest training in teaching.

According to the commission's report, our country as a whole is declining its competitiveness which fell in the United States by 52 percent. The report also shows the reasons for its decline.

Presently, 70 percent of our nation's products face deficit. The over valued dollar, falling U.S. saving rates, and lagging research development spending were also proven to contribute to these results.

At the conference, there will be speakers addressing the topics, followed by roundtable discussions. "The speakers will focus on a certain aspect, and the other members will share their ideas, discuss possible actions, and how the said topic affects New England, if differently," Chernoff said.

Some of the key speakers are Kevin P. Phillips, author of Staying on Top: The Business for a National Industrial Strategy. D. Bruce Merrifield, of the U.S. Department of Commerce, Peter Behr, writer and editor for the Washington Post, and Alexander B. Trowbridge, president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

The 40 or so invited guests are opinion leaders, mainly from western Massachusetts and New England. They include chief executive officers from businesses in industry and faculty from schools such as Brandeis University and the University of Southern Maine. About 20 percent of the conference members are affiliated with the University of Massachusetts, mainly through the Economics and Management departments.

The conference, which is not open to the public, will adjourn at 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

SGA chairman receives overpay

Former treasurer illegally allows raise

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A Student Government Association committee chairman received $222.77 more in pay than his position's wage allocation last semester because the former SGA treasurer had illegally approved the increase, said a student official.

John Crowley, present governmental affairs chairman, was paid $785.57 for the spring 1985 semester, but was budgeted for $562.80 during the period, said Jordan Rosner, SGA budget committee chairman. Rosner said he was informed of the discrepancy by a source that he said wishes to remain anonymous.

For about 10 weeks, Crowley said he received 20 hours pay for 12 hour position, which Crowley said occurred after the treasurer John Mooradian "strongly suggested to do so, Crowley said, because the committee chairman job was anticipated to be a 25 to 40 hour position scheduled to work on many projects including several elections and referenda. Crowley was appointed in March after the previous chairman, Joel Rabinowitz, quit the job. Mooradian, who graduated last May, is presently in Europe and unavailable for comment.

"I was working 30 or 40 hours per week trying to get this (SGA) presidential election ready," Crowley said. "If he (Mooradian) thought there was any problems he would have stopped it the (increase)."

Since the former SGA treasurer suggested and approved the pay hike, and the treasurer has the payroll authority, Crowley said he didn't know any violation had occurred. "I had never been paid by the SGA before," he said. Also, Crowley said, every week's pay check was signed by former Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan.

SGA by-laws require that any pay rate increase proposal be submitted to the budget committee for approval, Rosner said. The request has to be presented on an authorized position list (APL) form, and be approved by Rosner, which never occurred.

"Any changes in the APL have to be brought to the budget committee," Rosner said. The fact that Mooradian approved of the increase, "doesn't make it right" he said.

"I think it's a disgusting breach of contract," said Autumn Maki, a senator who yesterday drafted a resolution demanding that Crowley pay the money back. Maki, who plans to submit the resolution for next week's senate meeting, said "he (Crowley) knows the system very well," and he shouldn't have taken advantage of the extra pay.

"Many, many co-ops and workshops could have used that money," Maki said. Maki is a member of the Governmental Affairs committee.

Crowley said that the disclosure of the overpayment was planned to be released today, because he is up for re-election to the governmental affairs chairmanship tonight. "This whole thing is political," he said.

Referendum seeks student approval

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate last night listened to presentations from professionals on the Student Activity Trust Fund payroll, in preparation for an Oct. 29 referendum on the issue.

The referendum will ask for student approval in raising the Student Activity Fee, which comprises the fund, $12 per year, per student, as a result of the fiscal crisis facing the Student Government Association.

"The most important thing is that students are funding these people to work for them and it is very important that they know and understand who these people are and what they do," said Dianne Rossi, SGA treasurer. Rossi organized the presentations after the senate members requested information on what professional staffers do within the SGA.

"Any student who comes in contact with these professionals knows the invaluable services they offer and we need for senators and other students to recognize these people too," Rossi said.

Eunice Konieczny, office manager of the senate, said she realized that the SGA budget committee was putting a squeeze on available funding, but she advised the senate not to sacrifice "any quality or commitment of prefessional staff."

Giving a brief description of her job, Konieczny said "I feel that you should still have a full-time person in the office." She said this even after disclosing that this was her last semester, so any possible cuts wouldn't affect her.

At the start of the meeting, the Rape Awareness Task Force presented a program titled Rape and Sexual Assault: Prevention and Treatment. The program is a joint project of the counselors and advocates at the Everywoman's Center, the department of public safety, and the University Health Services.

The two presentations ended at 10 p.m. and the senate passed a resolution 34-17 sponsored by the co-presidents Stacy Roth and Dani Burgess, urging all members of the University community to think of spending one week advocating a personal non-alcohol week honoring Alcohol Awareness Week.

Campus employees look toward unionization

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The only group of employees on campus not unionized probed union alternatives at a forum yesterday.

More than 150 members of the Professional Association of the University of Massachusetts met with representatives from the Massachusetts Teacher's Association (a union) and the Office and Professional Employees International Union.

The drive behind the forum, sponsored by the association, is the recent implementation of a controversial wage classification program. The Olney study, recommendations put into affect in July sets wage scales for the non-academic professionals.

"I'm here to state why we should unionize, and why we should chose MTA," said Dale Melcher, a women's studies staff assistant. "We need a legally binding contract which clarifies our position. The law gives us that right. We need a clear relationship with those who employ us."

Melcher said her dissatisfaction with the Olney program stems from the job classification descriptions which were not made available. "Pre-Olney, we had a chaotic system at best. Salaries varied for the most bizarre reasons. Post-Olney we have an autocratic, insulting and unrealistic system. We have no idea of what criteria they (the Olney program) used to evaluate our jobs."

A member of the Office and Professionals Employees International Union, Steve Hunt, said that with unions "employees will collectively and democratically have input in salary and working condition decisions."

Student believed to be carrying fake I.D.

An 18-year-old student was discovered with two different New Jersey licenses Tuesday night, neither of which are believed to be his, University of Massachusetts police said. He was stopped on the south side of John Quincy Adams Tower, when police realized he fit a description of one of a number of students who were allegedly on the roof of Berkshire Dining Commons, police said.

In other police reports:

A 1985 Renault received over $1000 in damages when the driver, a 20-year-old man, hit a traffic island and went off the road near the intersection of Governor's Drive and Commonwealth Avenue Saturday night, police said.

Poor visibility as a result of fog was the cause of the accident, police said.

A license plate was reportedly stolen Tuesday morning from a 1985 Volkswagen parked in lot 22, police said.

A wallet containing aboue $80 and identification cards was reported lost or stolen Tuesday afternoon from Dickinson House. It had been missing since Sunday, police said.

same depressant category for instance, being addicted to alcohol and valium at the same time," Fisk said.

Fisk said poly-addictions are "related to the fact that because when women come in with problems related to nerves and stress, doctors are apt to not take it as seriously and to disregard it as not being serious. They often think that what women need is just a little bit of sedation and do they prescribe the drugs."

Fisk went on to explain that a woman's body takes longer to metabolize alcohol, than does a man's and that metabolism rates vary with the menstrual cycle. She said that during the pre-menstrual and menstrual cycles it takes longer for alcohol to be burned off.

Due to the "puritanical" history of women and alcohol, and because of a stigma attached to alcoholism and women alcoholics in particular, makes it more difficult for women to come face to face with their problem, Fisk said. She added that our society sometimes views women who drink heavily as being "loose and cheap."

It is a lot harder for a woman to come forward and say, 'hey I'm an alcoholic and I need help,'" Fisk said.

The issue of alcohol education for women, Fisk said, is one women often have to deal with because "they are really the one's who are role-modeling what they do in life to their children. And the children will also look at (their mother) as a role model when it comes to alcohol."

'Eminent domain' upheld

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

Amherst Town Meeting voted last night to retain for the Board of Selectmen "eminent domain" authority for a parking lot behind Louis' Foods which it granted at the Fall 1984 Town Meeting.

Under eminent domain, the board has the right to acquire the privately-owned land on which the parking lot sits if they determine it the best interest of the town. The board was granted the authority because of a concern that the owner, Shawmut Bank of Hampshire County, would redevelop the land for another purpose. Town Meeting members said they now feel Shawmut Bank will not redevelop the parking lot, but many members would like to retain the land for a public parking lot or possible construction of a parking garage.

In the long debate which followed introduction of the article, many residents addressed the long-standing shortage of public parking in downtown Amherst.

We have an opportunity to acquire one of the few, if not the only lot of this size in the central business district—for a clear and present public need," Town Meeting member Rick Rice said.

Town Meeting members also voted to approve a request for re-zoning by Dr. Michael Katz for his land on Snell Street. Dr. Katz wishes to build an extension to the Snell Street structure which now houses his veterinary facility to make it "state of the art."

Arlene Arvakian, a client of Dr. Katz, said that she felt Dr. Katz was a unique veterniarian and should be allowed to expand.

"I never thought I'd be coming to speak on behalf of my dog," she said, "but I think Dr. Katz should be allowed to practice veterinary medicine the way he wants to."

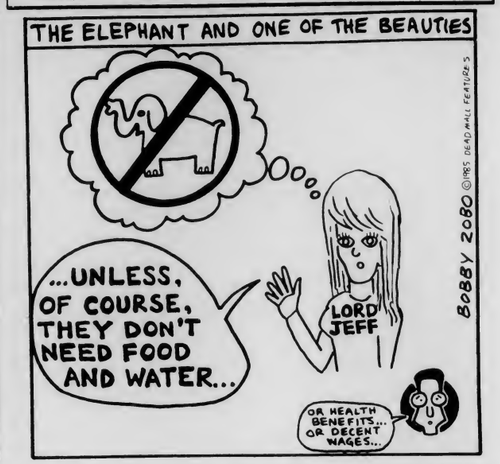
Support union workers

Ideally, the purpose of a union is to serve the needs of and provide adequate representation for its members, without having to call for a job action to achieve these goals.

Unfortunately for both the management and the employees of the Lord Jeffrey Inn, recent contract renewal negotiations have precipitated, in the eyes of the union, the possibility of a strike or similar job action when the current contract expires at midnight tonight.



The manager of the inn has stated that management prefers to negotiate with union members "face-to-face," and he declined to discuss the matter with a Collegian reporter. This is regrettable, as the press and the public are interested in the fate of the union and its members, but can only learn of management offers through union negotiators willing to discuss those offers.

According to union steward Edmund Patterson, management has proposed a new two-tier pay system, which the union believes will lower employee wages, and eventually, eliminate the union. Patterson has also said that inn management has proposed the suspension of health services benefits and the employees' right to set their schedules.

If what Patterson says is true, then the management of the Lord Jeffrey Inn, of which Amherst College has a 75 percent share, should be ashamed of itself. If the sole motivation for these proposals is fiscal difficulty, then the solution should emanate from sacrifices by those able to bear them—management and Amherst College. Obviously, union employees are least responsible for making financial sacrifices which will ultimately benefit Amherst College and not the union.

We urge all members of the community who care about the fate of the employees' union to offer their support to members by rallying with them at 10 a.m. Saturday on the Amherst Common, by not seeking interim scab employment at the inn during negotiations, and by respecting a picket line if that is necessary.

Afghanistan atrocities

Peter Dow

"Most people seem unaware that the Soviets are not simply occupying Afghanistan, but trying to wipe the Afghans off the face of the earth." This quote is from Robert Macauley, founder of Americares Foundation, a private organization established to transport medical supplies into Afghanistan. According to this foundation, more than one million Afghans have died since the Soviet invasion in 1979. Yet many leftists downgrade, even deny, the existence of these genocidal attacks upon an innocent country.

Indeed, one only had to witness last week's anti-communist rally sponsored by the UMass Republican Club. As various speakers documented the abuses and dangers of communism in an attempt to enlighten their fellow students, leftists in the crowd enjoyed turning the rally into a comedy show, complete with costumes and "I am a communist sympathizer" identification cards. I heard two long-haired types confidently proclaim that the situation in Afghanistan "isn't so bad" and that we (those protesting communism and the Soviet destruction of Afghanistan) were being "fooled by the western media which are controlled by multinational corporations." One finds such foolish statements humorous only until we remember the grave conditions which do, in fact, exist today in Afghanistan.

The uneducated claim that the situation "isn't so bad" obviously emanates from a level of ignorance. The Soviets have been, for six years, waging a war not simply against the armed Afghan resistance, but also against the Afghan people. Just a few examples are needed to illustrate this point. In 1983, Soviet troops killed at least 360 civilians in three villages near Kandahar; most were women, elderly, and children. The bodies of the dead were then doused with a chemical to hasten decomposition. In another village, Soviet troops arrested 40 peopel, tied them up and piled them like wood. Then gasoline was poured on the pile and they were burned alive. A deserter of the Soviet army said that the troops "were ordered that when we attack a village, not one person must be left alive to tell the tale . . . so women and children were locked in a room and grenades were thrown in." Various Soviet torture techniques are also prevalent; electric shocks, burnings, beatings, chemical baths, and teh smashing of hands and feet.

Indeed, the Soviets continue to brutalize Afghanistan; yet their attempts at demoralizing the guerillas have not succeeded. Thus the past few years have brought about a new Soviet strategy; the "scorched earth" war of attrition. Starvation is the new tool and the tactics include bombings fields just prior to harvesting and machine-gunning livestock. Immediately, one thinks of Stalin's man-made famine in the Ukraine in 1932-33, which killed at least five million citizens. We can only hope the West awakens itself in time to stop history from being repeated.

Likewise, the charge that we are being fooled by multinational-controlled media is preposterous. All reliable information (including the examples in this column) comes from human rights groups or medical reports. Just a few of these organizations are; Helsinki Watch, Americares, Aide Medicale Internationale, Medecins sans Frontieres, Medicins du Monde, and the Afghanistan Relief Committee. Ironically, the western media (particularly television) pay sickeningly little attention to the plight of the Afghan people.

The genocidal attacks of the Soviet army in Afghanistan indicate the true nature of the Soviet regime, and the misguided beliefs expressed by American leftists show their ignorance of the situation. Meanwhile, the world hardly notices Soviet atrocities. The United Nations, that fountain of hypocrisy, condemns South Africa, the United States, and Israel; yet protests against the Soviet Union go unheeded. When will the world recognize the agony of the Afghan people and assist them?

SATF worthwhile

Roth/Burgess

$1.6 million is certainly a huge sum of money. This is the amount of revenue generated annually for the Student Activities Trust Fund.

There is a proposal to raise the SATF from $44 per semester to $50 per semester. We want to shed some light on where all of this money goes and what it does for you. We also want you to vote to increase the SATF this Tuesday.

Our Student Government Association is one of the most powerful SGA's in the country. This is primarily because students decide what to do with the $1.6. We, as students, are able to direct our tax money where we see fit. It is no small feat to equitable allocate so much money and to simultaneously maintain fiscal accountability.

Our SGA, like the SATF, is enormous. The list of activities, services, and resources provided by the SATF is almost endless. To understand why the SATF needs to be increased, we must first try to understand the scope of the SGA/SATF. The SGA/SATF affects your life at UMass daily. Groups funded, both directly and indirectly by the SGA/SATF include the Chess Club, the Outing Club, the Union Video Center, the Hunger Task Force and WMUA—to name just a few. The SATF provides free legal advice, referral and/or representation via our Legal Services Office (we all know the cost of private attorneys).

Where else but at UMass can you ride so many buses on so many routes for free? The largest student run credit union is yet another aspect of our uniqueness. The Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy is an institutionalized mechanicism to research and advocate student issues. The off Campus Housing Office provides essentail services to students living off campus. Area governments make residential life much more enjoyable. The Office of Third World Affairs provides critical resources to our campus. Free films, lectures and concerts! All of this is provided to you by the Student Activities Trust Fund. The Spring Concerts, University Childcare, Students Advocating Financial Aid and the UMass Marching Band all receive monetary support from the SATF. Work such as the bill to get a student on the Board of Regents, the sexual harassment policy, the grandfather clause on the raising of the drinking bill, the academic grievance procedure, the saving of the sports teams, the Tuition Issues Project and much, much more are all supported by the SATF as well. Student Controlled Business such as the Ski Club, the Bike Coop, the Peoples Market, and the snack bars all receive support from the SATF. We can go on and on but hopefully the point is made.

Last year the SGA/SATF witnessed a severe financial crisis. The SATF has not been raised in six years, (we doubt that any other University fee can make the same statement!) and inflation, cost of living increases, salary adjustments and a new University Administrative charge of $80,000 known as full costing have created a situation where we are forced to expand and increase our fee.

We are probably the only governing body that is so democratic that there is a general election required to raise our tax. This can be suicidal though, because if we are unable to maintain fiscal solvency we are clearly inviting an administrative take-over.

The increase is small and justified. The benefits are enormous. Diversity is what make UMass so special. Students create and nurture that diversity. To be bored at UMass, one really has to try.

We invite challenges, questions and disagreements. But most importantly—VOTE! This Tuesday from 11 a.m. - 4 p.m. on the Campus Center Concourse.

Stacey Roth and Dani Burgess are SGA co-presidents.

Letters—Quotes out of context

With reference to the article "UMass women reflect on meeting" I would like to clarify some remarks attributed to me which were inaccurately reported.

That developing countries are facing a dilemma is obvious, but is it with regard to population-family planning policies that I made that my remark. Further, it is these policies that are influenced by international aid, especially bilateral aid. The quote about contraceptives, natural family planning, and abortions was intended to raise the issue of peoples' basic right to information about all methods and services of family planning and letting them decide what to do.

The comment about U.S. governments activities in the Third World should actually be—that USAID has backed a $22.8 million project in Bangladesh. As a part of the project, women were sterilized without being told that the operation was irreversible.

I feel this is not the first time that a speaker's remarks were quoted out of context. Also offensive was the fact that both my name and departmental affliation were inaccurate. Perhaps Collegian reporters need a crash course in writing and reporting accurately.

Aversion to cooperation

Rob Skelton

Happy United Nations Day? There is little unity at the U.N. other than a ganging-up of Third World and eastern-bloc countries against the United States, say some of our leaders, prompting them to dismiss such collective efforts, because they are not "in our interest." Actually, we need more mediative bodies, not less.

Today marks the fortieth year of the U.N. Created as a forum where member-states could meet to resolve common problems, and hosted by the newly-eminent United States, the U.N. embodied the hopes of a world weary of war and ready for a new age of diplomacy.

Over the years, many former colonial possessions gained independence and a vote in the U.N., and in various other one-country, one-vote bodies, such as the World Court and UNESCO—the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Work went on; but with the Reagan years the United States increasingly exercized its veto power, defending itself and its two pariah allies—South Africa and Israel—from the onslaught of anti-apartheid and anti-zionist sentiment which emerging countries directed our way.

U.S. discomfort in confronting much smaller states on a somewhat equal basis has resulted in our brushing aside the bodies which entitle those states to a disproportionate amount of influence in the world arena.

The World Court, which America has used to successfully settle international disputes such as fishing rights, was recently informed that the United States will no longer necessarily abide by its jurisdiction. The reason: the Court found that Nicaragua had a legitimate case against our country involving contra atrocities in the CIA-formulated war against the Sandinista government.

UNESCO, whose international programs benefited many in both the developed and underdeveloped world, has suffered the loss of America's contribution (25 percent of its budget) as politics punches yet another hole in the fabric of the world community.

The official reasoning for U.S. withdrawal from UNESCO: the group politicizes issues, is anti-American, and wastes money. More probable: the group became suspect for exploring the possibility of creating a new world information order, one which sought equitable distribution of world media resources, and one which undoubtable scared many countries who feared they might have something to lose in the deal.

Such selfish motives are but few. Restrictions on the nature of Third World development which first world dollars are aiding, such as what kind of birth control, medicine (illegal in USA, okay otherwise) and fertilizer manifests itself as racism, much like the grandfather clause hindered the political progress of the developing black peoples earlier in U.S. history.

President Reagan's belligerency towards everything adversarial is typical of him. America will have other concerns that extend beyond 1988, and for that we must reerect a framework of internationalism.

It may be convenient in the short run to disregard these bodies, or mislabel them 'counterproductive,' 'politicized,' or 'wasteful.' In the long run, however, we are going to need such institutions because they are the essence of our diverse but divisive world community that must coexist in order to exist.

Women's market value

Paul W. Kasman

The latest liberal fad sweeping the American landscape is "comparable worth." The idea is that jobs of equivalent workload and responsiblity should correlate to equivalent pay. That is, if a truck driver's job requires the same overall work as, say a laundress, they should be paid equally. Women's groups claim that jobs traditionally womens' are lower paying than comparable mens' jobs. They want the government to force comparable jobs to pay comparably.

There is no reason justifying the comparable worth concept. The marketplace sets wages for each occupation, something every engineering graduate could no doubt explain, as they are currently overvalued in the marketplace. People choose their own profession, and many factors other than pay figure into the decision. Arguing that jobs should pay according to the amount of 'work' involved is like arguing that food should be priced according to its nutritional content, books according to their lengths, or old masters according to the size of their canvasses. Athletes and rock stars certainly earn more than any comparable worth formula would suggest. Babe Ruth, when it was pointed out to him in 1929 that he was making more than the President, responded, "I had a better year than he did." There is no relevance at all in who 'worked' harder.

Somewhere an implied morla doctrine of 'fairness' has snuck its way into the issue. The Constitutions doesn't say anything about fairness, likely because it's such a loaded concept. Who's to determine what is fair? If the government is to set a fair price for a given job then why not set a fair price for bread, also? The reason is the free market. The free market is the closet thing on earth to the truth. Into a 'price' is factored all the facts, expectations, rumors, myths, and relevant history at the moment of pricing. As a commodities futures broker, I've seen many speculators lose their shirts for insisting that prices are 'too low' only to see them drop further, or 'too high' only to see them double from there.

While speculators are frequently wrong, the market is never wrong. In the long run, the free market is larger than any corporation or government—witness at—tempts at fixing the price of gold, pegging foreign exchange rates, or inflating the price of oil. These efforts, policy at one time or another of some of the most powerful governments, have all ended in what is effectively free market pricing. No one would argue whether the price of gold is 'fair' to jewelry buyers, or if the price of tulip bulbs was 'fair' to gardeners when a market panic sent the price skyrocketing. In fact, the only time a price is unfair is when it is made artificial and therefore does not reflect actual supply and demand.

This is precisely what the comparable worth advocates are attempting and this would result in a worse situation for the very people it is intended to help. If the market truly values women's work less, which is the underlying reason for a comparable worth policy, legislation would only serve to hurt women in the job market. For if employers must pay men and women equally, but value the men's work higher, they will hire only men.

Achieving that mentality

Ron Berutti

I was watching television the other night when my favorite commercial came on. "The coffee achievers," it said, were the backbone of a new generation. Being a coffee achiever for some time already, the commerical made me feel like I was part of this revolutionary coffee drinking generations.

It reaffirmed my belief that I wasn't a wimp like Robert Young or Lauren Bacall who eat quiche with their decaffeinated coffee. All of this, however, reminded me of the upcoming exam for which I would have to spend hours of studying.

After the commercial, I went to the bank and withdrew my final $23 so that I would have enough money to support my study habit. I walked back to campus where 15 minutes later, I reached my destination, the Newman Center, which was my destination. I really needed a pick-me-up when I got there, so I shelled out a dollar for two large coffees. Then I unpacked my notes and started to review them between gulps of my favorite hot beverage. After a few hours of trading long swallows of that wonderful java with occasional peeks at my miserable notes, I decided to call it quits for the evening. I bought one for the road and went home to bed.

My alarm went off at 7 a.m., only two hours after falling asleep. Dragging myself out of bed and into the shower, all I could think about was the smell of a fresh pot of coffee, ready to awaken me like a loyal servant.

I stumbled blindly to the Newman Center where I immediately purchased two large coffees. After swilling them down, I started to get the sense of being awake. I then purchases another cup for my trek to the Campus Center Coffee Shop where I would study for the next day's exam.

I labored hard at the Coffee Shop. At one point, however, I felt an incredible burst of energy, so I gathered my belongings and ran to the Newman Center where I would study until closing.

By 10 p.m., my eyeballs felt like pinballs, and my hands were trembling slightly. I hadn't had a cup of coffee in almost 15 minutes, so I decided to go get another cut to calm myself down.

I went to the counter and poured out a cup. Reaching into my pocket, I pulled out the necessary 45 cents and handed it to the cashier. I then went home, where five hours later, I fell asleep.

It was now the morning of the big exam. "At least three cups of coffee are necessary to wake me up for this exam," I thought to myself as I walked to the Newman Center. When I got there, I opened my wallet where, to my surprise, I found no money. I reached into my pockets for the necessary silver pieces—there were none to be found. Then I blacked out. Rumor has it that I fell to the floor and went into convulsive shock.

Only now do I realize that the reason I passed out was because I lacked sleep, due to my mind's preoccupation with my exam. That, coupled with the thought of not getting a cup of coffee to awaken me, ended up putting me out.

I am not doing what had to be done; I have stopped studying for exams. This whole episode proved to me that the only way to achieve, as the commerical said, was through coffee. The reason for this story was my hope that it will be instrumental in making you yet another member of the coffee achiever generation.

Comparable sexism

Lawrence Soucie

Last month the press reported that the First Lady had gone to Mexico to assess the earthquake damage and offer US aid. Now, I certainly have no objections to the President's wife representing the United States, but must she be referred to as the "First Lady?" Imagine that Geraldine Ferraro had been elected president, would the headline read "First Man John Zaccaro goes to Mexico to offer US aid?"

But this is really just semantics, and if that was all there was to sexism, we could probably live with it. But the real problem is the financial inequality that exists between the sexes. The National Organization of Women has reported that women earn on average 59 cents to the dollar that men receive. This is largely due to the fact that jobs traditionally held by women are lower paying than the jobs held by men, regardless of training or degree of difficulty. Right on this campus, for example, starting pay for a clerk is grade 4; for a janitor, grade 8. I don't need to tell you which sex dominates which job.

Conservatives might argue that a janitor has a harder job. Baloney. I know a grade clerk who coordinates hundreds of company recruiters from all over the country, and literally thousands of resumes from several hundred students seeking employment. Degree of difficulty? I don't mean to belittle the work of a janitor, but there isn't a lot involved with pushing a broom. To replace this grade 4 clerk would be a difficult task.

Not only is the job more difficult, but a clerical test must be passed before a clerk is hired. No test is required for janitors.

So what can we do now? President Reagan has been very successful in scaring the American public by saying that comparable worth, equal pay for jobs of comparable value, would require a huge federal bureaucracy. This is hardly the case. Negotiations for the new labor contract on campus will begin soon. At that time, representatives of the workers will sit down with the administration and try to work out a fairer job classification system. If negotiations like these take place at the local level throughout the nation for all federal and state workers, it would set the example for private industry to follow. There would be no need for a huge bureaucracy as the President has suggested. Rather, the issue would be negotiated at the local level with people who know what their own problems are.

Being an institution of higher learning and higher ideals, the University of Massachusetts should set the example statewide by beginning to implement a job classification system based not on tradition, but on degree of difficulty, training requirements, and most importantly, worth to the employer. We should all express our support for the union and make our desire known to the administration.

To be sure, there will be those whose view of the world is so narrow and whose fear of trying anything new so acute, that they will try to maintain the present system of unequal pay for as long as possible, just as those who sought to exploit slave labor for as long as possible. But we all have mothers, sisters, and other women that we love and respect very much, and I think that our love will eventually win out over our prejudices.

★union

Hunt said his union, a division of the AFL-CIO, had begun a drive to collect signatures for a union election. "As long as you don't have a union, nothing is negotiable. The University can do a Smith study or a Brown study, it won't matter."

The debate between the two unions centered around the issue of a bargaining unit which must be established before a union election. Members of the audience expressed concern about where the line between management and staff would be drawn. Hunt said he did not anticipate problems with the administration in determining management and non-management personnel. Melcher disagreed, saying that she believed determining a bargaining unit would be a lengthy process.

AMERICA'S COLLEGE RING™

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

First an apology to anyone who went to the Hatch last Thursday and found out that there was band playing. Sorry. This week there definitely is a jazz band there tonight and a rock band called the Steadys tomorrow night.

Tickets for the Ramones in the SUB are on sale. The SUB is really the definitive place to see them. And now for this week's excitement.

Tonight Morris Day and Full Force and Lisa Lisa will be playing the most show of this weeks' excitement. Location: Fine Arts Center. In another college town, Williamstown, the Band will be playing at Williams College. Peter, Paul and Mary will be playing at Bushnell Auditorium in Hartford.

Local Musician John Coster will have an album release party at Pearl Street tonight. Well actually, that's the John Coster Group to be more specific. The LLamas will be making their headlining debut at Sheehans also tonight.

Tomorrow night singer/guitarist Rory Block will be performing at the Iron Horse. The Motels will be at the Agora in Hartford and the Steadys will be at the Hatch.

The Hastfield Mall will be hosting two really great shows on Saturday and Sunday. I know it sounds weird but this Springfield Mall is presenting some of the best music available in the area. Saturday night there will be a gospel jubilee featuring the Macedonia Church of God in Christ Choir, Horace Clarence Boyer and the Year Of Jubilee, and Bishop Bryand Robinson Sr. The gospel jubilee that Professor Boyer has presented here at UMass is always really fun or shall we say, inspirational.

On Sunday, Taj Mahal, Phil Woods Quintet, Avery Sharpe Group and others will be playing there.

Back to Saturday. Paul Young and the Royal Family will be at the Fine Arts Center. Ex-Weaver Ronnie Gilbert will singing at Smith College in Sage Hall.

Did you know that Bruce Springsteen (aka. The Boss)'s latest single, "Goin' Down" is a rip off, perhaps unintentional, of a Richard and Linda Thompson song from about 10 years ago called "Hard Luck Stories?" The verses have exactly the same melody. Could it be the Boss is doing a little stealing? Of course it is a pretty obscure song, but one never knows.

On Sunday night the Cure will be playing at Smith College. It's kind of nice to get a new wave band with a real edge up here, although they are starting to mellow out a bit. All in all it should be kind of like last year's Psychedelic Furs show.

Greg Brown of the Prarie Home Companion and Austin City Limits' Nancy Griffith will be at the Iron Horse on Sunday. The amazing Bobs, stars of New Wave Accupella, will be there on Monday.

Guitarist Glenn Phillips will be at Pearl Street Wednesday night. I first heard him about five or six years ago and he is really good. His music used to sound like a combination of Quicksilver and Santana, all instrumentals, basically one of the last pure guitarists.

The Ramones will appear in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m., Nov. 1. Tix are available at Tickets Unlimited.

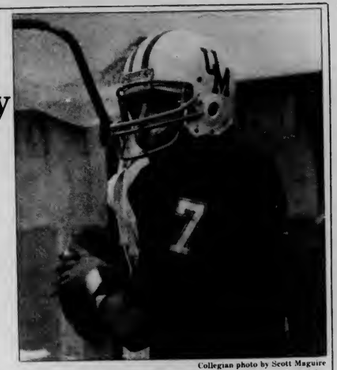
Injured players returning quickly for Minutemen

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Finally, University of Massachusetts football coach Bob Stull can smile when talking about his team's injury situation.

"We're getting some guys back and they're going to help a lot," said Stull yesterday. "We've got some big games coming up and we're going to need all of our depth."

UMass has nine starters miss at least one game this season. The Minutemen entered the season with solid depth, but soon found themselves scrambling to fill holes as the season progressed.



Going into Saturday's game against Boston University (Alumni Stadium at 1:30 p.m.), the Minutemen will be without only seven players, four of them starters when the season began.

Tight end Mike Kelley (separated shoulder) has been out from the beginning of the season, but may return in two weeks.

Defensive tackle Bruce Strange (knee) has missed five games and is also expected back soon. Linebacker Steve Silva (knee) has been out four weeks and may see action towards the end of the season.

Reserve linebacker Jim Vertucci (eye) is lost for at least three weeks.

On the plus side, UMass returns several players to action against the Terriers. Kickoff and punt return specialist Andrew Thomas will be back after missing three games with a pulled hamstring. Defensive tackle Eddie Sullivan is also expected back after missing the Maine game with an ankle injury. Cornerback Carlos Silva (ankle) dressed last week and is expected to play this week.

Quarterback Dave Palazzi has been involved in all but one of UMass' touchdowns this season, despite missing three games.

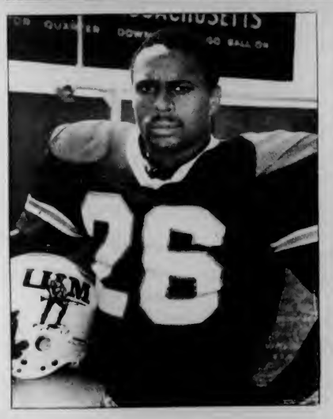
Minuteman mutterings: Freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi (another returnee from the injury list) has been in on all but one of the 13 touchdowns UMass has scored this season, despite missing three games. He has thrown for five touchdowns, ran for three and handed off for four others . . . with Palazzi in the game, UMass averages 24 points, without him the Minutemen score only 5.3 points all season . . . UMass has allowed only ten second quarter points all season (seven on a kickoff return) . . .the Minutemen have gained only 44 yards more than their opponents all season, despite an average of five minutes more of ball possession a game . . .the Minutemen have a plus three turnover ratio this season . . .Tom Cioppa is averaging 27.6 yards a reception and leads UMass with two touchdowns through the air.

UM volleyball defeats Smith, goes to 25-4

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team celebrated Smith College's final home match of the season by pounding the home team 15-7, 15-4 and 15-8 before a sparse crowd last night at Smith College.

It took just 50 minutes for the Minutewomen, 26-4, to dispose of the helpless Unicorns and if not for time outs and whistle-blowing officials interrupting play to make the appropriate calls, UMass could have been back on the road much sooner.



"I thought we could've been out of here in 15 minutes," University of Massachusetts head coach Elaine Sortino said. "Smith has a pretty good team but we just dominated them. This was the first time we've gone against a weaker opponent and dominated them the way we should."

Smith never had a chance. Throughout the match, the Minutewomen continually took advantage of giant holes in the Unicorn defense killing the ball with repeated cruelty. Utilizing the entire bench, Sortino took advantage of the UMass success in game one to rest the starters in game two.

Excitement as provided in the second when, after the Unicorns jumped out to a 1-0 lead, UMass caught fire, scoring the next 13 points in just over 5 minutes. Senior outside hitter Sally Maher electrified the bench pounding down six kills, sandwiched around a Michele Barys service ace, the first of which six-packed on embarrassed Unicorn.

"I was pleased with the match because it gave me a chance to play the bench, Sortino said. "They played well and held their composure."

Senior cornerback Duckworth Grange (above, returning an interception in Saturday's 20-7 victory over Maine) was moved to the defense after spending three years as a running back for the Minutemen.

This season, Grange is eighth on the team in tackles, has returned one of his two interceptions for a touchdown, has broken up six passes and has a running back sack. Grange, and safety Bob Shelmire, were both offensive players before being moved into the defensive backfield this season with great results as the UMass pass defense is among the nation's leaders in Division 1-AA.

Duckworth Grange:

Former running back starring on defense

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Duckworth Grange spent three years with the University of Massachusetts football team in total frustration.

Grange came to the Minutemen from Bloomfield (Conn) High School with great hopes. As the state champion in the 400 meter dash and solidly built at 5-10, 190 pounds, he naturally expected to contribute to UMass' football success.

But Grange became a forgotten man. He was spoken of highly as a great athlete with unlimited potential, but playing behind All-American Garry Pearson (UM's all-time leading rusher) and then George Barnwell (UM's third leading career rusher) he had few chances to show his stuff.

Grange carried the ball once in 1982, 58 times in 1983 (for 204 yeards) and 60 times (for 247 yards) in 1984. He also caught 14 passes for 88 yards in three years and ran back kickoffs (seven for 91 yards. In all, he ha 632 total yards in three years with no touchdowns. Not much for an athlete with "unlimited potential."

Finally, Grange was given his chance to shine for UMass. Not by carrying the ball . . but by stopping those who do.

Grange was converted into a cornerback in spring practice this season. Along with former fullback Bob Shelmire and scout team fullback John McKeown, Grange was shifted to defense and expected to contribute to unit that had given up a lot of yards in 1984, one of the many reasons UMass suffered through a 3-8 season.

"I just wanted to help out the team any way I could," said Grange. "Coach (Bob) Stull felt it would be as a defensive back, I think he made the right decision."

Grange has turned into one of the conference's best corners, intercepting two passes (including one for a touchdown in the season opener against Morgan State), making 32 tackles (eighth on the team), breaking up six passes (tied for first on the team) and making a running back sack. Against high-powered Rhode Island, Grange was isolated on All-American tight end Brian Forster and did a good job against him, holding him under 100 yards without a touchdown. UMass, now 4-3, and Grange are enjoying the change.

"He's such a good athlete we feel we can use him against the better players," said Stull. "He's strong and very quick, good attributes to have when playing in the secondary. I'm very confident having him back there for us."

The UMass defense, with an average of 8.8 points allowed per-game, leads Division 1-AA. They are also highly ranked in overall defense, passing defense and rushing defense, thanks in part to the play of Grange and the other two former offensive players.

"It's a matter of pride with us," said Grange. "We get upset when people score on us, we feel we can shut another team down every game. UMass hasn't had much to be happy the last few years as far as football goes and now that's changing. Personally, I'm feeling good about myself as a player and the role I'm playing. I knew I could contribute."

SI in town to shoot for Smith feature

Sports Illustrated will do a feature story on University of Massachusetts point guard Carl Smith in its annual Basketball Preview issue.

The magazine will be in Amherst to take pictures of the Minuteman captain for a story about how the 5-11 junior has won or tied several games in the last second in his career. Smith has been dubbed "The Final Minuteman" by SI. UMass opens its season on November 23 in the Cage against Merrimac College.

Senate back resolution on alcohol

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate, approving an alcohol-use resolution 34-17 Wednesday night, will lead in urging students not to consume alcohol next week.

The resolution states that individual student senators should "take the lead in this campaign for an overall more responsible attitude toward alcohol use." All members of the University community are urged by the decision to spend the week, starting yesterday and continuing through Halloween night, to at least think about their drinking habits, said Stacy Roth, campus co-president.

Roth, the resolution's co-sponsor, said "the purpose of the resolution is to promote individual thought and awareness about alcohol use." The awareness, she said, ranges from the amount a person consumes to the dangers of drinking and driving.

"It's (the resolution) presented in a very positive way because it leaves the individual to set their own priorities," Roth said. "It also brings the issue of alcohol use directly into the limelight."

Roth stressed the importance of giving more thought towards alcohol abuse, and emphasized that it's not necessary to go the entire week without drinking, but rather to open one's mind to the issue.

"If it prompts even one student to have a non-alcoholic beverage next to their keg on Saturday night," Roth said, "then every person at that party is going to think about it."

Wednesday night's opposition on the resolution came mostly from Senator Bill Collins. He said he feels the non-alcohol week will allow the campus administration to take advantage of the resolution and force further restrictions on alcohol consumption.

"We should fight the clampdown on alcohol use, not endorse non-alcoholic weeks," Collins said. Collins, the Southwest Area Government president, said his area's government "is fighting night and day for legal-age students to retain the right to drink alcohol in their homes and dorms. The SGA is hindering our efforts."

The resolution, Roth said, will help convince the administration that the students are aware of the issue.

"By passing a resolution like this and by having the students think about their alcohol use and the responsibility for their alcohol use," Roth said, "then we are on our own as a student body demonstrating to the administration that their strict alcohol policies on campus are not really necessary."

Roth said she plans to not drink this week "just to prove to myself that I don't need alcohol" to have a good time.

Two students interviewed on the Campus Center Concourse thinking is a start in the right direction."

"On having the Student Government Association promote this, it will give students the feeling that they are not alone in their recognition of this act," Landry said.

Rita Murphy, 22, a senior from Weymouth, said the senate should try to find out when alcohol will be served again on campus instead of endorsing this resolution.

"Given the fact that right now students can't drink on campus, I think the senate is being much too kind to the administration," Murphy said.

Training program starts

Unskilled workers to receive priority

NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Correspondent

Unskilled University of Massachusetts workers will be able to gain the knowledge and experience to become skilled craftsmen in a new program established by the University this week.

The program will be run jointly by UMass and local chapter 1776 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

"I'm very pleased that the union has had the confidence in the future and the vision to sponsor this program," Chancellor Joseph D. Duffy said. "I very much appreciate the union's leadership. I'm also delighted that it's another first for us."

The program, which has a provision that one-half of the apprentices will be women and minorities, will provide training for apprentices to become electricians, carpenters, and plumber/steamfitters. Current employees of the University have priority on bidding for the apprenticeship positions.

"The program will open up new opportunities for people working in the University to move up by learning a skilled trade," Duffy said.

The idea for an apprenticeship program has been talked about since 1970, but wasn't acted upon because "we had a kind of a stubborn management to push around," said Tony Grimalde, a former president of the union and present chief steward. The affirmative action requirement gave the program the extra boost it needed, he said.

"The program will open up new opportunities for people working in the University..."
—UMass Chancellor Joseph D. Duffy

The union brought forth the idea of an apprenticeship program in consultation with the U.S. Department of Labor.

Members of local 1776 will be given preference for the apprentice positions, but the program will recruit outside the union to fill the affirmative action requirement if it has to, Union President Jonathan Tuttle said. In that case, the affirmative action requirement would be dropped to 30 percent.

"Our first responsibility is to the employees we represent," he said.

In addition, there will be a Coordinator of Apprenticeships, whom Director of the Physical Plant Roger Cherewatti will appoint.

Funding for the apprenticeships will come from the University's regular appropriations. There will be "no additional appropriations for this program," said Jim Coopee, associate personnel director of the University. Instead, existing vacancies in the physical plant will be utilized. Apprentices will fill those vacancies, Coopee said.

There will be four apprenticeships, each with a starting salary of $245.95 a week.

"If the program is successful, it's our hope in the future to expand the number of apprentices and trades," Coopee said. "We are extremely excited about this program."

N.E.autumn

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

It's not just regional pride or an overactive imagination convincing you that autumn is most beautiful in New England.

"People come here because we have the best," says Francis Holmes, shade tree laboratory director at the University of Massachusetts.

Holmes, who works out of a white, clapboard building that resembles a summer cabin, should know. He's been studying trees for 36 years.

The great diversity of the trees' species is one of the factors that makes a New England autumn so spectacular, according to Holmes. The fall colors are varied and vivid, in contrast to other areas with climates conducive to fall foliage, such as the Netherlands, where Holmes has done extensive research.

"They have a cultural appreciation for uniformity," Holmes says. "They don't plant the species that turn red and gold and yellow."

And then there's the economic factor:

"They needed to get lumber, and they planted what would grow well."

But trees growing in a mixed environment tend to be healthier, according to Holmes. If a disease breaks out, it is usually limited to one kind of tree. Thus, an entire forest will not be killed by Dutch elm disease, for example.

"In our wild mixture, we have a great advantage," Holmes says.

Another advantage is the layout of the land in New England. The hilly terrain simply offers a better view of the fall colors, particularly in and around the Berkshire Mountains.

Surprisingly, the weather does not effect fall foliage, except for "driving rain or gusty wind," which may knock some leaves to the ground prematurely. Hurricane Gloria arrived to early in the season to do significant damage to the fall foliage.

School system approves policy on AIDS victims

PLYMOUTH (AP)—The Plymouth-Carver Regional School Committee has approved a complex policy on students afflicted with AIDS, requiring a school principal to tell all parents of other children at the school about the case.

The policy was approved unanimously by the board Wednesday night to cover students and adults who have AIDS or have been exposed to the virus which causes it, The Enterprise of Brockton reported.

When a youngster or adult has been diagnosed as having the ailment or has been exposed to it, the principal must send him home or to isolation at the school nurse's office.

Readmission will come only with the written recommendation of a doctor.

"The school system will be supportive of children or staff diagnosed as having AIDS to the extent possible by providing proper resources," said Dean Koulouris, special education administrator, who drafted the policy.

"We will also provide ongoing medical and related information to all the school community about AIDS as that knowledge becomes available," he added.

On individual privacy, Koulouris's policy said parents of students in "self-contained classes" have a right to know that an individual with AIDS or AIDS exposure is attending classes with their children.

The victim's right to confidentiality must be "weighed against the rights of children and staff members to know of an imminent or probable health risk," the policy said.

The illness, acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is a virus-caused ailment which attacks the body's ability to fight infections. There is no known cure.

The policy will affect 8,000 students at Plymouth-Carver Regional High School, Plymouth-Carver Intermediate School and nine elementary schools in Plymouth.

In cases where school officials and the doctor disagree over a proposed return to school, the issue will go to the Department of Public Health for review.

Like the state policy, the Koulouris version said students will be prevented from attending school if they have skin eruptions or weeping lesions. They will also be barred if they show signs of "exhibiting inappropriate behavior—biting, or frequent incontinence, for example—that increase the likelihood of transmission."

Star Wars gets $2.5 billion defense budget in House

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House Appropriations Committee voted yesterday to spend $2.5 billion this year for "Star Wars" research and rejected a proposal to cut deeper into President Reagan's plan to find a high-tech shield against Soviet nuclear missiles.

The decision came as the panel worked its way through a huge bill appropriating money for the Defense Department for the current fiscal year. The bill contains most of the proposed $292 billion Pentagon budget.

Still awaiting final House approval is a separate measure authorizing the Pentagon to spend $302.5 billion this year. The appropriation measure is smaller because the authorizing bill includes some projects which would be paid for in later years.

The appropriations defense subcommittee had proposed spending $2.5 billion this year for the Strategic Defense Initiative, the formal name of Reagan's program, instead of the $2.75 billion in the authorization bill. Reagan sought $3.7 billion for the program compared to $1.4 billion in the last fiscal year.

Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., moved yesterday to cut the Star Wars appropriation to $2.1 billion, telling his colleagues that "we need to bring Star Wars down to earth."

But the committee rejected his proposal, 31-23, and thus accepted the $2.5 billion total.

Night escort service ensures student's safety

BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Working towards making the University of Massachusetts a safer place to walk at night, the on-campus Student Security office offers an escort service for students who don't want to walk alone in the dark.

Carol Radzic of student security, a division of the Department of Public Safety, said "the service was set up to help students feel safe when they walk on campus at night", adding that many students will feel safer if they are escorted to their destination instead of walking alone.

"Most of the students who use the service are either returning from the library, or going from one dorm to another," Radzic said, explaining that the students simply call the security office and an escort will meet them where ever they are on campus.

The service runs 8 p.m. to 2:30 a.m. daily and escorts people to on-campus locations only, Radzic said.

"The escorting is done totally by foot, and the escorts are easily identified by their security hats and badges," she said.

The service began two years ago on a volunteer basis through the Student Government Association. However, Radzic said, it usually took a few months to get the service underway each year. "The service was moved to this office because we can make it a permanent service, with paid positions for the escorts," she said.

Peace supporters to rally,walk

NORTHAMPTON—Between 75 and 100 people will gather at the Unitarian Society Meeting House tomorrow before beginning a 10-kilometer walk for peace down Main Street.

The American Friends Service Committee and the Disarmament Working Group will sponsor the event, which is taking the place of the "freeze walk" the groups have sponsored the last two years.

"The walk should raise $5,000 for educational programs including films, videos and lectures that raise awareness of issues facing people people worldwide (such as apartheid and hunger relief)," said Rachel King, one of the 30 volunteers working at the disarmament group's Northampton office.

Balloons, banners and a rally involving singing and chanting are among the pre-walk activities in the center of Northampton.

"Media coverage, including an interview on (radio station) WHMP afterwards should earn the recognition that will make the event possible in the future," King said.

The small, local peace movements, sponsoring walks such as the one taking place tomorrow, are more active than the national campaigns, she said.

"The freeze campaign, which now has international headquarters in Washington, has lost its focus and is no longer an active working group," King said. "A campaign must work in small towns avoiding national bureaucracy in order to have a clear focus."

She said she hopes that the focus of the peace walk is clear to people participating in and witnessing the rally.

Polish poet, Harvard prof. speak today

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

Polish poet Czeslaw Milosz, who won the 1981 Nobel Prize in Literature, will engage in a dialogue with Harvard University professor of divinity Harvey Cox at 4 p.m. today in Memorial Hall.

Milosz has been in voluntary exile from Poland since 1951 and is now a professor of Slavic languages and literature at the University of California at Berkeley.

"He has written on the fine arts and literature and the history of Polish literature," said Marilyn Nelson, assistant professor of Russian and Polish languages at the University of Massachusetts. "He's very much a world intellectual and addresses arts and literature as a world phenomenon."

Milosz'z 1981 Nobel Prize citation states "He is an exiled writer, a stranger for whom physical exile is really a reflection of a metaphysical, or even religious, spiritual exile applying to humanity in general."

The poet worked for the Polish Resistance in Warsaw during World War II and has written several books including, The Captive Mind, Bells in Winter and The Issa Valley.

Cox, a noted theologian currently on sabbatical from Harvard University, has been noted for the development of his secular-political theology that integrates Christianity with the modern society.

"He's one who tries to practice what he preaches," Nelson said. For seven years Cox and his family lived in Roxbury, a ghetto of Boston, to personally confront the problems of the black community. He has also lived without modern conveniences such as the telephone, television and automobile as an experiment in simpler living.

Cox is the author of The Secular City, The Seduction of the Spirit and Turning East.

Corvette damaged in collision

A 1980 Corvette received over $3000 in damages when it hit a traffic sign Wednesday night at the intersection of Commonwealth Avenue and Governor's Drive, University of Massachusetts police said.

The sign was valued at $150. The driver, a 22-year-old student, was cited for speeding, police said.

In other police reports:

• A 1978 Toyota received $200 in damages when it was hit by a 1979 Toyota Wednesday morning, police said.

The driver of the 1979 Toyota was a 22-year-old woman who had missed the entrance to a parking lot, was backing up down the street and hit the other car, which was driven by a 22-year-old man. The woman was cited for failure to use care in backing, police said.

• A 30-year-old man was arrested on University Drive Wednesday afternoon, for having an expired license and speeding, police said.

• A 1974 Cheverolet was reported vandalized in parking lot 22 Wednesday evening. An officer discovered the car earlier in the day but the owner could not be contacted. It was reported by the owner later, police said.

• A 10-speed bicycle valued at $80 was reported stolen Wednesday afternoon from a bike rack outside the Lederle Graduate Research Center. The bicycle was not locked and was stolen on Oct. 8, police said.

• The windows in the parking booth in lot 62 were reported broken Wednesday morning. Estimated damage was $60, police said.

• A pizza valued at $6.50 was stolen Wednesday night from a car parked on Sunset Avenue outside of Patterson House. A College Pizza delivery person was in the dormitory delivering other pizzas. He left his car unlocked, and returned to find the pizza stolen, police said.

Botha lifts crisis status in six districts

JOHHANESBURG, South Africa (AP)—President P.W. Botha yesterday lifted a three-month-old state of emergency in six districts but left it in effect in 30 other areas, including cities in Cape province where four people died today in racial unrest.

The state of emergency was still being enforced in the major centers of Johannesburg and its industrial suburbs.

In a statement from Pretoria, Botha said, "Conditions in some of the affected magisterial districts have improved to the extent that the government has decided to lift the state of emergency in those districts."

The six areas—Hankey, Balfour, Alexandria, Humansdorp, Steytlerville and Westonaria—are small towns in rural areas of the eastern Cape province and Transvaal province.

"The lifting of the state of emergency in these areas is proof to the effectiveness of these measures in ensuring a return to stability in these areas," Botha said.

The state of emergency took effect July 21 and gave police broad powers to detain suspects without charges and without access to lawyers. The white-minority government said the measure was necessary to end anti-apartheid rioting that had resulted in hundreds of deaths since September 1984.

Under apartheid, some 5 million whites dominate and deny the vote to about 24 million blacks.

House passes no smoking bill

BOSTON (AP)—A bill that would ban or restrict tobacco smoking in restaurants and many other public places has moved a step closer to becoming law.

The Massachusetts House voted 110-38 on Wednesday in favor of the "Clean Indoor Act" and sent it to the Senate. There was little of the drama associated with the issue when it came for a crucial test vote two weeks ago.

With little debate, the House rejected an amendment offered by Rep. Charles Mann, R-Hanson, that would have make smoking bans subject to approval by each city and town.

Anti-smoking forces argued that the amendment would effectively destroy the proposal, since communities already have the power to impose local smoking bans but many have not.

As passed by the House, the bill would ban lighted cigarettes, cigars and pipes in public elevator, food stores, mass transit, courtrooms and government meetings.

It would also ban smoking—except in designated areas—in courthouses, schools and colleges, museums, libraries, trains, airpor terminals, hospital lobbies, bingo parlors and govenment buildings.

It would also require spacial seating secitons for smokers in restaurants with more than 75 seats.

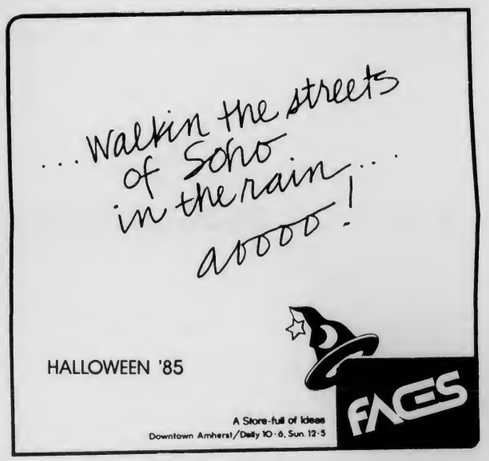
length," Holmes explains, which is why trees in the north turn colors before their more southernly counterparts—they're farther from the equator, and the days become shorter, sooner.

Some of the brilliant yellows associated with autumn are always present in the leaves, although "the chlorophyll, which is green, is so powerful that it overpowers the others," Holmes sayes. When production of chlorophyll ceases in late summer, the green diminishes.

"Carotene, as you might guess from the word, gives you a yellow color," Holmes sayes. Xanthophylls is another yellow pigment. Birch, elm, and sycamore trees are among those that turn yellow in the fall.

"A combination of these yellow pigments plus a brown color—perhaps a tannin—gives the gold color. Gold is characteristic of beech and sugar maples. The combination, and the precise shade, varies from tree to tree," according to a classroom articele written by Holmes.



The red and purple colors that appear on red maples, red oaks, and dogwoods are due to pigments—anthocyanins—that are produced at the onset of autumn. Cool temperatures aid in the synthesis of such pigments.

"Early fall color is not something to be happy about," says Holmes. A tree whose leaves begin turning in late August, for example, may be exhibiting a symptom that merits "looking into."

Holmes' advice to the fall foliage fan?

"The thing to do is to go out and enjoy it, and not think about one chemical, or the dropping of an electron," he says. "If you think about that too much, then you're not enjoying how pretty it is."

Amherst may face deficit

By DONNA HENRY
Collegian Correspondent

The Town of Amherst may be faced with a $450,000 deficit for the fiscal year 1987, which begins in July.

James Lindstrom, director of administration and finance for the town, warned the '87 fiscal year may prove to be difficult if the current pattern of spending and revenues persists.

"Projected expenditures are based on spending patterns for the last few years which have approximated a 10 percent increase annually," Lindstrom said. The increase in spending has been a result of both expansion and inflation, he said.

Although projected deficits have occured in the past, Lindstrom said that his would be the first actual deficit the town would experience.

Amherst has $4.5 million in surplus funds. One million dollars of that fund is encumbered for major captial expansion projects, such as a new police station and a new town recreation center. More than $3 million are considered in free cash and about $300,000 in federal revenue sharing.

Lindstrom said the town has three options to solve the budget problem:

- try to keep spending closer to seven percent than 10 percent
- take a closer look at the property levy, which has remained at the same level for the past five to six years
- lobby the state legislature to insure that an adequate amount of state aid will be distributed in a manner that does not penalize the town

However, there are certain expenditures which the town considers priorities, including the school budget, Lindstrom said.

Symposium at Mt. Holyoke

In anticipation of its 150th anniversary in 1987, Mount Holyoke College will hold a symposium this weekend on the present and future roles of women's education.

The symposium, "Creativity and Criticism in Women's Education", will draw scholars from across the U.S. to question and share ideas on the roles of art, philosophy and critical thinking in the education of women.

The keynote speaker of the event, which will take place today and tomorrow, will be Elisabeth Young-Bruehl, of Wesleyan University, who will address the strengths and limitations of western thought in her talk, "The Education of Woman as Philosopher" today at 8:00 p.m.

Other sessions scheduled include Women's Relation to Established Knowledge, featuring Myra Jehlen, State University of New York at Purchase, and Ann Ferguson, University of Massachusetts, who will both present papers at 10:00 a.m. today.

Session two, The Point of Women's Education: Accommodation, Contemplation of Criticism which will take place 2:00 p.m., will have a panel of guest speakers from various colleges.

Tomorrow will hold sessions four and five, The Education of Woman as Artist and Visions of a New Future: The Next 150 Years respectively. One of the scheduled speakers will be Ruth Schmidt, president of Agnes Scott College.

All sessions are open to the public and take place in Hooker Auditorium on the Mount Holyoke campus.

Chancellor's inconsistency

It's no secret. Campus bars are dry, and it is not our fault. On Aug. 1, the University lost its liquor liability insurance, the coverage that protects the school from paying large amounts of money if sued for serving alcohol to someone who later is injured or causes an accident.

The secret is, the alcohol is still flowing on campus. But, it is not coming out of Blue Wall taps, or TOC glasses. There is no money changing hands either.

It is happening behind closed doors, against Chancellor Joseph Duffey's policy directive. Yet, Duffey is the worst offender.

And after it was discovered he served the sauce at a trustees gathering in Memorial Hall last month, he was asked about the inconsistency between his summer directive ordering the campus dry and offering the alcohol on campus. He shrugged and said he thinks he is clean.

"If I write a policy," he said, "then don't I have a right to break it?"

If he was talking about rights, then he is correct. There is nothing illegal about serving the trustees. But there are two other issues the chancellor seems to be taking lightly.

The first is the question of liability. If Duffey offers the alcohol and something does happen, is the University liable? If so, losing a lawsuit and not having adequate insurance to cover the settlement spells trouble, considering trends show the costs of liquor lawsuit awards are skyrocketing.

One attorney, who asked not be identified, said if he were representing a client in a liquor liability case involving the University, he would sue Duffey and the school and then leave it up to the jury to decide who exactly is liable. The way things are going with liability settlements these days, that would probably mean a huge court bill for the University.

The second question is one of ethics. Doesn't Duffey see anything ethically wrong with serving the alcohol on campus to the trustees when students, faculty and employees are forced to leave campus for a beer or a mixed drink?

Come now, chancellor, we are all adults. But, apparently we are beneath you. You may serve alcohol on campus, yet we may not buy, let alone bring any alcohol with us, for example, to the TOC.

The principle of noblesse oblige, chancellor, does not apply in this country.

When the chancellor was confronted with the ethical question, he said he saw nothing wrong with what he was doing. When asked if he would serve alcohol again, he laughed heartily and said he would.

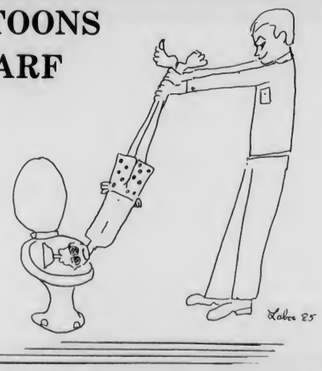
He said as far as he knows, he is personally covered if he is to be sued for an alcohol-related accident, and added he is not sure, but believes he is covered by the University's host liabilty coverage, which as far as he knows, protects the University.

Donald Madsen of the treasurer's office, who handles the University's insurance, said he knew very little about the host liability clause and also said the University Counsel, Sidney Meyers, would be the person to ask.

Meyers would not answer a reporter's questions.

Duffey's personal insurance agent would not comment on Duffey's own policy.

The point is: No one knows, or if anyone does, we are not being told the answers.



But we know one thing for sure: Duffey is wrong on two counts. He has gone ahead and put himself above us and his own policy and served alcohol when there is, in effect, a ban on campus.

And he may very well be risking the finances of our University by offering alcohol.

It's time for some answers, chancellor. And what better time then at the end of Alcohol Awareness Week.

Civil rights abuses

Rebecca Thatcher

I refuse to apologise for the civil rights abuses of any government, but I think it is possible, indeed necessary, to put the restriction of freedom of speech in Nicaragua in the context of the unseemly history of the role of the U.S. government in Latin America.

Though every country in Latin America is different, most of the countries share a history of struggle with the colonial and imperial forces which have played such a major role in the development (and underdevelopment) of their governments. The similarity of the experience of all the people of Latin America gives revolutionaries and ruling conservatives alike important educational opportunities. Both sides have learned certain important lessons from history of various Latin American countries.

Ruling elites know that they can brand popularity based movements for social justice as communist and receive military and economic aid from the United States to keep their unpopular governments from being overthrown. They know that as long as they keep both the natural and human resources of their country available to U.S. multinational corporations at a low cost their record on human rights will not be a matter of concern to the American government.

Groups who are opposed to U.S. backed dictatorships have many discouraging and terrifying lessons to learn from the history of U.S. intervention. The record of U.S. intervention shows that there are no moral limits to the measures the Central Intelligence Agency (as a proxy for the U.S. government) will take to prevent the ascendancy to power of opposition groups. The methods used by the CIA have ranged from merely propagandistic to violent—and they have always been carried out with skill and determination.

The Sandinistas, as a popularly based opposition group who managed to come to power during a brief hiatus in U.S. intervention, have no models of U.S. support for "liberty and justice" in Latin America. They have the example of Chile, where the CIA assisted in the assassination and overthrow of the popularly elected government of Salvador Allende and the installation of the dictatorships of Augusto Pinochet. They have the story of El Salvador, where one does not talk of mere censorship, one talks of journalists being tortured and murdered and presses being bombed and yet Larry Speakes is never seen on the front page of the New York Times denouncing press restrictions in that country and the military and economic aid continue to flow.

And finally, there is Cuba, where the selective concern for human rights is demonstrated most blatantly. Cuba's staggering progress in providing its citizens with education, food and shelter were completely ignored in favor of a policy of bellicose attacks and attempts at destabilization.

These are just three examples of a pattern taken with few exceptions in U.S. government policy towards Latin America: A double standard on freedom of speech and other human rights depending on whether or not the country is a U.S. client state.

This is not to say the restriction on freedom of speech in Nicaragua is totally insignigicant. It just should not be considered in a vacuum. It has to be viewed in the historical context of U.S. hypocritical attitude and military intervention in the region.

Message from a union member

You may have heard recently about the contract negotiations between the Lord Jeffrey Inn (owned by Amherst College), and the union which represents its employees. You may have seen us on television, read about us in the Collegian, or been handed one of our leaflets in town. Ten years ago, the employees of the Lord Jeff decided that they wanted a stronger voice in how the Inn was run, and introduced the local hotel and restaurant union into the Inn. Since then, every time the contract expired, negotiations took place to establish a new contract, one which modified the old to better suit the needs of management and employees.

This year however, management and Amherst College have all but refused to negotiate, and the contract which has stood and been strengthened for 10 years is in danger of being completely destroyed. It is not the intentions of this editorial to detail the issues being debated, but rather to inform you that we employees may be forced into action if a fair and reasonable contract is not in place soon.

If we decide to picket the Inn, we ask faculty and students, as well as anyone else who may read this, not to patronize the Inn or its restaurant. If we must strike, we ask for your support and that you not accept any job offers management may make in order to break the strike. This is very important to us because the student body, especially HRTA majors, could provide a large part-time work-force for the Inn. It's ironic, because students and people with priorities other than work are one of the things management is trying to get rid of.

There will be a good deal of publicity about this during the next few days, including a rally on the common this Saturday. All we ask is that you consider the issues, and then make your own decisions. Keep in mind that many of the employees at the Lord Jeff depend on their jobs for their livelihood. The town of Amherst prides itself on civil mindedness and cultural awareness. Please give us your support and help us in our fight for justice against Amherst College and The Lord Jeffrey Inn.

Selling out and apathy

Timothy Harris

Does it ever strike you as odd when it is taken as an article of faith that American college students are apathetic? Does it sometimes seem weird that the citizens of the most powerful nation on earth are, by international standards, politically naive? When anti-American sentiment boils over, as it has recently in Egypt, and students burn buildings in protest of our country's actions, do you wonder why their hatred is so passionate?

Our society is one which constantly barrages its people with messages designed to sell anything and everything from multicolored toothpast to MX-missiles. A consumption oriented society such as ours needs to create a demand for the products it has to sell. This need demands our accepting that now it can be fun for little Johnny to brush, and he'll sleep safer knowing America's "window of vulnerability" is growing ever smaller. One wonders why, in a country that any native-born citizen can grow up to be president, that there aren't at least as many presidental candidates as there are brands of toothpaste to choose from.

Edward Bernays, the founding father of the public relation industry, once described "the engineering of consent" as the essence of democracy. Walter Lipmann, another PR man, predicted 60 years ago that the "manufacture of consent" would lead to a revolution in "the practice of democracy." Many would agree it has. It is no coincidence the most popular president since Kennedy happens to be an actor.

While there are many cultural forms of social manipulation, the most ubiquitous intruder into most people's lives is their own television. Values, lifestyles, social norms and the legitimate parameters of political thought are all defined to some degree by that guardian of normalcy, purveyor of the status quo and friend from childhood, the box in the living room.

The results of current study of television viewers, known as the Cultural Indicators project, has been printed in The Journal of Communication. This study reveals that extensive viewing will often result in the "mainstreaming" of the viewer.

A set of questions concerning lifestyles and politics were presented to groups of both heavy and light TV viewers. The light viewers held a divergent spectrum of opinions while the ideas of the heavy viewers were relatively alike. The opinions of the heavy viewers reflected ideas that were the currency of a TV induced and maintained reality.

While the standard of living in the U.S. isn't the world's highest (South Africa's institutionalized slavery is more lucrative than our own neo-colonialism) it compares extremely favorably with more places on earth. Why protest when we can, from positions of middle-class comfort, bask in the soothing messages we have come to depend on?

We're generous, i.e. Live Aid; We're democratic, i.e. electoral politics and defense of freedom around the world; we're compassionate, i.e. our concern over heart patients and deformed babies; we're civilized, i.e. cultural achievememts such as "Dallas"; and most of all, we're not the Soviet Union, i.e. lack of breadlines, miserable masses, etc.

We also still believe we have a resonable chance of achieving the American Dream. While America continues to deliver the goods, to protest seems unreasonable, self-defeating and abberant. Rationality demands complacency.

However, the facts do not go away. Unemployment among black youth remains at over 50 percent. The science of torture used in the Third World is created in the United States along with its instruments. Also created in the United States are the bombs falling on Salvadoran civilians. World opinion of the United States is at an all-time low and for good reason. And all we hear about is how they envy us for opulent lifestyles.

We are being bribed out of our own humanity; selling our decency as thinking humans for a choice between 47 types of toothpaste and a shot at a Volvo in the driveway. We might be able to live with ourselves now, but can the rest of the world live with us?

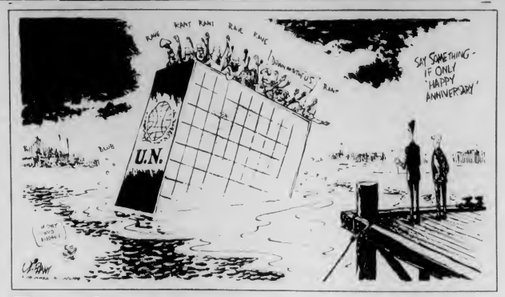
Club rally disappointing

Monica Giacoppe

I wasn't going to, but I have to say it. I was very disappointed with the Republican Club's rally last Friday. For those of you who may not have heard about it (the publicity wasn't all too well done), it was a rally to "Stop Communism," and a "Protest of the Soviet Union," to quote their extensively informative poster.

Now, speaking of disappointments, that poster was the first one. The poster certainly displayed very little—if any—thought or analysis. But even the poster wasn't as disappointing as the turnout at the rally (although I expect the Republicans are even more disappointed than I am), but since they claim the largest membership of any political group on campus (over 300 members, they say), I was expecting throngs of people to be there—all of those 300, and even a few of their dedicated supporters. Imagine my dismay when I saw that there was only a small crowd of people, most of whom seemed something short of supportive of what the Republicans had to say. Where were the 300? Were they all in class?



But even this was a comparatively small disappointment. Above all, I had been hoping they would finally break out of the rigid conservative mindset that divides the world into "good" and "evil," with all good emanating from the United States, and all evil from the Soviet Union. Unfortunately, things just don't split themselves up so easily. I, too, am critical of the Soviet Union. I do not approve of its government or similar governments.

In my eyes, it has failed in the institution of true communism as an economic system, and created quite priveleged segments of its society, just as capitalism has done here and in other places. I am displeased with the status of women and homosexuals in the Soviet Union, appalled at the persecution of Jews and other minority groups, and condemn their brutal invasion of Afghanistan just as soundly as does Ronald Reagan. In these beliefs I support the Republicans.

Nonetheless, they must realize that the time has come to examine ourselves in the same way that we examine the Soviets. Although they lament the situation of the Jewish people in the Soviet Union, they never comment on the fact that the United States accepted many former SS men into the CIA and NASA after WWII, hiding them from the justice of the Nuremburg trials in Europe. And did they protest the anti-semitism of the United States when our own President honored the graves of SS soldiers this year in Bitburg? If they did, it was even more poorly publicized than their rally against the Soviet Union. They have never felt the need to mention the all-out genocide of Native Americans and the institutionalized violence they have suffered ever since Europeans came to this land. Perhaps they believe we've reformed ourselves and progressed beyond such things, but then maybe they are not aware of the fact that our own government is currently forcing 14,000 Navajo and Hopi Indians to leave their homeland in Arizona. (Land which incidentally contains coal, copper, and other minerals.)

But it's hard to keep hoping. And this is the greatest disappointment of all. To the best of my knowledge, Peacemakers, the Radical Student Union, and CASA (formerly WMLASC) do not make a policy of condoning. Soviet atrocities in the name of "anti-imperialism", anti-capitalism, or any other vague (or even specific) ideology. But the Republicans sadly continue to callously ignore similar crimes against humanity when committed by our government or with our resources by foreign govenments that we support. We are not living in a John Wayne world, and it is unrealistic to try to see it as one. Furthermore, it is especially dangerous to start throwing around accusations of absolute good and evil just before the summit talks between Reagan and Gorbachev are about to begin in Geneva. Let's hope that in the future the Republicans can demonstrate a less segmented and more human world view.

A recent Boston Globe editorial called for the resignation of John Duff, chancellor of higher education, in light of his admission that he solicited political contributions from at least one member of the board of regents. Meanwhile, Chairman David Beaubien says he is determining whether he should call for a special regents meeting since Gov. Dukakis has requested an investigation.

It will be interesting to see if Duff resigns now, especially since many have known for awhile that Duff has been searching for another job and some Massachusetts education administrators are waiting for him to go.

The Third World Caucus recently considered inviting Louis Farrakhan to speak on campus. But one member said it appears that Farrakhan may soon step down and appoint a new national representative for the nation of Islam.

Farrakhan may be spending more time coordinating POWER, an economic development group organized with the intent of keeping black and Third World dollars within the community. On campus, look instead for an exciting group of black speakers during Black History Month in February.

Though some are disappointed they can't hoist a beer in the Blue Wall anymore, others have discovered a good study area. The Blue Wall Coffeehouse offers good lighting, large tables, television, many blends of coffee, and munchies from 3 to 11 p.m., Tuesday through Sunday. It isn't the Blue Wall as some of us used to know it, but it serves the best coffee to be found on this campus.

Though the New York Times and the Daily Hampshire Gazette have covered the suspension of civil liberties in Nicaragua for the last week, Boston Globe coverage has been minimal. The SGA Public Policy Committee is lobbying for the student regent bill in Boston. The bill, which proposes that a student member sit on the state Board of Regents of Higher Education cleared the state House of Representatives this summer, and the Senate last Tuesday.

Though some question how a single student may fairly represent students from the 27 state colleges, the bill proposes that representation be on a rotating basis; the first student regent would be from the community college system, the second from the state college system, the third from the UMass system, etc.

Right to expression disturbed—again

I could not believe the childish attitude of some of the people present at the Republican Rally last Friday afternoon. Let me first state that I am not a Republican but I was down there to listen to an opposing viewpoint. What I did hear is the same old stupid, emotional arguments that are not backed up by fact. Unfortunately these did not eminate from the Republican speakers but from the hecklers in the crowd.

When an attempt was made to quiet down the hecklers one said, "why should we let them speak, we don't agree with them." I guess whomever said that "it takes a sense of maturity to value freedom" was correct. The First Amendment guarantees freedom of speech without suppression.

Let's credit wisdom of the public

The recent attempt by the group known as the "Washington Wives" to impose their personal standards of morality upon the record-buying public by calling for a system of ratings is reason for concern. Our pluralistic society is based upon the concept of freedom of expression. Any attempt at denying this freedom should be resisted strongly.

These self-appointed censors claim that the ratings will not prevent certain albums from being sold but will merely serve as a convenient way for parents to monitor their children's listening. Civil libertarians scream at the first signs of this kind of deception. I have to wonder about the intentions of these 'protectors of innocent minds.'

I think that the regulation of childrens' listening is the responsibility of the parent and the child together and not that of a McArthyseque group of politicians' wives. I grew up listening to Jim Morrison. I still haven't committed suicide. I listened to Black Sabbath and Aerosmith at age eleven and believe it or not Mrs. Gore, I haven't murdered my mother with an axe. Let's give some credit to the wisdom of this country's founders and the intelligence of the American public and let people choose their own music.

Day breaks on FAC

MORRIS DAY Fine Arts Center Oct. 24, 1985
By KIMBERLY A. BURGE

What can I say about this show? It was fantastic! The lights, the sound system, the music, the choreography, everything was on time (excuse the pun).

There was something for everyone. For the guys, there was Lisa Lisa and Cult Jam singing their hit, "I Wonder If I Take You Home" to get their blood flowing. And for the ladies, there was Full Force with their close to perfect chest measurements and pelvic thrusts to get everybody's blood flowing.

Finally, for all of the sexy people (and that was everyone with a ticket), there was Morris Day. What can I say about Morris Day that he hasn't said about himself already? Sexy? Sophisticated? He was that and a whole lot more.

The light show did more than give us a glimpse of Morris. The stage was bathed in neon blue, yellow, red, and green light which was controlled by a state of the art computer control board. Watching Morris perform on stage with that kind of light show was like watching a movie. For two hours, he was larger than life.

The light show alone could have carried the concert but, Morris wasn't going to let anything out do him. He came out on stage dressed in stylish black pants, a crisp white shirt, a gold and black print blazer, and his trademark Stacy Adams shoes. He started off the show with "Cool" and "7779311", songs he did when he was a member of the Time. Then he performed songs from his solo albumn "Color of Success". One song in particular, "The Character' seemed to describe him to a tee. The crowd really came alive when he performed "Jungle Love" and "The Bird" from the movie "Purple Rain".

He lived up to his reputation as being a ladies man when his two sexy back up singers wiped the sweat off of him during the show and invting one lucky female from the audience on stage to have champagne with him so "he wouldn't be lonely any more."

Many people were surprised at how good his new band was. No one thought expected them to be as good or as flashy as the Time. But the band played tightly. If

FRIDAY FILM FOLLIES

Friday Film Follies
By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

For God's sake, get off this campus! Savage, pulsating Midterms are stalking the dark shadows of the campus. With inhuman patience the Midterms quietly crouch, waiting for weary, book-burdened students to pass by. If you value your life, there's only one thing to do. Movies. We're talking lots of movies.

Only one new movie is coming to the malls but it's a great one. After Hours stars Griffin Dunne (the young American who got killed at the beginning of An American Werewolf in London) as a word processor who spends one unforgetable night trying to get out of SoHo. It is a very funny comedy that takes a journey into the nightmarish regions of the Twilight Zone. This is probably the best American movie of the year. It has everything, comedy, a dark journey, Cheech and Chong, artistic merit, a good script, punks, good acting, strange women, a good director (Martin Scorsese), and bondage. My kind of movie.

Also at the malls is John Sayles' The Brother from Another Planet. In this urban science fiction comedy a black extraterrestrial with no voice and three toes flees his galactic slavemasters by crashlanding in Harlem. He finds himself in bar resembling a unique version of Cheers and meets an off beat set of city dwellers. But his slavemasters are on his trail and closing in.

The rest of the malls is pretty much the same old story. Jagged Edge: don't let the ads fool you. This is not a unstoppable-manic-slashing-naked-virgins-because-I-was-fed-fruit-lo ops-as-a-child-movie. Glenn Close stars as a savvy lawyer who must defend publisher Jeff Bridges when he is accused of the brutal ritualistic slaying of his millionairess wife. This is a good one, see it if you can.

Agnes of God: Jane Fonda stars as a psychiatrist who is appointed by the court to determine if Agnes (Meg Tilly) a young nun is fit to stand trial for the strangulation of her newborn infant. Agnes doesn't believe in the existence of the baby, she only believes in God. Anne Bancroft is the mother superior who tries to protect Agnes and the convent from Fonda's investigation. An involving mystery that pits modern science against faith without coming down on either side.

The Amherst Cinema has a great weekend of double features. On The Waterfront is one of the best movies of all time. Marlon Brando and an all star cast turn out truly brilliant performances in this great story about life on the docks of New York City. See it before it leaves after Saturday. A Streetcar Named Desire is the film adaptation of the Tennesee Williams play. Classic Brando.

Pleasant Street is showing Alan Parker's Birdy.

★ Concert Review

you closed your eyes, you'd swear you were listening to the albumn. For most of the musicians, this was their first time going on a national tour, but you couldn't tell by last night's performance. "I didn't expect the band to be as good as they were. They were excellent!" said an enthusiastic fan.

The choreography was very slick. He did many of the steps that he did in "Purple Rain" plus he added some new steps that I'm sure we'll be seeing perform-ed on the dance floor very soon.

The show ended with a rousing performance of his smash hit "Oak Tree". Every member of the sold-out audience was on their feet, waving their hands, and chanting "Oak Tree" after Morris. As a matter of fact, the audience was on their feet from the first song to the last. No one risked sitting down for fear of missing one second of this great show.

American anti-apartheid state. The play itself is a strong statement appealing for unity and action in the struggle of oppressed people , focusing upon the ongoing dichotomies of violent revolution

Sheila Bland's direction, however,lacks the fire and energy that the title implies and the gravity that the plot contains. All parts were played by woman actors, though the script calls for male performers. The lack of conviction and empathy in the voices the actresses,the discontinuity of their movements,coupled with gaudy and complicated costuming reduced the performance value of the play. It was disappointing to hear shrill,performance conscious voices attempt to convey earthy, living expressions of the Negro people working for 'freedom, justice and self-determination.'

Hisa Lynn Takakuwa's performance was outstanding . She fully embodied the spirit of a poet searching for truth and beauty in a corrupt and injust world. Interesting questions are raised by her character's symbolic heroism. Portraying revolutionary attitudes and actions, Takakuwa's Murray Jackson grapples with a dilemna. Hero becomes assasin after he murders the High Prefect of the state and suffers the consequences of his action and his cause. Bass touchingly expressed the question of a life lived for a cause and how that singular drive consumes a body's passion and can fester one's ability to love tenderly and selflessly. Though the performance itself lacks a vigorousness that the message generates, the piece deals with contemporary issues of hope in a living ideal for justice and peace, evolving in us and in our children.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Interview
Gibson discusses apathy

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Dr. William Gibson, chairman of NAACP board.

Racism and discrimination have been problems in the black community for a long time. Many suggestions have been offered and many ideologies have advocated different ways of dealing with the problems, but a permanent solution has yet to be found.

The question of can we really have a discrimination free America has been raised. Dr. William Gibson, chairman of the national board of directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), doesn't think so. "I never like to say never. It's a possibility that there could be a discrimination free America, but it won't be in my lifetime or in my children's" he said in an interview on campus Monday.

In a speech he gave that evening as part of the Third World Fall Lecture Series, he said, "We are living in some very troubled time." President Reagan is trying to turn the clock back to the time when blacks rights were being restricted. He has voted against every major civil rights bill that has come before him and he has signed a sanction against South Africa that Gibson considers both lame and racist.

Should one ethnic group make more of an effort than another to help eliminate racism? "Racism is a human problem. Both sides must be part of the solution and it should be equal. However, it may be necessary for the group who is being oppressed to do more for themselves," he said.

Racist groups such as the Ku Klux Klan proliferate in times of hardship. "There are a lot of poor white people who are doing bad and they are prime recruitment material," Gibson said.

According to him, the lack of unity in black community is nothing new. "The way people talk about the '60s it sounds like every black person was involved in the civil rights movement, but that isn't ture. We had apathy in the '60s just like we have now. Everybody didn't play the game." We should have more unity. However, he feels that blacks will not unite unless they are personally threatened.

To make blacks become more aware of what's going on in their community, Gibson suggests, "Reading and listening to the news, attend meetings, and generally, get involved."

Committee urges corp. to divest out of S. Africa

By LISA RIDDICK
Collegian Correspondent

"If they can't be moved morally, they will be moved by their pocketbooks."

The Five College Black Studies Executive Committee in it's unstinting support for the struggle against apartheid in South Africa, is trying to get corporations to divest their money out of South Africa. The action may appear to be a small step, but it can become a critical leap forward and impart material signals to South Africa's present rulers of our unwillingness to cooperate with social practices totally incompatible with the spirit within which the Five College Consortium was established.

Apartheid exists primarily because of British investors and to an extent, corporations of the United States. South Africa is an isolated country and lately, there have been increasing racial confrontations between blacks and whites. After rioting in Johannesburg, Benjamin Moloise, a black poet, was executed after being convicted of killing a police officer.

It is morally inconsistent that the United States should uphold the principles individual freedom and democratic rule while at the same time, materially profiting from a totalitarinism government based upon racial distinctions. A human and moral appeal is being made to people and corporations to continue divesting their funds. "If they can't be moved morally, they will be moved by their pocketbooks," said Ernest Allen, chairman of the Five College Black Studies Executive Committee.

While the whites in South Africa continue their exploitation, suppression, and disfranchisement of the majority of its citizens, other governments will have to adopt more enlightened social policies and put more pressure on the South African government.

In this way, world public opinion will influence the South African government and may make them take some decisive action against their racist apartheid policy.

UPC brings big acts touniversity

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Morris Day's first solo concert tour will either make or break his solo career. People know of him only through his association with the Time and his scene-stealing role in the movie Purple Rain.

"Many people affix his character to him. He's just like any other actor playing a part," said Lance Foley, talent coordinator of the Union Program Council (UPC).

"He has the potential to become a major black artist. His single "Oak Tree" is No. 5 on the R&B charts which means in two weeks it will No. 1," Foley said.

The set Morris used in his concert last night in the Fine Arts Center was the most elaborate set UPC has ever seen. "There were three truckloads of equipment, band gear, lights, etc. plus four busloads of people," he said.

This concert was the biggest that UPC has ever undertaken. "We've never kicked off a major tour before. Most bands are wary of colleges because nobody knows what to do," he said.

The Union Program Council is the largest independent and student-run production company in New England. Its members deal directly with the agents. "We do everything from providing transportation to disassembling the set after the concert," Foley said.

"There's never been a major problem. We have a solid reputation and agents are willing to talk to us about big acts. We never try to overstep our capabilities. Fifty percent of it is knowing what you're doing and the other 50 percent is knowing what you're capable of doing," he stated.

Many promoters of big name acts only talk to major promoters in major cities. They don't usually look for a college audience. But Foley states, "College crowds will be more receptive because they'll really be into the music and won't notice if the band's choreography is a bit out of sync or they're not as tight as they should be."

How does a student-run, college production company book big acts such as Morris Day and Paul Young? "We call and ask the agent what acts are working in the New England area. At that time, we have 10 days to put in an offer. He asks about the price and consider if it's a fair price for the size of the hall and the artist. The agents gets back to us and tell us whether our offer has been accepted or not," he said.

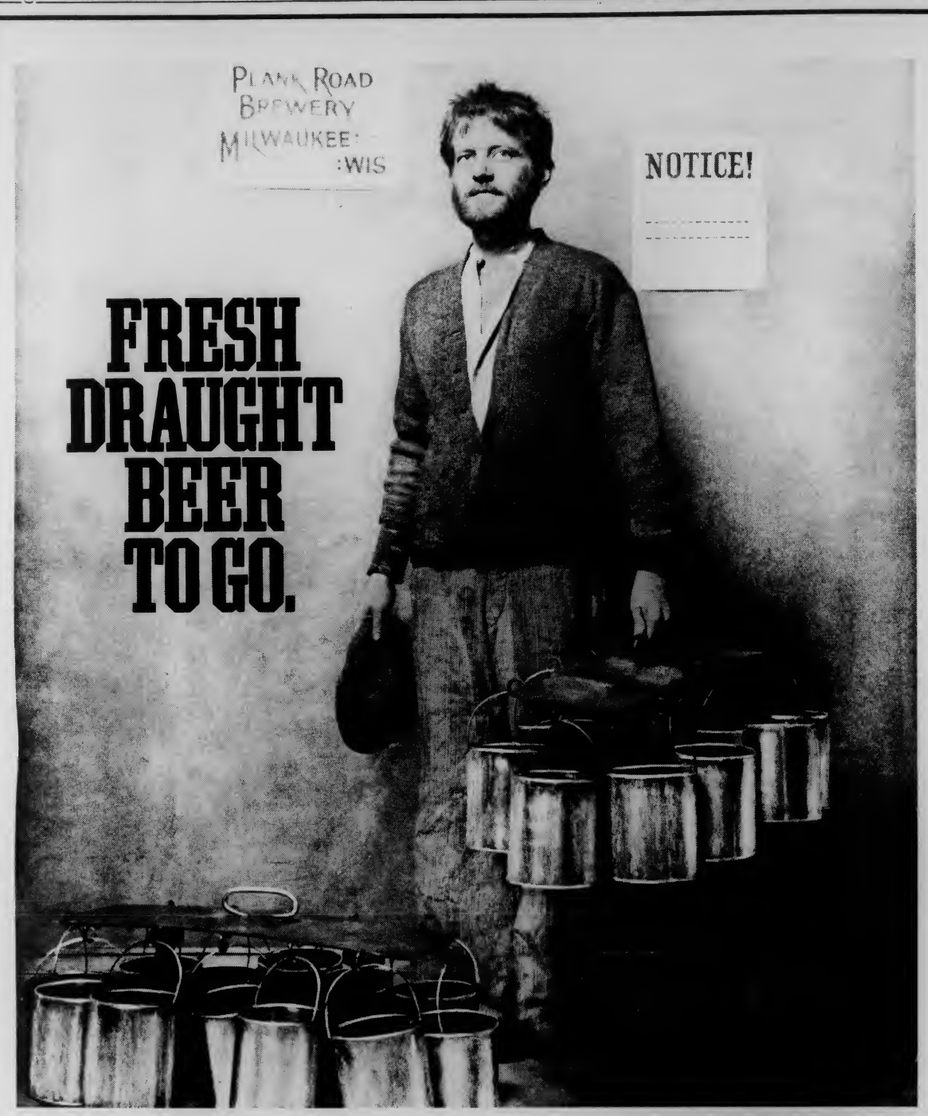
Most of the promoters and agents have very high confidence in UPC, Foley said. "It's unique because usually college production companies don't get that kind of confidence. It made me feel good and I think that it's a real compliment to the University."

Farrakhan not seen as a threat to community

By RHONDA SWAN
Collegian Staff

"Farrakhan threatens the black community" is the title of an article written by Bayard Rustin, President of the A. Phillip Randolph Educational Fund, which appeared in the October 11 issue of the New York Daily news. In this article Rustin says that Farrakhan is a "milestone around the neck of blacks in America, while fervently claiming to be their saviour." In addition, he said that Farrakhan is 'anti-semitic', 'anti-democratic', and 'morally repugnant'. Rustin accuses Farrakhan of 'exploiting the sense of frustration and helplessness that grips many segments of the black community.'

However several prominent members of the University of Massachusetts community do not feel that Farrakhan is a threat and many believe there are more important issues surrounding Farrakhan that should be considered.



Sherwood Thompson, director of the Office of Third World Affairs, says that based on his personal knowledge and understanding of Farrakhan, he sees him as "a visionary leader who wishes to win friends and influence people especially in his own culture." Thompson feels that Farrakhan represents leadership with "responsibility and accountabilty at a time when blacks could use as many leaders as possible." He does not see Farrakhan as a threat, but as a man whose goal is to 'work to increase the standard of living for all people, especially the oppressed.' He feels that Farrakhan is "A voice for black people. He is saying what millions of blacks and oppressed would like to say if they had the oppurtunity," he said.

In response to the claim that Farrakhan is anti-semitic, Chester Davis, professor of Afro- American Studies, said, "From what I know and have heard and read, I do not think that Farrakhan is any more amtisemitic than any other black." Davis feels that the media in this country has blown Farrakhan's importance and his views out of proportion. "Newspaper accounts have taken his statements out of context to make it appear that he is a flaming anti-semitic," said Davis.

Ernest Allen and Ester Terry, both professors in the Afro-American Studies department, believe that the issue concerning Farrakhan lies in his ability to attract such large audiences and gain many followers. Both Terry and Allen feel that this is indicative of the damage being done to blacks by the Reagan administration. Allen said, "A man like Farrakhan has emerged in our society because of Reagan's policies. The real damage is being done by the Reagan administration. The situation in this country is absolutely wretched." He believes that Farrakhan represents a positive element in the society. "What are the alternatives in terms of where black people are going to go?" he said.

FRESH DRAUGHT BEER TO GO.

Ask most beer drinkers and they'll likely agree: nothing tastes better than beer from a keg.

Ever since the days young men delivered bucketfuls to your door, keg beer has always been fresher. That's because it isn't cooked to preserve it like most bottled and canned beers.

Well, now we've found a way to deliver the same fresh draft taste in a bottle. A beer specially cold-filtered instead of cooked, so it tastes like it was drawn straight from the keg.

action last week against Maine (9-of-14 for 147 yards and two touchdowns after missing three games with a separated shoulder), has few problems. The Minutemen need to stop fumbling deep in enemy territory, but so far that bad habit has just caused UMass to win by fewer points, not lose any games.

The offense will be looking to throw more this week. Palazzi, in his opening three games, had little chance to show the ability of his arm because of his getting used to running the offense. In his return last week, he was hampered by a muddy field. Stull indicated earlier this week that he would like to go to the air more. Probable targets are junior flanker John Crowley (14 catches for 203 yards and a touchdown) and freshman split end Dan Rubinetti (five catches for 55 yards and a touchdown). Tom Cioppa (five catches for 138 yards and two scores) is another possible threat.

On defense, UMass leads 1-AA with just 8.8 points allowed per-game. The secondary will be challenged by Brooks, but the defensive line (bolstered by the return from injury of tackle Eddie Sullivan) should be able to pressure Mancini and contain the running game.
"I like the way we are playing this season," said Stull. "BU will be a good game for us to go out and show how much we've improved."

UMass field hockey at home against RI

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

After playing field hockey continually since early August, the fifth-ranked University of Massachusetts field hockey team has taken two days off, resting up for Saturday's game against Rhode Island on Totman Field at noon.
Capitalizing on the two rest days, UMass coach Pam Hixon has taken the opportunity to continue what has been an extensive recruiting campaign this season, heading out-of-state looking to capture top-notch talent to replace this year's crop of departing seniors.
Hixon was unavailable for comment, but UMass assistant coach Patty Bossio said that the coach gave the team the extra days off because they had earned them and that she feared exhaustion.
"A few of the players were getting worn down, falling behind in their work," Bossio said. "Pam gave everyone time off in order to take their minds off field hockey for a couple of days. With the season winding down we have to hit high gear if we want a shot at the national tournament."
With but five games remaining, the Minutewomen, 10-2-2, are unbeaten in their last eight outings including three heartstopping affairs which featured UMass goals in the final 34 seconds to avoid potential losses.
Hixon has said though that the key to the team's success this year has been the surprising but exceptional play of her freshman crop, something she didn't expect.

Sophomore midfielder Amy Robertson (19) takes a shot in action earlier this season. The UMass field hockey team takes on Rhode Island at home on Saturday.

She said that her starting five freshman, Pam Bustin, Colleen Reilly, Julie Stuart, Ruth Vasapolli and Kathy DeAngelis, have played great field hockey since seeing their first starting action against Temple and defending national champion Old Dominion two weeks ago. At the time Hixon attributed the freshmen' accelerated play to their desire to prove themselves on the field, contributing to the team.
Two weeks later, the Minutewomen owe much of their success to the play of the freshmen who have added a needed spark to a tired outfit. Saturday will be a test for UMass. Rested and ready to play, the Minutewomen will have to dispose of the Rams early and avoid allowing them to stay in the game.

between UMass and Boston University with the advantage currently belonging to the Terriers. Connecticut is a shoe-in for the first slot.
Gettler does not think his players have given up either and that making the tournament is just another goal to be achieved.
"Going into this season, nobody even picked us for being in the top six (in New England), said Gettler. "In all the previews, we didn't even get a mention. We came together and have been pretty magic even though we lost our two of our best players (All-New Englanders Kurt Manal and Paul Serafino to an injury and academics respectively."
In both of the Minutemen's past two losses, to nationally ranked Connecticut and Southern Connecticut, they were shutout. A revitalization of the offense has to be a priority against BC.
Freshman Sam Ginsburg (7-0, 0.63 goals against average) will be in goal for the Minutemen.
BC (3-7-3) comes into the contest boasting a defense that has given up only 12 goals in 13 games this season. However, the Eagle offense has produced only six.
For UM, it's just one game at a time. Then hope for the best.

Minutemen renew BU rivalry

Terriers are still tough despite 2-4 record, UM offense looks to throw

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

To be honest, the University of Massachusetts and Boston University football teams do not like each other. Hate, in fact, may be the appropriate word to describe the feelings between the two teams.

The bitter season series (led by UMass, 17-13) between the two long-time Yankee Conference rivals will continue on Saturday at McGuirk Alumni Stadium at 1:30 p.m.

The game is a big one for both teams, for far different reasons. UMass, 4-3 overall and 1-1 in the conference, must win to remain hopeful of catching Rhode Island in the league title chase. BU, at 2-4 and 1-2, must win to acheive at least a respectable season.

The tables are turned from last season when a struggling UMass went to Boston and lost to what turned out to be a playoff-contending Terrier team, 31-21. UMass was in the midst of a terrible season, but still managed to be within three points (17-14) of a much-better BU team in the fourth quarter. The game featured the hardest hitting exhibited by UMass all season.

"They hate us, they hate coming up here to play us and they hate losing to us," said UMass coach Bob Stull. "It's a big game for us for a lot of reasons, but mostly because it's BU"

UMass has gained a lot of respect this season with its comeback from two straight 3-8 seasons, but a victory over the Terriers would go far in firmly establishing the UM resurrection.

A victory on Saturday would make this UMass team the first since 1982 to win five games, the first since 1981 to have a winning record after seven games and the first since 81 to win three straight: accomplishments that Minuteman seniors, long tired of losing, would love to chalk up.

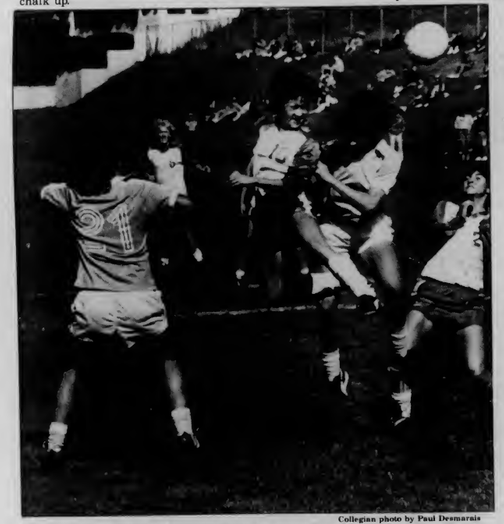
A University of Maine lineman jumps offside in action last week at Alumni Stadium. The Minutemen face Boston University on Saturday at 1:30 p.m. at home.



UMass defeated Maine 20-7 last week. The Black Bears, along with Holy Cross, were teams that defeated UMass in 1984. The UMass players have BU on their payback list.

The Terriers have struggled this season, scoring an average of only 14 points-per-game. First-year coach Steve Stetson has Yankee Conference rookie-of-the-year Pat Mancini at quarterback and All-American split end Billy Brooks to spark his offense, but the gaping holes that the offensive line opened last season are not present this season. Sophomore tailback Randy Pettus leads BU with 334 yards, but is questionable for the game with a concussion suffered in a 34-19 loss to Rhode Island last week.

The Mancini-to-Brooks combination has produced five touchdowns and 587 yards. Mancini himself is 62-of-139 for 782 yards and seven touchdowns, he also has nine interceptions.

On defense, the Terriers lost a number of valuable starters, but more importantly the leadership that made BU among the most aggressive units in Division 1-AA.

Minutewomen are 13-0

8th ranked BC next for women's soccer

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Another hurdle stands in the way of the top-ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team and the quest for its first-ever unbeaten, untied season as it faces eighth-ranked Boston College tomorrow at 1 p.m. in Boston.

Making the task of winning its 14th straight game more difficult will be the prospect of UMass playing the Eagles on the artificial turf of BC's Alumni Stadium, a surface that five of the UMass freshmen, who put in a lot of minutes, have never played college soccer upon.

"You need to have skillful players on turf," UMass senior co-captain Jamie Watson said. "You also need to have speed. We have it up front and we have the skills, too."

The Minutwomen, 13-0, spent yesterday practicing on the turf at Westfield State preparing for the game.

"It just adjusting our game to the turf," coach Kalekeni Banda said. "The surface will be faster and so we'll be faster too. We're just going to look for timing, precise timing."

Boston College (10-3-1) has shown the ability to play with the best of teams when they handed third-ranked George Mason (then, the number one team) a 2-1 loss two weeks ago. Since then however, the Eagles, who were ranked third a week ago, have tied 16th ranked Harvard 1-1, lost to 14th ranked Radford 2-1 and lost to 11th ranked UConn 1-0 on Tuesday.

"We're going to look to deny them the quick, transition game," Banda said. "We going to play a tight marking game. They have some dangerous players. They'll be playing some long balls."

The Minutewomen, coming off a 5-0 pasting of Harvard, will look to play 90 minutes of soccer and try to avoid the flat second half they had against the Crimson.

Last year, UMass walloped BC 5-0 in both team's regular season finales but when the two squads met a week later in the NCAA playoffs, UMass took a tight 3-2 win in overtime.

SOCCER DRIBBLE- UMass' closest shot at an unbeaten, untied season came in the program's first year when the Minutewomen went 15-0-1 under coach Arnie Morse...The team has posted 11 shutouts in 13 games this year. That is still short of the UMass record of 14 shutouts

Men's soccer takes on Eagles

By BRYAN QUENZEL

After a two week absence, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team returns to the friendly confines of Boyden Field tomorrow to take on Boston College at 11 a.m.

UMass (12-5, 9-2 in New England), losers in two of their last three contests, hopes to resume its winning ways at home where they are a perfect 8-0 this season.

The Minutemen still harbor hope of being choosen for the NCAA tournament, but a loss to the Eagles would end any speculation.

"We just need to keep winning," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "We need to win our next four games. If we go 16-5, I can't believe we wouldn't be in the tournament. I know it doesn't look good, but we have to hope we didn't strikeout."

The second New England spot in the tournament is

Health Services forms AIDS policy

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

University Health Services is one of the first programs in the area preparing a general policy to deal with victims of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

The policy will deal with the treatment of AIDS victims in three parts, according to David Kraft, executive director of health services.

AIDS patients will be able to continue attending the University as employees, students or faculty members in the campus community, Kraft said, and Health Services will work with students to educate them about AIDS and the effects on the victim and those close to them.

The third aim of the program, Kraft said, is to teach people that the victim is at risk and not those they come in contact with. The AIDS victim is in danger, because of their immune deficiency, he added.

Kraft would not discuss the possibility of having AIDS victims on campus.

Thomas C. McBride, medical director of the University Health Services, is writing the policy and should be ready with the final draft in a couple of weeks, and after approval from the executive committee, the policy will be circulated for further feedback from leaders of the gay and lesbian community as well as others, Kraft said.

Dennis, Madson, vice chancellor of student affairs, created the AIDS policy health services is working on.

"Inevitably, there will be an AIDS victim on campus," said Sarah Boy, special assistant to the vice chancellor. UMass should be prepared with a policy when the time comes, he said. Both Kraft and Boy refused to comment on the specifics of the policy,saying it was still in the form of a rough draft.

The policy will only be for the University, said Ron Mazur, corrdinator of the Peer Sexuality Education Program at Health Services. He said that other campuses may want to look at it, but there are none similar to the UMass policy. The policy will provide confidentiality, proper medical treatment, and support for AIDS victims, Masur said.

Mazur also said that UMass cannot detect the AIDS virus through the University health services' blood tests. Blood tests are used to test a donor's blood for AIDS antibodies, which does not mean the patient has AIDS.

Some people can have the antibodies, yet never contract the disease.

Health Education Services is preparing phamphlets, video cassettes and advice to educate students on AIDS. A phamphlet called "Safe Sex" is being prepared by health education, Mazur said, and will explain some precautions to insure safe sex. Video cassettes are being prepared and will be available to all dormitories.

AIDS is a "major public health issue for everyone," Mazur said.

More money is needed for research, social services and treatment, he said, adding: "people with AIDS are being abandoned."

Nationally there is an overreaction to AIDS "with a clear hate for homosexuality" behind the fear of the virus, Mazur said.

Lesbian and Gay Allicance is also trying to educate the public through dormitory workshops, panels and lectures.

Spencer Liles, an Alliance member, said AIDS creates more prejudices against gay people and he believes the names of AIDS victims should be kept confidential, adding that an AIDS victim should be guided by individual responsibility and conscientiousness, if they are still sexually active.

Area coordinators revise dorm Halloween policy

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

The residential security policy for Halloween, which will be in effect from Thursday, Oct. 31, through Sunday, Nov. 3, has been revised to be uniform for dormitories campus wide, housing officials said.

The original policy had rules for Southwest that differed from Eastside.

"We wanted one consistent policy," said Chaz Durant , assistant director of housing services for Southwest.

Under the original Halloween policy, two non-University overnight guests were permitted in Sylvan, Central, and Northeast, while Southwest was not permitted any non-University overnight guests. Also, Halloween masks were only banned in Southwest," because of the potential for increased anti-social acts."

"We tried to make the new policy as consistent as possible. The only difference is that masks are still not allowed in Southwest," said Carol Wallace, area coordinator for Central.

The policy was formulated by area coordinators, with input from the residential directors and Southwest Area Government, she said.

The new policy, Wallace said, will allow for two overnight guests, and four sign in guests per resident for all the residential areas. Also, dormitory parties will be closed to outside guests.

The disparity between the requirements in the original policy, she said, existed because the areas are so different.

" There are different concerns for Southwest because it is so densely populated and so visible," Wallace said.

" Southwest has high rise buildings, young students, and it attracts more non-UMass students," said Chaz Durant Because it is so much more visible, when you advertise a Southwest party everyone comes," he said.

"Southwest has high rise buildings, young students, and it attracts more non-UMass students. Because it is so much more visible, when you advertise a Southwest party, everyone comes."
—Charles Duraut

Masks, he said can cause a problem, because they make it impossible to identify someone who has committed a crime, such as assault.

Wallace said the policy is more relaxed than in recent years. "It will probably relax every year until we feel comfortable with it," she said.

Bill Collins, a senator from Southwest said,"It is unfortunate that there are still stereotypes concerning Southwest. Assault can happen anywhere, not just Southwest," he said.

Collins said there had originally been a lot of confusion centered on exactly what the policy was.

" With the making of this new policy," he said, "one opinion seemed to dominate another."

Housing Services has shown flexibility regarding its policies, Collins said.

Workers maintain protest

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Employees of the Lord Jeffery Inn in Amherst took to the streets this weekend in a 'work and walk' movement to gain support for their contract struggles.

The management of the inn, 75 percent of which is owned by Amherst College, proposed cuts in benefits and wages for the employees new contract. Because the employee's union rejected the new proposals, workers have been without a contract since the last one expired Thursday.

They have picketed outside the inn everyday since Friday.

"The ignorance and arrogance of the management has caused mistakes at the expense of the workers," said Rob Traber, director of the employees union and a member of the negotiating team. "They (the management) are more concerned with turning off light bulbs then they are with the rights of the employees."

A management spokesman declined to comment.

The employees, members of local 217 Hotel and Restaurant Employees Union, said they believe that since the college owns the inn they should have the same rights as any other Amherst College employee.

According to Lee Wildes, an employee at the inn and a member of the negotiating team, the college and the inn are trying to establish a two-tier wage system, under which new workers would be paid less than experienced workers for doing the same job.

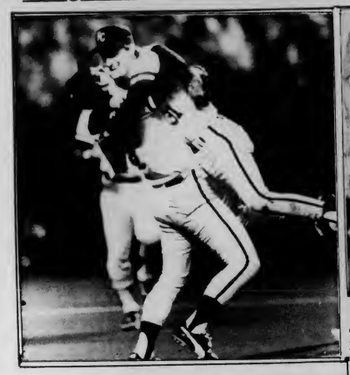
The inn, Wildes said, is also trying to take benefits from all employees, especially part-timers, and take away standard employee rights such as scheduling by seniority.

"This is not a strike but a protest of the management. We don't want more money, we just want to maintain what we have now." Wildes said.

Currently, the employees are working as usual, but are also maintaining a picket line and urging customers not to go into the establishment, Traber said.

"We (the union) want to gain as much support as possible from the area," said Traber, adding that it is important to ask the public if they really want to patronize an establishment that treats their workers as the inn does.

"As for the future anything can happen. The workers are solid tight and ready to fight," Traber said.



In a rally held by the employees on Saturday, various speakers spoke out against Eric Nusbam, the general manager of the inn and Kent Faeber, Directer of Almni Affairs at Amherst College- both key negotiators for the inn.

Faeber was not present at the rally. However, Nusbam emerged from the inn midway through the rally, prompting an employee singing a protest song to say: 'This one's for you Eric.'

BIG SPORTS SUNDAY—Sports lovers and casual fans had plenty to keep them going yesterday. State finds phone fraud

BOSTON (AP)—Personal calls made to such faraway places as Botswana and Iran and charged to telephones at state universities have cost Massachusetts taxpayers more than $300,000, an angry legislator said.

"I don't understand how someone could make 15 calls to Iran—where we don't even have diplomatic relations—and no one even noticed," Rep. Robert Carasoli, D-Quincy, told The Sunday Boston Herald. "They just paid the bill." Cerasoli heads the House Post Audit Committee, which found a few months ago that the state was paying for hundreds of phones in government offices that didn't exist.

The latest phone scam—personal long-distance calls charged to some of the 950 office phones on Massachusetts campuses—has probably cost taxpayers about $300,000, or one-third of the $1 million paid every year for long-distance calls on state university phones, Carasoli told the Herald.

"It's outrageous that the college administration has never made a serious effort to monitor their phone bills," he said.

Carasoli told the newspaper that bills showed calls to southern Africa, Cuba, Europe, the Northern Antilles and the Middle East, as well as to private homes elsewhere in the United States.

Speed limit proposal is under review

By BRION McALARNEY
Collegian Staff

A proposed speed limit reduction to improve pedestrian safety on Massachusetts Avenue has been delayed until the Department of Public Safety determines the legal effects of the reduction.

The proposal would reduce the speed limit from 30 MPH to 20 MPH on the four-lane road running between the Whitmore Administration Building and the Southwest Residential Area.

"We are taking our time, we do not want to rush into something and have legal problems later," said Gerald O'Neil, director of the Department of Public Safety.

"The proposal was approved in the spring by the Faculty Senate and everyone in the administraion," said Fred Drake, History Professor and Chairman of the Faculty Senate's Safety subcommittee.

Public Safety is waiting for a judge to determine its legality so cases won't be thrown out of court, Drake said.

"We had been assuming that before the summer it was going to be changed," said Warren Schumacher, Chairman of the Faculty Senate Health Council Committee. "There have been too many near misses, we fear someone will be hit."

The speed reduction on Massachusetts Avenue is a difficult problem legally, though it could be declared a school zone, O'Neil said.

"A few years ago," O'Neil said, "a judge determined that 30 MPH on a four-lane highway was justified."

Other proposals to enhance pedestrian safety on Massachusetts Avenue include plantings (shrubs), to block pedestrian access to the road, better use of crosswalks, and barriers, though there is a feeling against barriers on campus, Drake said.

"A reduction of speed limit and a little tighter funneling of pedestrians with plantings is a possible solution," Drake said.

Speed bumps have been proposed, but would cause a problem for trucks carrying bottles, said Schumacher.

Ed Mientka, an officer of the Environmental Health and Safety support group at the University, said his office is thinking of ways to encourage students to use a pedestrian tunnel under Massachusetts Avenue, which connects Southwest to the main part of campus.

"There is no clear-cut solution, a lot of it is judgment, education, hopefully a short-term implementation (speed reduction) can improve pedestrian safety," he said.

The Faculty Senate Safety subcommittee has also made a recommendation to improve pedestrian safety on North Pleasant Street. The recommendation is to redesign and move the bustop across from Lot 62 and possibly move it north toward the Fine Arts Center, to separate it from the crosswalk.

But since North Pleasant Street is under Amherst jurisdiction, the decision would be made by the town of Amherst, O'Neil said.

Officials allow Olney plan changes

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

University administration officials have agreed to several modifications of the Olney plan, a controversial wage scale program for professionals.

The amendments, which are in effect, were proposed by a committee created by the administration to review the salary program. They provide for financial awards for excellence to be allocated in the form of increases in base salaries for professionals whose salaries are at or above the maxium for their position.

In addition, a second amendment reduces the number of position levels, and increases the salary range for each level, so that professionals may receive salary increases without being promoted.

A third amendment provides salary increases for additional responsibilities, only when the increases do not warrant promotion. The final amendment ensures that salary increases will accompany all promotions.

These are considered to be the first of several changes, according to a memorandum drafted by Provost Richard O'Brien.

The committee plans to discuss the appeals procedure and the criteria used in determining position levels and dissemination of information about the program, according to a commmittee memorandum.

Questions have been raised about the criteria used in the Olney plan to set wage scales. Salaries were set comparable to positions at 15 other schools, but the criteria used has not been released to the professionals.

Also, considerable controversy has centered around the issue of an appeals procedure for professional staff. Under Olney, job complaints must first be heard by department heads before further action is taken.

This "compromises employees' abilities to appeal," Tom Coish, legal services staff attorney, said last month.

Negotiations to modify the Olney plan, enacted July 1, have continued since the summer.

Symposium looks at education

By Lisa DiMeo
Collegian Correspondent

Marking Mount Holyoke College's 15th anniversary as a higher institution for women, three women educators took part in a weekend-long symposium and addressed the white male perspective dominating liberal arts education.

The session titled, "The Point of Women's Education: Accommadation, Contemplation, or Criticism?" brought together professors Amrita Basu of Amherst College, Beverly Guy-Sheftall of Spelman College and Constance Buchanan of the Harvard Divinity School. Each have conducted specialized research in women's studies.

"In liberal arts, the ultimate subject is humanity," Buchanan said, adding that in liberal education "for humanists, the human subject is the male subject."

According to Buchanan, whose research in women's studies focuses on women and religion and women in the 1980's, the main problem women confront is that education focuses on the white male subject rather than the whole human experience.

Buchanan said her experience has shown her education's male perspective is part of society, "giving women the best education available to men."

Guy-Sheftall, a professor of English, Afro-American studies, and women's studies, said a special problem for black women in higher education is that "it is not possible for a black institution to exist by educating blacks away from themselves."

She said she feels the primary objective of a black insitution is to create a larger middle class, which can be assimilated into the dominant culture.

Criticizing what she said is America's obsession for individualism that has resulted in a lack of trust among students, Guy-Sheftall said the emphasis instead should be on "the sense of community which is being lost."

Basu said the main problem she sees in western feminism is that women have disassociated themselves from tradition.

"Western feminist theory represents an attempt to start anew," she said, adding that she feels it is a mistake to fall into liberal feminism because it is too "radical."

Rather, she said, women should understand tradition and look forward to new possibilities.

The AIDS virus is transmitted through sexual contact, needle sharing, or through blood or its components, according to a report of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The report emphasized that the virus cannot be transmitted through casual contact with AIDS victims, but recommended reducing the risk of contracting AIDS by avoiding sexual contact with multiple partners or sharing implements such as toothbrushes or razors, that could be contaminated with blood.

SGA members initiate a 'week of sobriety'

Several undergraduate student senators, who approved an alcohol use resolution this past Wednesday, are beginning to urge their constituents not to consume alcohol until Thursday.

The resolution, approved 34 to 17 at last week's senate meeting, states that individual senators should take the lead in the campaign for an overall more responsible attitude toward alcohol use. The resolution's sponsor, campus co-President Stacy Roth, said it is not necessary to go without drinking, but at least to beome aware of the issue.

"I'm writing a letter challenging my constituents not to drink for the week," said Michael O'Duro, a senator from Kennedy dormitory. "I personally challenge UMass students to go one week without drinking."

Suzanne Gauger, a senator from Crabtree dormitory, said it's "a week of sobriety" for her because "I think it's a good idea." She said she has told her floormates about the resolution but stressed that there should be individual choice in abstaining from alcohol.

Robert Gershon, a senator from Baker dormitory, said he wrote leaflets on alcohol awareness to inform his constituents. "I suggest to people to watch their drinking habits and be aware," but he added that "I really don't think most people will care and that's the problem."

Punishment is murder

David Valade

The death penalty is a societally sanctioned form of murder. It is cleaned and repackaged as "punishment," but the fact remains that we are murdering a person in the name of justice.

Albert Camus writes in Resistance, Rebellion, and Death of execution by the guillotine; "If we may be permitted to give our opinion, such sights are frightfully painful. The blood flows from the blood vessels at the speed of severed carotids, then it coagulates. The muscles contract, and their fibrillation is stupefying; the intestines ripple and the heart moves irregularly, incompletely, fascinatingly. The mouth puckers at certain moments in a terrible pout. It is true that in the severed head the eyes are motionless with dilated pupils; fortunately they look at nothing and, if they are devoid of the cloudiness and opalescence of the corpse, they have no motion; their transparency belongs to life but their fixity belongs to death. All this can last minutes, even hours, in sound specimens: death is not immediate . . . Thus every vital element survives decapitation. The doctor is left with this impression of a horrible experience, of a murderous vivisection, followed by a premature burial."

In The Plague, Camus writes of execution by firing squad; "Have you ever seen a man shot by firing squad? No, of course not; the spectators are hand-picked and it's like a private party; you need an invitation. The result is that you've gleaned your ideas about it from books and pictures. A post, a blindfolded man, some soldiers in the offing. But the real thing isn't a bit like that. Do you know that the firing squad stands only a yard and a half from the condemned man? Do you know that if the victim took two steps forward his chest would touch the rifles? Do you know that, at this short range, the soldiers concentrate their fire on the region of the heart and their big bullets make a hole into which you could thrust your fist? No, you didn't know all that; those are things that are never spoken of."

We have moved away from these methods of execution. Now we use lethal injection, gas chambers, and the electric chair. The common fact remains that execution is not a clean, quick act. Death is slow, excruciatingly painful, and messy. We, as a society now utilize more "humane" methods of death. These techniques are not more humane, all that is changed is our perception of the humaneness involved. The death penalty is hidden so we don't have to face the brutality it entails.

There are so many arguments used, both pro and con, in the debate over the death penalty. Debate centers on whether there is a deterrent effect. Proponents claim that it is a form of justice and retribution. No one considers what really happens, that society brutally murders a person.

If we as a society hope to justify our belief that murder is wrong, then how can we condone the death penalty? It is no less brutal than the act committed to cause this form of punishment. We hide it to relieve our culpability. The fact remains that when we execute a person, we are lowering ourselves to that level of barbarity. We are not raising the standards of society by eliminating the individual. If we truly wish to become a better society, we must find a way to justice without sanctioned murder.

Rent review makes sense

Robert J. Merlino

You may have been hearing a lot about rent review lately. There is a movement in the ongoing Town Meeting (which meets tonight) to establish a Rent Review Board which would allow tenants to have their rents adjusted according to fair operating costs of landlords. This system would, in effect, allow for a certain degree of tenant participation in the process of setting rates for rental housing.

As many off campus students know, housing is difficult to find and very expensive. Since there is only about a one percent vacancy rate in Amherst, (federal regulations define a rate below five percent as a crisis) the laws of supply and demand are exploited. High demand and low supply put students in a position where they are forced to rent an apartment at extremely high prices (whether there are sanitary code violations or not) or go without housing. The former is the more attractive solution.

By establishing a rent review board, students would have more bargaining power than the market currently allows. It should be noted that the major landlords exploit the lack of rental housing by charging high rents for often substandard housing. Also, landlords have waged a significant propaganda campaign aimed at scaring both students and private home owners into believing that rent review would lower property values. This claim has not been substantiated.

And how would rent review raise rents? To put it simply, it wouldn't, at least not at the current rate of increase. Landlords know their rents are high and fear they will not make the exploitative profits of the past. They're so afraid of this that they proposed a $200,000 fund to subsidize rents for low income families. This is blood money designed to placate a portion of the rental population while tricking everyone else into believing they are concerned, philanthropical people and blinding renters to the fact that they will continue to reap huge profits at the expense of ALL.

Students are urged to speak out for rent review. It is not rent control, it would open channels of communication between landlords and tenants and allow for flexibility in rental rates. It would also assure that rental housing would be required to comply with all State Sanitary Codes (those of you out there with cockroaches, take heed). In short, rent review would not be the tragic disruption of the rental market as the landlords would lead us all to believe. I feel that rent review should be established to serve as a means for fair and equal representation within alandlord-dominated market.

Letters

Job entails more than people think

This letter is written in response to misunderstandings stated in Larence Soucie's column "Comparable sexism" (Collegian, Oct. 24). We don't intend to take issue with most of Soucie's thoughts but we feel he needs a better understanding of the work of a janitor.

Janitors at the University of Massachusetts have a wide range of duties far beyond "pushing a broom." The janitors in the Housing Department perform a myriad of tasks including emptying trash cans, vacuuming carpets, cleaning bathrooms and replenishing supplies, wet or dry mopping floors, dusting furniture, washing walls and windows, waxing and buffing floors, sweeping stairwells and walkways, changing light bulbs, rearranging furniture, maintaining machinery, and making minor carpentry and plumbing repairs. During summer vacation we clean entire buildings from top to bottom including hundreds of student rooms. In a day we use many different tools and cleaning materials; we must know how to use them properly to avoid harming floors, fixtures, and ourselves. Daily, we spend most of our time on our feet; our tasks require constant bending, stooping, and stretching. The work of a janitor, however, is not only physical.

A major part of our responsibility is being a bridge between the students and their living environment. We are the ones to whom they report problems within their buildings. We, in turn, report problems that we cannot handle to our head janitors and supervisors. They report repairs needed to the appropriate trades people within our community. On a more personal note, we take interest in the students living in our particular dormitories; we care about their health and safety by maintaining the building. We offer friendship and guidance and many of us have children of our own in the same age range. We are in constant communication with the Resident Assistants and Cluster Coordinators; we also talk with each other about how to be more effective on our jobs. Needless to say, the life of a janitor is many-faceted. We also have families, hobbies, and classes to attend at the University and other educational institutions in the valley. "Pushing a broom" is one of our minor attributes.

Again, we have no problem with most of Soucie's thoughts. Of course a clerk at grade 4 needs and deserves more money—just don't pit that grade against ours. An interesting footnote is that 45 percent of the janitorial staff in housing is female.

Greenpeace exploits seal appeal

As a point of information in reference to Joseph McCormack's column of Oct. 22, the baby Harp seal hunts were suspended indefinitely by the Canadian government about four years ago. But, Greenpeace has continued to exploit this emotional issue for as long as well-meaning people don't know otherwise and are willing to part with their money to stop the non-existant hunts. After all, why slay the Golden Goose?

Don't forget 'Refuseniks'

Julie Lynn Bergstein

On Oct. 18, a rally was held in front of the Student Union Building, pointing out the "negative aspects" of life in the Soviet Union. On Oct. 15, I also took part in a rally for people living in Russia, held outside of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, D.C.

The rally was also a vigil for Jews living in the Soviet Union, Jews who are referred to as "Refuseniks." The Soviet constitution guarantes cutural freedom for all recognized nationalities in the USSR, including Jews. But, the authorities do not allow it and the Jews are the victims most often denied their rights. Over 2.5 million Jews live in the Soviet Union. More than 11,000 have been refused exit visas, thus they are referred to as "Refuseniks." Soviet authorities use many means to discourage Jews from applying for exit visas, including harassment by the KGB, expulsion from their jobs, banishment into eternal exile, and confinement in psychiatric hospitals.

Zacher Zunshein, a Soviet Jew, was charged with "anti-Soviet slander" for holding up a sign saying "give me a visa." He was sent to prison where he was gangraped. He was also told by authorities to repair an electrical cable while standing in water. He refused, was stripped, and was forced to remain on his knees for 24 hours and was given a quota of flies to catch. He was beaten for not meeting the quota. His only crime was wanting to take his family to Israel.

The goal of the Soviet Union regarding the Jews is to assimilate them. To accomplish this, the study of Judaism as well as the study of Hebrew is outlawed. Hebrew teachers are often arrested on trumped up charges of posession of arms and drug possession. In fact, these people are arrested for studying and teaching Hebrew.

With today's reactions to the South African oppression, the awareness of the public to other oppressed peoples is all that more important. In comparing the blacks in South Africa to the Jews in the Soviet Union, a staff writer for the Union of Concern for Soviet Jews wrote,"the South African government, apparent in their perpetuation of apartheid, sponsors and supports facism. The Soviet Union is the world's largest producer of anti-semitic literature and encourages anti-semitism at home. Blacks in South Africa and Soviet Jews are both considered second-class citizens. Both are oppressed because of their ancestry-skin color or religious background. Both live in fear of the secret police, both have their leaders arrested and jailed, and both are denied rights granted under the international Declaration of Human Rights. Both seek justice and both depend on our continued support."

Julie Lynn Bergstein is a UMass student.

Paul Young lets loose in FAC

PAUL YOUNG AND THE ROYAL FAMILY

Collegian Staff

Every now and then a performer comes along who is capable of completely submerging himself in his act and letting loose everything that he has. Last Saturday night, Paul Young showed a packed FAC concert hall that he is one of the more exciting acts on the music scene today.

With his nine-piece band, The Royal Family, scattered about the stage, Young sang, danced, and cartwheeled through an intense hour-and-a-half set. The entire stage was a flurry of motion, as each member of the band joined in on the theatrics. Young can dance with the best of them, falling into Prince-like splits and sliding across the stage. He was all over the place, resting only to catch his breath or wipe the sweat from his forehead. Neither he, his band, nor the audience would stop dancing the entire evening.

Belting out numbers from his albums, "No Parlez," and most recently, "The Secret of Association," Young continually lead the audience in synchronized song. Among the favorites from his play list were "Everything Must Change," "Everytime You Go Away," "Come Back and Stay," and a wonderfull version of the Sam Cooke classic "Cupid." The audience seemed to know the words almost as well as Paul did.

The stage set was elaborate, with each member of the band on a platform high off the ground. Only Paul remained on the floor. Added to an exciting light display and fog machine, the set proved to be an effective accent to the soulful, almost desperate style of Young.

The opening act, "Simon F," was a different story. Their music was loud, distorted and vulgar. Where did Paul Young find these guys? They certainly didn't belong on the FAC stage and were almost booed off of it. Maybe they'd be more at home playing in a Chinese restaurant in London, but then you'd probably end up walking out in the middle of your mushroom chow yoke. They were that awful.

UMass actually has a 10-0 lead in the game, one that could have been bigger if not for George Barnwell's fumble at the BU 28 in the first quarter and a pair of missed field goals by Kaczorowski.

The Minutemen scored on a 32 yard field goal by Kaczorowski with 6:49 left in the first quarter and again in the second quarter as Anthony Strickland rambled in from the 13 with 12:08 to go.

BU took the lead on a disputed one-yard run by Pettus and an eight yard Schuman-to-Brooks hookup and a two-point conversion rush by Brooks. On Pettus' score, the tailback looked to have a knee on the ground at the one (as the linesman called it), but another official came from the other side of the field to call it a touchdown.

Schuman was dynamic in relief, going 22-of-36 for 218 yards. Palazzi was 8-of-13 for 79 yards and rushed 16 times for 60 yards. Barrett added 66 yards and Neri another 40. Defensively UMass was lead by linebacker Vito Perrone (15 tackles and a fumble recovery) and Eddie Sullivan and Paul Platek (10 tackles each). Manganaro, Dwyer and Todd Rundle each had sacks.

UMass not denied by BU, 17-14

Palazzi wins game with TD run, win streak now at three

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

With 8:35 left in the game, trailing 14-10, the season was on the line for the University of Massachusetts football team.

A better-than-advertised Boston University had contained Minuteman quarterback Dave Palazzi while running up big numbners with its passing game and stood on the verge of a Yankee Conference upset, looking to salvage its season.

But Palazzi saved his best for last, engineering UMass' best drive of the season, a 73-yard push downfield that took just 2:09 and seven plays, capped by the freshman's 17-yard option run down the left sideline for the winning touchdown with 6:26 left.

BU made it close, driving to the UMass 19 with 1:30 to go, but Ashley Dussel's 37-yard field goal attempt went wide to the left to give UMass a hard-earned victory before 11,072 at Alumni Staduim.

"I though we were looking at overtime," said UM coach Bob Stull. "It must be tough game for them to lose, but we've been on that side of the ball too."

UMass, now 5-3 overall and 2-1 in the conference, has won three straight for the first time since 1981 and providing Rhode Island helps out with a loss or two, is still in the hunt for a playoff berth. Bu is now 2-5 and 1-3

"This game means so much to us," said senior offensive guard Stan Kaczorowski. "We had been losers for three years, but now we're putting it together like I always thought we could. UMass football has a great tradition of winning, we're finally contributing to that."

The winning drive was a thing of football beauty. In seven plays that averaged over ten yards each, UMass proved that their 1985 comeback is legtimate.

"I knew we had to score," said Palazzi. "We weren't about to lose after working so hard this season. The line did a great job of opening the holes and we just had to run through them."

UMass started with Ted Barrett's halfback option pass to John Crowley for a gain of 13. Barrett then busted through the line for eight before taking a Palazzi option pitch for six more and a first down at the BU 47 with 7:22 to go.

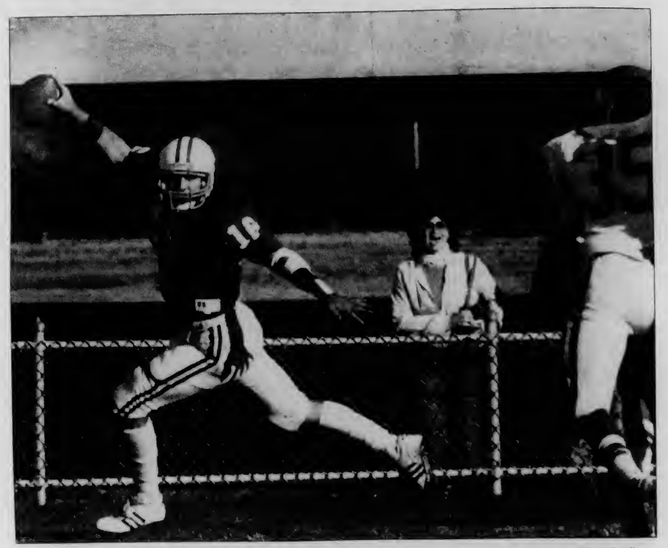
Palazzi kept on the option, gaining 14 before hitting Bart Fuller for seven yards to the 27. Fullback Al Neri then gained ten up the middle to the 17.

Palazzi then made the play of the game. Going left on the option, the freshman quarterback faked a pitch to Neri and went for the touchdown. Kaczorowski's kick was good and UMass had the lead.

Palazzi's run, his fourth rushing touchdown of the season, was keyed by a block from Barrett and his own read of the safety. Palazzi also may have confused UMass fans by wearing reserve quarterback Jim Simeone's uniform after tearing his own.

"It was a play we had used before and got stopped," Palazzi said. "I'm supposed to decide what to do depending on how much the safety comes up to cover, he was out of ther play so I kept on going. The guts threw some great blocks, give them the credit."

BU, however, wasn't done. The Terriers drove down to the UMass 25 with 2:21 to go as reserve quarterback Jim Schuman (in for Pat Mancini after he went out with a first quarter rib injury) completed four passes, two to All-American split end Billy Brooks (who killed UMass with 10 catches for 144 yards).



On a second and ten at the 25, the UMass defense made its play of the game as Paul Manganaro and Mike Dwyer busted through the line and bore down on Schuman.

Schuman was looking to pass to Pettus on a screen, but Dwyer, all 6-2, 275 pounds of him, crushed Pettus (all 5-10, 190 pounds of him) in the backfield after Schuman faked a hand-off. Manganaro kept up his pursuit, sacking Schuman for an eight yard loss back to the 32.

A pass to Brooks netted 11 yards but no first down, Dussell was called in and missed the field goal.

"We weren't about to lose this one," said Manganaro, UMass' 222-pound answer to Mark Gastineau. "We've played so well this season that we didn't want to let it go to waste."

CHESTNUT HILL—It took about ten minutes for the top-ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team to get used to the artifical turf at Boston College's Alumni Stadium and once they did, the eighth-ranked Eagles lost any opportunity at an upset.

"It (the turf) is very fast," said freshman Beth Roundtree, who scored the gamewinner in UMass' 2-0 victory over the Eagles for the Minutewomen's 14th consecutive win of the year. "It was hard getting used to the turf. You had to have precise timing."

It was Roundtree and Bowsher that displayed precise timing with 11:04 gone in the first half. Bowsher sent a pass down the sideline to Roundtree, who picked it up and made a move between two Eagle defenders to go one-on-one with Eagle goalie before blasting the ball in the left side.

UMass (14-0-0) added an insurance goal with 31:25 to go in the game as Michele Powers scored off a long pass from Carolyn Micheel.

"They are an unbelieveably strong team," Eagle coach Suzanne Kaplan said."They took advantage whenever we made mistakes."

UMass outshot the Eagles 8-4 but Boston College (10-4-1) never really had any strong opportunties to score. UMass used its speed advantage on the foward line to keep pressure on the Eagle defense for a majority of the contest, played before an estimated 400 fans.

The Minutewomen finish up the regular season with a home match against Springfield on Saturday. The NCAA playoffs begin a week later.

Following its sluggish 1-0 victory over Dartmouth on Tuesday, the fifth-ranked University of Massachusetts field hockey team was given a two day rest by coach Pam Hixon in hopes of rejuvenating her squad, exhausted from eight weeks of activity.

Rested and ready to play, the Minutewomen crushed the University of Rhode Island, 4-0, Saturday at Totman field.

"The couple of days off really helped the team. We came back with a renewed enthusiasm and were ready to play," Hixon said.

On a beautiful afternoon before a large group of potential high school recruits, the Minutewomen scored early and never looked back to run their record to 11-2-2.

Six and-a-half minutes into the game, senior All-America defenseman Megan Donnelly put UMass on the board, the winning tally coming off a corner from sophomore right wing Amy Robertson.

Junior forward Lisa Griswold increased the UMass lead to 2-0 with 11:39 remaining in the first half as she intercepted a clearing pass and knocked it past the Rhode Island goalkeeper.

UMass led 2-0 at the half, but had the goal been a little wider, the Minutewomen could have led by many more.

"I think today we needed the goal about a foot bigger. We had the ball around the goal all day, but I could have been happier with a few more," Hixon said.

The second half mirrored the first as senior Judy Morgan snuffed Ram hopes by pushing a loose ball past the goalkeeper, extending the lead to 3-0. Senior forward Chris Kocot added the final tally with seven minutes remaining, picking up a rebound and firing into the right corner.

UMass outshot the Rams, 38-2, and had more corners, 22-1.

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team continued its home field domination and kept alive NCAA tournament hopes with a 3-0 shutout over Boston College on Saturday.

The victory improved the Minutemen's record to 13-5, 10-2 in New England, and 9-0 on Boyden FIeld.

UMass jumped out on top on a goal by sophmore Andy Bing at the 9:24 mark. The Minutemen's leading scorer came through with a typical Bing play.

The forward stole a pass just over midfield, rushed the middle, and fired a shot from 25 yards along the ground past BC goalkeeper Eric Hasbun's right.

The lead increased to 2-0 on a Tom Uschok goal coming off a cornerkick. Junior Ferdie Adoboe crossed the ball from left to right and Ushock blasted it from 10 yards out into the left corner.

Sophmore Brian Sullivan closed out the scoring for UMass. The hard-working forward took a pass from freshman F.J. Zwicklbauer behind the Eagle defense and broke in alone. Sullivan unloaded a shot over Hasbun's head into the top of the net.

Massachusetts goalkeeper Sam Ginsgurg is now 8-0 on the season with five shutouts. UMass' coach Jeff Gettler is pleased with the freshman's performance this year.

"You never know how a freshman will be," said Gettler. "Certainly Sam has done real well. We still go to Donnie (Donahue) for the games. Today Sam earned his shutout."

The Minutemen are at Springfield College tonight for a 7 p.m. game. The Chiefs play on artificial turf. UMass is 1-1 playing on phoney surfaces this season.

Names show up as sponsors

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The names of six employees of the University of Massachusetts, in a violation of state law, appeared as sponsors for a fund-raising benefit for a congressional candidate.

The six had agreed to make $50 contributions to the campaign of U.S. Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., but had not been informed that their names would appear on the invitation to the fund-raiser, said Ralph Whitehead, a journalism professor and one of the six contributors.

State employees may make contributions to political campaigns, but state law prohibits direct or indirect solicitation of campaign contributions.

"It was an honest mistake, though a technical violation," an aide to Rep. Markey said. "It was miscommunication. People had agreed to be sponsors, but we did not realize listing their names would be a violation."

The aide said none of the sponsors were soliciting funds and that the fund-raiser, a brunch at the home of Hampshire College President, Adele Simmons, would not affect any legislation concerning the University.

"It was an honest mistake, though a technical violation...It was miscommunication," Aide to Rep. Markey said in reference to names appearing on sponsor list.

Whitehead said he was asked by a member of the Markey campaign to contribute to the campaign. "In fundraising," he said, "certain terms are used to distinguish different giving levels. I had not known the appearance of my name would be questionable." Whitehead said he sent a letter to Simmons' asking that his name be removed as a sponsor.

"People are sensitive about the (Massachusetts Chancellor of Higher Education, John B.) Duff affair," Markey's aide said.

Duff is under investigation for allegedly trying to solicit campaign contributions from members of the Board of Regents of Higher Education.

"In the future," Markey's aide said, "we will be more careful in asking people if they are state employees."

Bill to up activity fee to be voted on today

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Students vote today from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the Campus Center Concourse for a referendum which seeks to raise the Student Activity Fee $12 per year to cover present services and resources provided by the Student Activity Trust Fund.

The referendum, if approved, will raise the Student Activity Fee from $88 to $100 per year for each student. SATF money enables the SGA to provide services, activities, and advocacy to the student community.

"We haven't had an increase in six years," said Dianne Rossi, SGA treasurer . "With inflation, we have had to take money from the RSOs (Registered Student Organizations). I would like to see more money go to these groups," she said.

William Collins, a member of Students For Government by Referendum said he will oppose increases in the activity fee until changes are made in the distribution of funds.

"My conviction is the fee increase will allow the SGA to continue its wasteful, self-serving system instead of re-examining and restructuring their priorities," he said.

The referendum will be binding only if there is a 7.5 percent voter turn-out. The increase is considered vital by the SGA treasurer and budget committee chair, who have said 55 of 80 student organizatons supported by the trust fund will lose funding if the referendum is not approved.

While other RSOs favor the increase, Collins said his group, which has 10 members and receives no funding from the trust fund, opposes it because the increase will not be used to fund any new activities.

"Two-thirds of the activity fee goes into paychecks. I feel it should go into actual activities," he said. "The SGA and the BOG (Board of Governors) should cut down on their own paychecks before they touch any smaller organizations."

"I have been a member of the SGA for three years and president of SWAG (Southwest Area Government) for one. During this time, I haven't taken one paycheck." Collins said. "I feel students should work for students, not for money."

Rossi disagreed with Collins over the ethics of students being paid with activity fee money. "It would be nice if all students could afford to work without being paid. But people with skills and the motivation

Public forum to discuss Star Wars plan

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A public forum addressing the Reagan administrations' proposed Space Defense Initiative, known as Star Wars, will be held at 8 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom.

The forum, sponsored by the University Peacemakers and UMass Republican Club, will feature a speaker from each side of the issue fielding questions from the audience.

Vera Kistiakowsky, a professor of physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and board member for the peace group Council for a Liveable World, will speak on the production research and technical feasability of the system, said Jonathan Spaulding of the Peacemakers.

Opposing Kistiakowsky will be A.T. Stair, Jr., the chief scientist for the U.S. Air Force Geophysics Laboratory at Hanscom Air Force Base in Bedford, Mass., said Gilbert Stair of the UMass Republican Club. The Air Force official will speak on the strategies and nuts and bolts of the system.

The Star Wars plan is a "hot issue," Loren Spivack, president of the Republican Club said. "There's already been a lot of funding into Star Wars and most people don't know what it's all about." The forum, he added, may help people make a better personal decision on the plan' effectiveness.

The forum will point out "a large community of scientists that are not behind the military buildup," Spaulding said. Many scientists, he said, are interested in "constructive things with their technical knowledge instead of destructive things."

Stair said both speakers will focus on different aspects of the system, which is why it's a forum rather than debate.

Those in attendance, Stair said, "will learn a lot even if they don't agree with all the opinions."

The Republican club invited the Air Force official Stair while the Peacemakers invited the physics professor, Kistiakowsky.

Rent Review Approved

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

After three and one half hours of debate last night, Amherst Town Meeting voters approved a motion requesting the state to establish a town rent review board to resolve complaints of excessive rents.

Members amended the motion calling for a review board five times before passing it, by a vote of 119-69.

The town will petition the state General Court to propose the establishment of a five-member board. Members would be appointed by the Town Manager and the Board of Selectmen.

Town Meeting rejected two other proposals addressing the housing shortage in Amherst, both sponsored by resident Stephen Puffer. One of the rejected motions would have rezoned parts of the town for construction of more rental units, and another recommended the town establish a $200,000 fund to subsidize tenants.

"Rent review offers tenants clear protection against excessive rent increases," sponsor of the review article Kenneth Mosakowski said. "I believe that we have found a solution to an issue which has been before us for at least a decade."

Most of the debate centered around a part of the article which would call for an annual review by Town Meeting of a rent review board decision on landlord income.

The section which asked Town Meeting members to approve annually a board-established "fair and reasonable net operating income for landlords" was said to be too complex an issue for Meeting members to debate.

But Mosakowski asserted the importance of Town Meeting input on all determinations of the review board.

"As excruciating as debate is sometimes, I would like to maintain input at Town Meeting," he said before members voted to delete the disputed part of the article.

Another article section which stated that two review board members stand for town election each year was debated by Town Meeting for an hour before being defeated.

Mosakowski proposed an amendment to his motion requesting that the Town Manager appoint review board members and submit the appointment to the Board of Selectmen for final approval, instead of requiring a town election.

"This (review) board has a great deal of power and I think it should be elected," former Rent Control Study Commission Secretary Linda Smith said.

Town Meeting member Vincent O'Connor said that the amendment to nullify town election of board members "is not a well considered amendment."

But member Hilda Greenbaum echoed fears of an elected board being an unqualified one.

"I'm scared to death, frankly, of an elected board," she said before a vote approved the establishment of a review board by the Town Manager and selectmen.

The motion to establish a town rent subsidy, which was heavily lobbied for by a group of landlords, was rejected after members expressed concern that it was in effect a subsidy to landlords instead of tenants.

Soviet sailor questioned by U.S. reps

BELLE CHASE, La. (AP)— A soviet sailor twice forced back to his ship after apparent defection attempts was taken off the vessel yesterday for questioning by U.S. authorities who had spent the weekend seeking to interview him, officials said.

The seaman, Miroslav Medvid, was taken by a Coast Guard lauch to the cutter Salvia, where a State Department official who speaks Russian and other U.S. representatives began interviewing him shortly before 6 p.m., State Department spokesman Peter Martinez said.

"Soviet representatives also are on the ship," he said. "They had agreed earlier in the day to this procedure."

U.S. officials earlier yesterday renewed their weekend demands to question the man in a "non-threatening environment."

He had jumped from the ship Thursday and Friday, but was returned to it by Border Patrol agents who apparently could not communicate with him and thought he was a stowaway. The ship, the Marshal Koniev, stayed at anchor in the Mississippi River as U.S. and Soviet officials discussed the man's situation.

"We wish to interview him in appropriate surroundings to determine his true intentions," White House spokesman Larry Speakes said in Washington.

He said administration officials discussed the situation with Soviet officials both in Washington and aboard the ship, which was anchored downstream from New Orleans.

Speakes refused to say whether President Reagan had ordered the ship held in U.S. waters pending resolution of the dispute.

Asked about the way the case has been handled, Speakes said the president has recieved "a rather detailed report to indicate there was difficulty in determining his intentions because of the interpretation problems there. Once the matter was examined closely, then State Department officials were alerted."

¼state Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said the United States will make no move toward defection procedures until the sailor is interviewed at a location away from the Soviet freighter.

Top Nazi war criminal ready to surrender

Munich, West Germany (AP)—Alois Brunner, one of the world's most wanted Nazi war criminals, says he is ready to surrender after living for years in Syria, a West German magazine reported yesterday.

Nazi war criminal Alois Brunner.

The magazine Bunte reported the 73-year-old Brunner, who was anassociate of Adolf Eichmann in the Nazi SS and the deportation of Jews to death camps, said he would give himself up for trial on condition he not be sent to Israel.

The Israelis captured Eichmann in Argentina and took him to Israel where he was tried, convicted and put to death in 1962 for crimes against Jews.

Brunner is considered the most wanted Nazi war criminal since the discovery this year of a body belived to be that of concentration camp doctor Josef Mengele.

Nazi hunters such as Beate Klarsfeld have alleged that Brunner was responsible for the deaths of 100,000Jews.

The magazine Bunte quoted the Nazi fugitive as saying that in his escape after World War II, he recieved official documents under a false name from American authorities and worked for the U.S. Army as a driver.

"I'm ready to go and respond before an international court," Bunte quoted Brunner as saying.

Norbert Sakowski, Bunte deputy chief editor, said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press that Brunner set the condition that he "not be handed over to the Israelis."

In Vienna, Austria, Simon Wiesenthal, who has traced many war criminals, said the reported offer by Brunner is "rhetoric."

Halloween fears of tainted treats exaggerated

New York (AP)— Fears about "Halloween sadists" who give trick-or-treaters candy containing sharp objects or poisons are exagerated, based on a myth that diverts attention from greater dangers to children, a sociologist says.

"We've blown this thing way out of proportion," said Joel Best, a sociology professor at the California State University at Fresno, who described what he called the urban legend of the halloween sadist in the November issue of Psychology Today.

While incidents of tainted candy occur occasionally, "there is no reason to feel that Halloween sadism is a major threat to children," Best said Sunday in a telephone interview. "I think we waste, nationally, just an enormous amount of energy on this problem and it isn't worth it."

Attention would be better spent on hazards like unsafe toys, cribs, and other unsafe products, as well as school bus accidents, he said. Important Halloween dangers are those of children being hit by cars or tangled in their costumes, he said.

In the magazine, Best wrote, "Everyone knows that Halloween sadists have been responsible for countless deaths and serious injuries. Fortunately, everyone is wrong."

He reports finding no evidence of death or serious injury from Halloween sadists between 1958 and 1984 in the Los Angeles Times, the Chicago Tribune, the Fresno Bee and the index to the New York Times. No reports of serious injuries appeared in an index to popular magazines or a medical journal database, he said.

The newspaper search found 76 specific instances of tainted Halloween candy, and allusions to hundreds more, Best said. One child required 10 stitches, which was by far the most serious injury reported, he said Sunday. Most injuries were on the order of pinpricks.

None met his definition of serious injury, which included hospitalization, he said.

Best excluded a 1974 Texas case of an 8-year-old who died after his father gave him cyanide-laced candy. In a 1970 case of apparent Halloween sadism, a child's death was later traced to heroin he had found in a relative's home, Best said.

Best said he was unaware of a Cranston, R.I., youth who collapsed in 1982 after eating a candy bar that police said was treated with an insecticide.

He said his point is not that such incidents never happen, but that they are not as widespread as believed.

Pulitzer Prize winner to speak

J. Anthony Lukas, Pulitzer Prize winning reporter, will speak today at the at 4 p.m. in Memorial Hall about his new book on the Boston school integeration and busing crisis.

Lukas' book, Common Ground, traces the history of the crisis through the life stories of three families, one Irish, one Black and one Yankee. It also includes profiles of Boston leaders.

Professor Howard M. Ziff, chairman of Journalistic Studies at the University, describes the book as "a James Michener type of saga. Because he followed these families so closely for ten years, the book is a very personal account of the crisises," he said.

Lukas will be spending the day on campus as a guest of of the Journalistic Studies department. He will also be meeting with journalism students and will give interviews to a local radio station and newspapers.

"The official title of his talk, 'Reading Boston: Reporting as a Liberal Art' is significant," Ziff said, "in that it suggests the approach to journalism that emphasizes the solid liberal arts background that we on this campus find so congenial."

Lukas was awarded his Pulitzer Prize in the late 1960s for his work on the subject of Vietnam. He worked as a reporter for the New York Times for a number of years. The lecture is open to the public.

Student is arrested, charged with rape

A University of Massachusetts student was arrested and charged with rape Friday afternoon on the ninth floor of Kennedy Tower, campus police said.

According to the Daily Hampshire Gazette, he was arraigned in Northampton District Court later that afternoon, and released on $10,000 personal bond on the condition he stay away from UMass dormitories and the victim.

According to court documents, the alleged rape took place on Oct. 4. A UMass police report said that the victim and the alleged rapist were at a local bar that night, and he invited her back to his dorm for a party.

When the two arrived, there was no party and they went to the alleged rapist's room, the report said. There, he is alleged to have struck the victim on the head, raped her, and then threatened her with bodily harm if she reported the matter to the police, the statement says.

A pre-trial conference is scheduled on the matter on Oct. 30.

In other police reports:

• A 19-year-old male student, and another man and a woman who were not students were taken at gun point to the police station Friday night near Butterfield House, police said.

Police received a report from a security guard of three people carrying guns, described as a 38, a smaller pistol and a rifle. The police found the people, took them to the police station and discovered the guns were plastic. The three people said they were playing 'bang bang games.' The toys were confiscated and the three were warned, police said.

• A student received minor bruises when he was assaulted on the 13th floor of John Quincy Adams Tower Friday night, police said.

The man said he knew the first name of his assailant and had had previous problems with him, police said.

• A student was arrested and charged with breaking and entering in the nighttime, larceny of a building and receiving stolen property under $100, Saturday afternoon near the Student Union Building, police said.

The man was confronted carrying a television set. The set was confiscated and it was discovered it had been stolen from an off-campus apartment, police said.

• An 18-year-old man was issued a trespassing notice Friday night on Sunset Avenue.

The man was jumping into the bucket of one of the Amherst Fire Department trucks while they were on a training call, police said.

• A 21-year-old student was arrested late Saturday night on Massachusetts Avenue and charged with driving under the influence of alcohol and running a red light, police said.

• A 20-year-old man was arrested and charged with possession of marijuana Saturday night on the third floor of Gorman House, police said.

• A 1960 MG received over $1000 in damages when it was vandalized Friday night inside of the McGuirk Stadium where it was parked over night,police said.

Organized tenants need not fear harassment

By MICHELLE GOODWIN
Collegian Correspondent

A tenant of Puffton Village, who received a $3000 settlement against the owner, stressed last week that if legal steps are taken against landlords, tenants should not fear filing a complaint against a faulty landlord.

At a tenants meeting in the Campus Center last Wednesday night, students discussed organizing a tenants union and learned they can legally withold rent if a landlord violates state health codes.

The tenants also heard from Bob Tedesco, who was awarded a financial settlement last May from Puffton Village management after he filed a legal complaint.

Tom Coish, an attorney from the UMass Legal Services Office told the tenants during the meeting that a state "warrant of habitability" guarantees that "landlords have a legal responsibility to their tenants to lease habitable apartments, free of any health violations."

Many of the tenants at the meeting were residents of Puffton Village, which was the target of criticism due to an excessive number of cockroaches in the apartment units.

"If a landlord knowingly rents apartments infested by cockroaches, they are in clear violation of the health warrant," he said, "and they are legally liable for it."

The tenants, Coish said, are legally entitled to withold rent until health violations are corrected and if they follow three steps:

• File a complaint with the state Board of Health.

• Inform the landlord of the decision to withold rent by a letter of intent.

• Put rent money aside in a bank account to prove good intent.

A common concern among tenants at the meeting was possible harassment by the landlord after the complaint has been filed, Coish said that there is an anti-reprisal law which protects tenants from eviction. Puffton Village owner Stephen Puffer has said that he "will be monitoring residents who file complaints in order to justify the legitimacy of their claims" and that he is "very aware of the complaints."

Coish said that witholding money through an organized tenants union is the best way to achieve results.

"The key action is in numbers," he said.

More information about tenant's rights is available by contacting Lee Knowles at the Legal Services Office, Coish said.

Tour of Russia planned

The Amherst College Russian department is again coordinating a three-week study tour of the Soviet Union in January. This year's itinerary includes extended visits to Moscow and Leningrad with short excursions to Novgorod, Zagorsk, Pushkin and Pavlosk.

The trip, which departs from JFK International Airport in New York City on Jan. 2, 1986 and returns Jan. 23 with an overnight in Helsinki, Finland, is scheduled during a time when Soviet cultural life is at its height.

The tour cost, including all transportation, meals, hotel accomodations, guide services and two theatre performances, is $1,574 plus a $35 visa charge and a $3 departure tax. Space must be reserved and travel deposits submitted by Friday. Further information is available from Professor Greta Slobin, who will be leading the trip, at 542-2060, or Barbara Mudgett at 542-2350.

Don't accept bad ideas with good

I write this letter in response to comments made on the Black Affairs page of the Collegian (Oct. 25) concerning one Louis Farrkhan of the Nation of Islam.

It is true that Farrakhan has made several good suggestions as to how blacks can improve their financial status by supporting one another economically, however his rhetoric fails and becomes even dangerous when it switches to the subject of social relations. The comment by Prof. Davis of the Afro-Am Studies Program does nothing to alleviate this problem. The suggestion that the open bigotry of Farrakhan is somehow generally reflective of the feelings of black people as a whole is not only false but insulting.

I am black and not anti-Semetic, and while I will readily admit that I do not constitute a representative sample, neither do I feel that I am alone in taking this position. I wonder too whether the majority of blacks in America facing the ubiquitous racism which still exists in our society are ready to become part of an ideology that, with some minor alterations, is the same as that spouted by the tradition enemies of black Americans.

The Ku Klux Klan, the American Nazi Party, and the Aryan Nation also want to divide the country, they too want a feudal power structure, they too hate Jews and misrepresent their bigotry as ethnic solidarity. I reject their theses as I reject Farrakhan's, and for the same reasons, they are false and largely born of ignorance.

While some of Farrakhan's, and for the same reasons, they are false and largely born of ignorance.

While some of Farrakhan's ideas are good, most are not and as one need not eat the chaff with the grain, one should not accept bad ideas just because they are couched among good ones.

The strangest thing happened

I had a very strange dream last night, and I'm still not decided as to whether or not it was a nightmare. It began innocently enough.

I was driving down Main Street with a friend of mine, and the light changed from green to yellow. I decided to try my luck, but as soon as I had exited the intersection, the blue lights were flashing in my rearview.

As the officer approached the car, I prepared the perfunctory why-I-ran-the yellow/red-light spiel, but I was cut short.

"No seat belt, huh? What's the matter with you, kid? Don't you know the law?," he asked. "For your safety you're required to wear your seatbelt." I was confused, and a ticket ensued. I noticed a motorcyclist driving by without a helmet on, and turned to my friend.

"What about that? Is that safe?," I asked. "What do you want?," the officer demanded. "Another ticket?" I decided to rest my argument, and headed home to take a shower and do some studying.

(At this point my sleep became very restless, but there was more to come.) As I descended the stairs to go to the shower I was ticketed for not holding onto the railing, and then again for an untied shoelace. I decided to hop into the shower, to cleanse away my anxieties. No sooner had I stepped into the shower, when in popped a helmeted head.

"Sorry, citizen, but there's no mat on your shower floor. That's a violation of the Personal Health Safety Act, and I'm afraid you'll have to come with me." He grabbed my arm and the next thing I knew, I was in a straightjacket, still wet and very confused. As he pulled me away, my feet hit a wet patch on the floor. I was falling, falling, falling...

I woke up on the floor, sweating, and wrapped in my blankets.

The Geneva players' chances for success

With the November summit in Generva between Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev almost upon us, I've noticed jockeying for postion by both men, especially Gorbachev. In his recent trip to Paris, he tried to gain the support of the Wests' liberal press by making a disarmament proposal that would actually further the Soviet lead in the arms race.

Now the casual reader might be asking himself "How could a disarmament proposal that is such a total and complete canard win the sympathy of any western journalist, no matter how liberal?" The answer to that is that there are some who believe that any arms reduction agreement is better than none, and Mr. Gorbachev is simply playing up to this constituency. Nonetheless, he still made the proposal in an effort to pass himself off as being serious about disarmament.

While in France, the Gucci-slick Gorbachev unveiled his ploy of offering to cut Soviet offensive strategic missiles by half, if the United States would do the same and also give up its plans to build a so-called "Star Wars" strategic defense system.

It should be pointed out that this seemingly innocent proposal actually leaves the Soviets in a better position than now exists, because of their closer proximity to France, Belgium, and Britain, as opposed to our missiles to Leningrad and Moscow. Unfortunately for the Comrade, the American people did not bite, and the damage done the Soviets by this bogus proposal far outweights the cosmetic success of the French folly that delineated Gorbachev as the new, cosmopolitan Soviet leader with mass appeal.

I'd also like to point out that Gorbachev stands nothing to lose in an unsuccessful summit. If the talks go sour, his hand will be strengthened internally. He will look strong to his generals. As for the rest of the world, he will suavely blame the president. On the other hand, Reagan will have to answer to the people of the United States and western Europe. This is why it is clearly in his best interest (not to mention the rest of the worlds') for the summit to be a success.

With the summit just weeks away, the people of the United States should hope that our president is cautious during the talks. It would not be in the best interests of the US to strike a disarmament deal just for the sake of a deal. A bad disarmament accord is much worse than the thought of continuing the arms race at our current pace, which, ironically, may be what has prevented the dreaded WWIII from occuring for the past 40 years.

Star Wars: costly farce

Jon Spaulding

The militarization of space is well underway, but it is not yet too late to stop it. Now is the time to take action, before the momentum becomes too great to prevent this next step in the arms race from being taken. The Reagan administration is promoting space weaponry under the doublespeak title "Strategic Defense Initiative," hoping to con the U.S. public into thinking that the purpose of the program is to defend our population from nuclear attack. Remember, the people promoting Star Wars are the same group that fantasizes about limited nuclear war in Europe, nuclear warning shots, and ultimately, winnable nuclear war. Let's not be so gullible as to fall prey to their ridiculous, yet slick and well-funded public relations campagin.

As Dr. Vera Kistiakowsky will show their presentation tonight at UMass, Star Wars cannot function effectively as a defense against full-scale nuclear attack. Even if the system could shoot down 98 percent of the incoming ICBM's (as claimed by its advocates), the remaining 2 percent could still cause millions of deaths. In addition, Star Wars does nothing to stop cruise missiles or bombers. It is simply a lie that population defense is the purpose of Star Wars. To understand the real motive behind building Star Wars, we need to examine how it would fit into the larger strategic picture.

For many years the arms race has no longer been merely quantitative. The real race now is a qualitative one for first-strike capability; i.e., the ability to attack the other country and eliminate their ability to retaliate. It is in the context of this race that Star Wars is being contemplated. As an interceptor of a very weakened retaliatory strike, Star Wars might serve the military's needs well. Certainly the Soviets perceive Star Wars as another step in the direction of U.S. first-strike capability. And no doubt there is a small group in the U.S. who salivate at the idea of being able to threaten the USSR with a first strike. Clearly it is the responsibility of the majority of us closer to the abyss of nuclear war.

What would result if the Star Wars program were allowed to go ahead? Surely the Soviets would respond by developing counter-measures and drastically increasing the number of missiles. Since the Unites States would feel no obligation tohonor any of the other arms control treaties, Star Wars could escalate the arms race beyond the poing of no return.

The base of teh US-Soviet conflict is in the human, political realm, and the weapons are merely a reflection of this human relations problem. The answer cannot lie in developing a supre high-tech computer-controlled laser weapon system. That wouldn't bring the United States and the USSR any closer together or help break down the fear and lack of communication. Immediate moves must be taken to stop and reverse the arms race, but it is true that these agreements alone won't lead to meaningful disarmament. A Comprehensive Test Ban and a freeze should be coupled with massive educational and cultural exchange programs in order to build citizen-to-citizen contact. The people of both countries might then be motivated to force their governments to work out a long-range plan fr nuclear disarmamaent. This won't happen, though, unless each one of us puts as much energy as possible into working for it, beginning now.

Jon Spaulding is a member of the UMass Peacemakers.

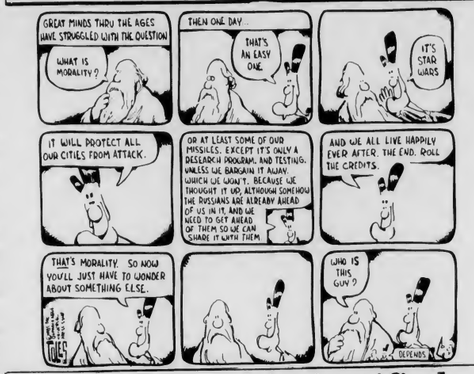
SDI: something better

Loren Spivack

For years now world peace has been maintained by a concept of Mutual Assured Destruction. Under this system, both the United States and the Soviet Union are deterred from launchying a "first strike" nuclear attack because they realize that the other side would be able to retaliate and destroy them completely. While this nuclear balance has prevented the outbreak of World War III so far, it is hardly an ideal situation.

President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative offers the world something better. Emphasizing the defensive potentials of an anti-ballistic missile system rather than the retaliatory capabilities of ICBMs, strategic defense utilizes a weapons system that kills missiles instead of people. Basically, it would consist of a system of satellites that would be capable of shooting nuclear missiles down shortly after they were launched. Potentially, these defensive weapons could make nuclear arsenals obsolete and bring the world out of the age of nuclear terror.

Although Gorbachev criticisizes SDI almost every time he opens his mouth, in reality the Soviets are great believers in the program. They've been working on it themselves for years. Therein lies another reason why it is vital for the United States to proceed with strategic defense. If the Soviets were to develop such a system before the free world did, they would be able to threaten us with nuclear assault, while remaining immune to retaliation. This situation would give the Soviet Union complete military dominance. We must ensure the free world's safety.



Among the arguments against SDI is that it would be terribly expensive. Although it is too soon to calculate an exact price tag for the program, it must be considered that SDI would potentially make other weapons systems obsolete and thus save money. (The current nuclear deterrant is expensive also.)

SDI's detractors insist that it could never be 100 percent effective. Such lack of confidence in American technology and ingenuity is unjustified, especially in this age of rapid scientific advance. But even if the anti-missile system were only partially effective, the Soviets would never know which of their missiles would get through and which would not. They, therefore, would never be able to launch a first strike with the confidence that they could destroy all of our retaliatory capabilities.

Also, it is argued that the SDI programm would extend the arms space into space and thus "militarize" the heavens. This argument, it would seem, has the situation backwards. When a country launches nuclear weapons, space is being militarized. When a installs a satellite system thast destroys those ballistic missiles, space is being demilitarized.

We have before us nothing less than the opportunity to bring the world into a new and better era. We can leave the nuclear arms race behind, along with its enormous costs, its terror, and its inherently destabalizing effects on world peace. For the first time in the nuclear age, we can design a national defense around defense instead of offense. By supporting President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, we could reach this new era in our lifetimes. Or we could do nothing, and wait for the Soviet Union to achieve permanent dominance in military power. The time has come to learn the facts and take the first brave steps into a new world.

Loren Spivack is the president of the UMass Republican Club.

Some censorship justified

Rusty Denton

To some people, the best form of government is one that allows them to do whatever is right in their own eyes. In the Pioneer Valley, that includes everything radical. I sometimes get the impression that local activists want to run the world without the world telling them what to do.

It is no surprise, then, that the local media have featured so much outrage at censorship-related events. In the last few weeks, we've been told about "Accuracy in Academia" auditing UMass courses, "Washington wives" trying to get ratings on record albums, and "National Banned Books Week" celebrating profane classics a month ago. If I'm to believe the rock stars, professors, and jounalists, this is an unprecedented frontal attack on the First Amendment rights, and it restricts their latitude of creativity. I have to wonder how much of their argument has to do with genuine fear of losing their freedom of thought and how much has to do with being held liable for their freedom.

I understand that "Accuracy" has a conservative ax to grind—they say they don't, but it seems to me that they are exercising their own freedom of speech in a responsible manner when they insist that academic freedom requires rigorous academic honesty: no conclusions without facts, no facts without context. Let's eliminate opinion as gospel.

There is much less opinion regarding record albums. The lyrics, if intelligible, are either obscene, or they are not. I've heard more than enough which rely on grunts, quivers, and screams of passion. I have to wonder what kind of parents would allow their children to bring this trash into their home—probably not the kind who would bother to look at a censor's label. But I think the "Washington wives" (wives of U.S. Senators) have some points. If most Americans don't want their children championing trashy songs, then they have a constitutional right to demand labelling. Some may say this limits freedom of expression, but what one can say to minors without their parents' consent is a pretty fuzzy area, anyway. Indeed, other forms of expression are constitutionally limited; published libel and obscenity, child pornography, treasonous statements, etc.

I find a strong position against any form of censorship is a fairly hypocritical attitude in the Pioneer Valley. Although most of us don't think of it that way, the local community employs a great deal of censorship of racism, sexism, "heterosexism," prejudice against the handicapped, intolerance of others' opinions, and more. In fact, there seems to be a widespread attitude in America that Christianity is censorious and prejudiced and should be censord out of our public institutions—reverse censorship as it were.

What Christianity is being replaced by is sometimes called secular humanism, which basically means that one does whatever one thinks is right. I think this is a dangerous trend. The last 20 years have witnessed abortion, multiple divorce, children suing their parents, parents letting handicapped newborns die, hard core pornography, "mercy killings" of the elderly, legalized prostitution (Nevada), children taken from their families by the state, revisionism in history, a national epidemic of drug use, a huge rise in violent crime, chaos in the schools, and on and on. The national sense of moral shock is atrophied; there is no shame.

I have to wonder. Our parents' ideas shocked our grandparents; the cause of our generation shock our parents. What are our children going to do to shock us? Kill the elderly (us) when we can't work anymore? Sterilize men and women after one child? Have sex worship? From where I sit, the radical changes in the last 20 years have come as a result of constantly challenging the limits of the law. Censorship is a reasonable way for the law to push back...before it's too late.

Greenpeace: direct action, diversity

I would like to clear up some of the misperceptions Joseph McCormack has about Greenpeace. Greenpeace doesn't exist to police the oceans to make the world safe for whales and seals. The name Greenpeace says it all. Greenpeace is an organization devoted to the environment and peace. The central component that has brought Greenpeace to fame is their philosophy of direct action, not seals and whales.

Greenpeace has focused direct action on whatever issues have needed immediate attention. These issues include: ocean dumping of nuclear wastes, acid rain, preserving Antarctica from exploitation, and clean water, as well as the wildlife issues. Greenpeace has offices all over this country and all over this world and is sufficiently strong to deal with a wide range of global issues. It is an insult to Greenpeace to ask them to babysit the seals. The seals have nearly been saved, now it is time for Greenpeace to work on the rest of the world.

UNITED TECHNOLOGIES IS LOOKING FOR ANOTHER WATT.

James Watt looked thoughtfully at the Newcomen engine and saw that it was inefficient, expensive, and slow as a mule in mud. He figured out how to improve it, and the Industrial Revolution came to pass.

We could use people like that.

The reason we lead the world in things like aircraft engines, elevators, and air conditioning, is that we're never really satisfied. We keep improving things. Even new things like spacesuits and weapons control systems.

We're looking for people who never think anything's perfect. People with your kind of Class-A education, plus a mind that can make a brilliant leap of imagination and then buckle down to the nuts and bolts.

In return, we're offering the worldwide companies of United Technologies. Companies where 12,000 engineers, right up to top management, speak your language.

The first step's easy. Stop by the campus placement office, or write for more information and a reprint of this ad. United Technologies, P.O. Box 1379, Hartford, CT 06143.

United Technologies means Pratt & Whitney, Hamilton Standard, Otis, Carrier, Automotive Group, United Technologies Microelectronics Center, Norden, Chemical Systems, Essex, Sikorsky and United Technologies Research Center.

BLACK AFFAIRS

NSBE has their second annual job recruiting fair

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

The National Society of Black Engineers (NSBE) held their second annual Career Fair Monday in the Campus Center auditorium. Several companies participated in the fair including GTE, Pratt and Whitney, Ford Motor Company, the Navy, Raytheon, IBM Endicott and IBM General Technologies Division, New England Telephone, General Dynamics, Texas Instruments, Sanders, Data General, Xerox, and General Electric.

Anthony Gee, president of the NSBE, made the opening presnetation. "I hope this will be the start of a lasting relationship between the companies and the students," he said.

Reynolds Winslow, an advisor to the NSBE, hope that the companies would "Be as helpful as the students are nervous."

Many companies are looking for different things in a potential applicant. Pratt and Whitney is looking mostly for mechanical engineers. "We want people who demonstrate hard work and have a good cumulative average. We look at the whole person to see if they're good or not," said Steven Samuel, a mechanical engineer at Pratt and Whitney and a 1983 graduate of the Universsity of Massachusetts.

At IBM, "We're looking for the best qualified people," said Thomas W. Guerriero, manager of the data systems division at IBM in Kingston, NY.

IBM works very closely with the university's co-operative program. "UMass is a corporate school. We have examined the school and the programs are compatible to what we need at IBM. The academic quality is very good," said Jerry Hill, a representative of the Corporation College Relations department at IBM.

Many of the companies were interested in the student's resume. "The resume explains background, classes, and other job backgrounds," said Benjamin Berokhin, a computer systems engineer at IBM and a 1984 graduate of UMass.

"A resume is important to any job," Samuel said.

"A resume is very important. It's the first piece of information that we get about a person. The resume gets you the interview and gets interest generated in you," said Ken Mohler, manager of production engineering in federal systems operations at Sanders.

This year's career fair has been set up since the beginning of last semester. "We have a list of companies and invite as many companies as possible. We also produce a resume book of many engineering majors and given them to the companies, so wen a student goes to interview waith a potential employer, they already have their resume," said Charles Sheffield, vice-president of the NSBE.

He believes the career fair is "One of the most important ways for black students to get jobs. There are a lot of opportunities to get summer jobs especially for juniors and seniors."

The UMass chapter of the National Society of Black Engineers has approximately 45 members. There are 130 chapters nationwide and their purpose is "To help minority students with their classes and to provide support," said Nadine Marcellus, a member of NSBE.

Llamas play a good range

The Llamas with Pat On The Back
Sheehan's Cafe
Northampton Thursday, Oct. 24

By JONATHAN PERRY
Collegian Correspondent

The Llamas told a lie.

Although this band opened their set at Sheehan's Cafe Thursday night with XTC's "This is Pop," for the remainder of the evening they played anything but.

Instead, the Llamas delivered razor-edged rock 'n' roll ranging from Chuck Berry to Echo and the Bunnymen. A three-piece band who originally played the Boston area before debuting in Northampton this semester, the Llamas are comprised of UMass students Chris Barber (guitar and vocals), Gerry Powers (lead vocals, bass), and drummer Jon Lev.

During an electrifying evening, the Llamas exuded the energy and enthusiasm that is characteristic of their tough, raw sound. The band dug into a host of tunes primarily by Echo and The Bunneymen, Gang of Four, and the Jam, as well as offering fine versions of Chuck Berry's "Talkin' 'bout You," and Pink Floyd's "Lucifer Sam," which featured Barber's mean, slicing guitar, Powers' aggressive vocals underscored by a pulsating bass line, and Lev's frenetic drumming.

The Bunneymen's "Do It Clean" was done well, and Powers' snarling, corrosive vocals complemented the song nicely. "Read It In Books," a slow, ominous, Bunneymen tune, also highlighted the show, as did Gang of Four's "Damaged Goods," a song built on spit-out vocals, slashing guitar licks, and anchored by vigorous drums.

Maintaining a good-humored rapport with the crowd, the Llamas answered a request from the audience for an improvisational "Batman" jam that got everybody on the floor dancing. The show also featured an impressive amount of Llamas original material. Most of the ban's eight originals have been written over the past few months, and all were strong Thursday night, starting with "Poor Day for Shopping," which featured a strong bass line and innovative guitar. The song was followed by two other originals, "No Place For A Home," and "Granite."

A near-whispering, desparate vocal by Powers highlighted "By The Doorstep," and Barber's thoughtful guitar and crisp, rangy vocals on "Hand Don't Touch" punctuated by Lev's clipped cymbal crashes made it one of the band's best.

DUNCE!
Twenty-five million adult Americans are totally illiterate. Another 35,000,000 are functionally illiterate.
Is America creating a permanent underclass . . . an academic third world?
"Absolutely," answers Reginald Damerell, former professor of education at the University of Massachusetts in his new book, Education's Smoking Gun, which squarely places the blame on the teachers' colleges and graduate schools of education.
"This is a tough, no-holds barred attack on teachers' training that has departed from the fundamental importance of the 3 R's in favor of visual aids. When a nation such as this democracy permits its educational standards to decline because teachers are not adequately trained it is necessary for someone to cry: ' Halt!' "1
He contends that the introduction of black studies, ethnic studies, and bilingual programs have, in fact, harmed most, those whom they were designed to help—minorities. "He damns three practices he encountered while teaching: admittance of graduate students who have abysmal academic records in an effort to offer equal opportunity; the wide-spread attitude that the 3 R's do not come first in education; and the lack of 'a body of knowledge' in the education curriculum."2
"Strong stuff, this, written by one who came into education after a successful advertising career. Like many outsiders, he was appalled at the ignorant, narrow-minded illiterates who peopled the classes, administrations and faculties of far too many university education departments . . . Damerell is sharp and informed, with little patience for the intellectual slums represented by education courses and the empty credentialism of the Ed. D."3 hurlers in John Tudor and Joaquin Andujar. It's too bad that frustration overtook the both of them in game seven.

I hope those so-called owners at Fenway Park are taking notice, this wasn't a hitters Series and Kansas City certainly didn't win on its hitting .

This was a great Series that the Cardinals had chances to win but it was one that showed that the Royals knew how to win. These were the Royals that had battled back and won three straight from the Angels to win the AL West.

They won three in a row from Toronto to win the AL pennant and again pulled it off to beat the Cardinals. This team is simply the best team in baseball when they have to win three games in a row.

The umpires were a disgrace to baseball and next year the best upmires in both leagues should call the Series and the playoffs. But, they didn't cost the Cardinals the Series, nor did they cost the Blue Jays the playoffs.

One call, as in the ninth inning of game six, didn't blow it for the Cards. They should have scored more than one run in game six and they could have won the game three. A team that bats .190 through six games and scored 13 runs in seven games doesn't lose the Series on one umpires call.

St. Louis is a very good team and they proved it by outlasting the Mets for the division and the Dodgers for the pennant. Kansas City is too and they deserve some respect, which I don't think they will get next spring.

Baseball is a team game and the Royals showed how to do it as a team. Kansas City is not the best team in baseball, on paper. St. Louis is better. The Royals are simply the 1985 World Series champions.

tional tournament has become a secondary matter to Sortino and the Minutewomen.

"We need to concentrate on qualifying for the state championships and making the ECAC (East Coast Athletic Conference) tournament," said Sortino. "Our chances there are very good."

VOLLEYBALL HITS: The Minutewomen are coming of a so-so weekend at the University of New Haven Tournament. The spikers lost their opening match against host UNH, 3-15, 15-4, 8-15, 12-15. UMass bounced back to top Army, 15-7, 12-15, 15-10, 15-10, but were swept by Northeastern University, 8-15, 5-15, 13-15, in the round-robin tournament.

"We played a very good, consistent match against Army," said Sortino. "We were just very flat against Northeastern."

UMass now prepares to entertain Southern Connecticut on Wednesday ay Boyden Gymnasium. The Minutewomen attended the Southern Connecticut tourney earlier in the year, but did not meet SCSU in tournament play.

What's it like to be number 1?

Women's soccer finding out

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It's a problem that head coach Kalekeni Banda and the 21 members of the No. 1 University of Massachusetts women's soccer team have never dealt with before.

Being the top team in the country has been a new, interesting and challenging experience for the undefeated (14-0-0) Minutewomen.

"It's a new feeling for us," senior co-captain Jamie Watson said. "I don't feel a lot of pressure. We were just enjoying it. We're just working hard and we've earned it."

On its way to 14 wins, UMass has outscored its opponents 60-2 and has outshot them by a 237-29 margin. UMass averages 16.9 shots a game while the opposition has averaged just two.

"People all over are recognizing us as a good team," Banda said. "Professors from the chemistry and biology departments call and congratulate us after every win."

The area media has also become aware of the talented team that is one win away from its first-ever unbeaten, untied season. Even Channel 4 in Boston has done a story, interviewing Banda, leading scorer Beth Roundtree (10 goals, 4 assists for 24 points) and fullback Debbie Belkin. That piece is scheduled to run Wednesday or Thursday.

UMass has made stories in the Boston Globe, the Herald and Soccer America, a national soccer weekly magazine.

With this recognition, comes distractions. Friends, old high school teammates, parents and grandparents are attracted to UMass games at home and on the road.

Banda wants his players to concentrate on one thing. The game at hand.

"We know that we're beatable on a given day," he said. "We're looking for that mental toughness off the field. I know the girls can play. They don't need extra distractions."

"It's true. We do need to be mentally prepared," Watson said, "and you can't when your talking to your sister of brother. You can always do it after the game."

The squad also has to deal with higher expectations of the fans, who don't expect the top team in the nation to have an off day.

Goalie Jan Holland, who has given up just one goal in 11 games this season, said, "It's kinda scary. But, it will help us. It helps to have confidence and we'll use it to our advantage."

Banda has confidence in his team standing up to the pressure of being no. 1. "We have a team that can stand up to the pressure. It's not bad to have. The personnel is there to do it."

With the overall team speed that is rivaled by only North Carolina and George Mason, UMass is running towards its first NCAA championship.

"With the talent they have it would be a fluke if they didn't win the national championship," Harvard's Bob Scalise said.

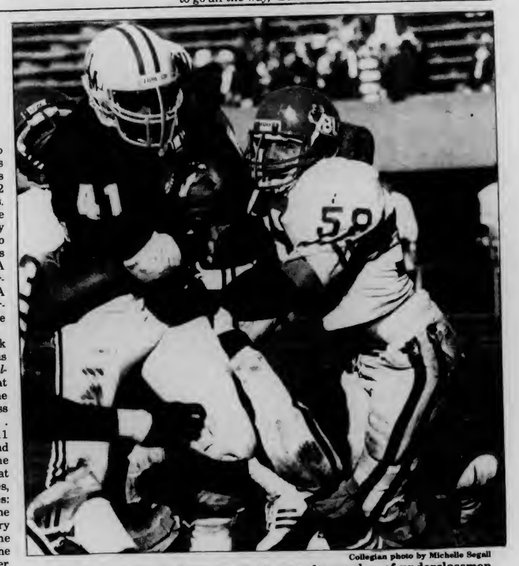
At UMass, its cautious optimism. "We've got a chance to go all the way," Banda said.

Football notebook

Playoff dream alive for the Minutemen

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It will take a little help, but the University of Massachusetts football team isn't out of the playoff picture.



The Minutemen must hope for a share of the Yankee Conference title to have any chance of making the national 1-AA playoffs. Rhode Island is undefeated in the conference along with New Hampshire. They face each other on Saturday at URI.

A New Hampshire victory over Rhode Island coupled with a UMass victory over New Hampshire on Nov. 16 would give all three teams a 4-1 conference record. No one team would stand out, since UMass lost to Rhode Island, New Hampshire would have lost to UMass and Rhode Island lost to New Hampshire. The issue would have to be decided by a committee vote.

Confused? Be clear on one thing: the Minutemen will lose any hopes unless they can defeat Connecticut on Saturday in Storrs. The Huskies, 3-3 and 0-2 in the conference, are bitter rivals with UM and would love to be spoilers.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: UMass quarterback Dave Palazzi was chosen as Yankee Conference co-Rookie-of-the-Week, it marks the third time he has been chosen for the honor. Linebacker Vito Perrone was chosen as Co Defensive Player-of-the-Week after a 15-tackle effort against Boston University. He was also named to the weekly ECAC all-star team. Palazzi's stats for the season: 44-of-81 for 539 yards and five touchdowns, he also has rushed 62 times for 134 yards and four touchdowns. The Minutemen are ranked seventh in the polling for the i-AA Lambert Trophy. . .they were unranked last week, listed in the "also receiving votes" catagory. . .The UMass defense is still first in the nation in 1-AA in scoring defense with only 9.5 points-per-game. . .in the combined 1-A and 1-AA rankings they are third. The overall yardage defense is ranked fifth with defense against the rush ranked tenth.

Palazzi's change into reserve quarterback Jim Simeone's uniform shirt after his was torn prompted a number of calls to the Collegian asking who was the player that scored the winning touchdown. . .the blame can be placed on the terrible public address system at McGuirk Alumni Staduim. . .tailback George Barnwell needs only 11 yards to catch Rich Jessamy for second place on the UMass career rushing list, he has 1,769. Barnwell has also fumbled at least once in the last three UMass games, all deep in opponents territory. . .Injuries: for the first time all season, UMass came away from a game without a serious injury (one causing a player to miss at least one game). . .the UMass coaches applauded the play of offensive linemen John Benzinger, Peter Montini and Bob Greaney after the BU game.

UMass playoff hopes shaken

Volleyball drops two

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The clouds on the horizon are beginning to darken for the the University of Massacusetts volleyball team's Division II national tournament chances.

The spikers, who began the season with a 15-game unbeaten streak and a national ranking that swelled as high as 12th, are now facing the very real possibility of failing to qualify for the national tournament.

"Our chances as they stand right now our slim," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "Realistically, we would have to win the rest of our remaining matches."

That would be no easy feat for the Minutewomen, 28-6 on the season. UMass has matches with Southern Connecticut State University and Springfield College as well as a tournament at Northeastern University left on the schedule. In all, the Minutewomen would have to win a total of at least seven matches to submit a serious bid to the national tourney.

The national tourney has a 16 team format. Because of that, breaking the national Top Twenty barrier would not serve as a guaranteed tournament bid. However, getting back into the Top Twenty would give UMass a glimmer of hope in making the tourney.

"It's obvious that we've got to make our way back into the Top Twenty," said Sortino. "Hopefully, our performance at the Delaware tournament will impress some people when the bids are sent out."

UMass won the Delaware tournament, an event dominated by Division I powers, for the first time ever two weekends ago. The spikers defeated five Division I schools on their way to the championship.

But despite the gloomy outlook on the spiker's national tourney chances, Sortino remains very happy about her team's showing so far this season.

"At the beginning of the season, I never would have dreamed that we would win 15 straight, be nationally ranked, and have a shot at making the national tournament," said Sortino. "All that really matters is that we play well. The rest is just a bonus for us."

"If we don't make the tourney, at least we'll know that we had our chance."

In fact, making the na-

K.C. deserved to win the Series

This weekend's World Series triumph by the Kansas City Royals was one that proved how important pitching is to a ballclub. The Royals effectively shut down the Cardinals, who had been the National League's top hitting club.

Never mind that many fans said that maybe two Royals could start for the Cardinals (George Brett and Willie Wilson). When you have great pitching from that youngster MVP Bret (Daddy) Saberhagen, Danny Jackson and Charlie Leibrant, you can afford to have a Steve Balboni, who didn't have an extra-base hit in the Series, or a Pat Sheridan.

Like that old Orioles adage, great pitching will shut down a great hitting team the majority of the time. The Cardinals, to their credit, were also loaded with quality

Lucas looks at busing years

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

The Boston racial crisis of the 1970s was partly a response to class conflict within the Irish community, according to the author of Common Ground, a current best seller on the Boston Busing crisis and school desegregation.

J. Anthony Lucas, author and pulitzer prize winning reporter for the New York Times, addressed a crowd of about 100 yesterday in Memorial Hall. Earlier in the day he toured the University of Massachusetts and met with journalism students.

Lucas said he first became interested in the Boston busing crisis in September of 1974 when Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., was attacked by a mob protesting court ordered busing at a City Hall Plaza rally.

"I though what in the world is going on when a crowd, largely Irish Catholic, could drive Jack Kennedy's brother under cover," Lucas said.

"In addition to (being) a story of animosity between the whites and blacks of Boston, the school desegregation battle is between the Irish who made it and the Irish who didn't," Lucas said. "It's a class battle."

Boston Democratic politicians like Kennedy, U.S. Speaker of the House Tip O'Neil and former Boston Mayor Kevin White, leaders of the Catholic Church and U.S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity, Jr. were seen as "two-toilet Irish" by the residents of Charlestown, Lucas said.

That phrase refers to the fact that while the working class residents of Charlestown could afford homes with only one bathroom, those Irish who played a major role usually lived in more expensive homes in the suburbs of Boston.

Lucas began to research Common Ground in 1976 after writing Nightmare, an account of the Watergate scandal.

Author and Pulitzer Prize winner J. Anthony Lucas.

"The time had come to go for broke, to do the very best I could possibly do in book form," Lucas said. He spent more than seven years researching and writing the book.

Common Ground is a chronicle of what happened to three Boston families from 1968 to 1978. Lucas chose a black family living in the South End, an Irish family in Charlestown and a Yankee family that had fled to Newton, a Boston suburb. He also studied five public figures and institutions in the 659-page book.

During the seven years it took to complete the book, Lucas said many of his friends began to question if he would ever finish the project.

"There were many moments when it was depressing," he said. "But nobody ever said writing is easy."

Students reject $12 increase of activity fee

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

In a 354 to 315 vote, students at the University of Massachusetts yesterday rejected a referendum seeking a $12 per year increase in the Student Activity Fee.

If the referendum had been approved it would have raised the fee from $88 to $100 per year per student. The fee goes into the Student Activity Trust Fund which enables the Student Government Association to provide services, activities, and advocacy to the student community.

"It's a victory for students," said Bill Collins, a student senator and a member of Students For Government by Referendum, which opposed the fee increase. "Now the SGA will sit down and re-examine and restructure its priorities," he said.

The re-examining, Collins said, will include looking at the various payroll accounts in the fund, examining the need for professional staff, and studying the Student Activity Office and its purpose. "It was my feeling that very little of the money goes to activities like concerts, movies, etc"

The trust fund, Collins said, has $1.7 million to spend each year and "that should be plenty of money to provide for the concerts and movies and parties that we want," he said. Collins added that the present SGA treasurer shouldn't apologize and justify "the mistakes the SGA has made in the past in setting up this system."

Dianne Rossi, SGA treasurer, said the fee increase was to help save Registered Student Organization funding. There are more than 500 RSOs, and about 80 are funded by the student fee. Of these 80, Rossi said, about 55 will be in danger of losing their funding without the additional money from the fee raise. After learning of the referendum vote result, Rossi said she "couldn't say what's going to happen now."

"The SGA will work with our organization now," Collins said. "We would not be against an increase that was guaranteed to go towards concerts, movies and parties etc."

The referendum required about 1500 votes or 7.5 percent of the total undergraduate students in order to be binding. Only 669 undergraduates voted and the vote is nonbinding, said John Crowley, chair of governmental affairs.

"There are lots of options" to what might happen to the fee increase, Crowley said. "I don't think the whole thing was well organized either pro or against."

Speakers differ over Star Wars

By BRION McALARNEY
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts Institute of Technology physics professor Vera Kistiakowsky called the Reagan Administration's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), also known as Star Wars, technically unfeasible and strategically unworkable, last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

Kistiakowsky spoke at a public forum addressing the Star Wars defense system along with A.T. Stair, the chief scientist for the U.S. Air Force Geophysics Laboratory at Hanscom Air Force Base in Bedford, who defended the defense plan.

"It does not take new ideas, it stretches existing technologies. The power required is 100 times greater than what we have now," said Kistiakowsky.

Kistiakowsky also criticized the research aspect of the program.

"An enormous increase of money has gone into a very narrow spectrum of research to support weapons programs . . . it is not basic research, it is a distortion of national science priorities," she said.

Satir said it was important to convince the Soviets that strategic defense is better than strategic offense.

"We have not invested the way the Russians have . . . we have to start over, start equal, convince Russians that it is better to be defensive," he said.

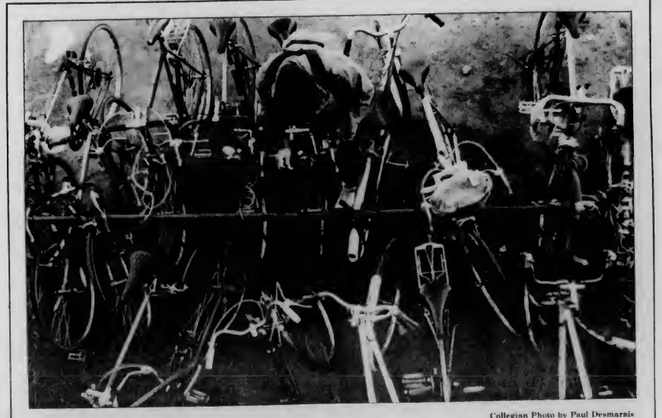
Satir in support of his opinion cited three conditions made by the Fletcher Study in the summer of 1983 to make SDI feasible. The defense system had to be technologically possible, cheap enough, and able to survive a nuclear attack.

"For a defense system to work in the long run, we have to make it cheaper to be defensive than offensive," he said.

SDI is a layered defense system designed to shoot down missiles at different phases of attack, Satir said. Each layer is independent, he added.

SDI is currently a research program that will presumably be deployed in the 1990s, Satir said.

Kistiakowsky said SDI space satellites, which could be armed to shoot down missiles, would be vulnerable.



"It is much easier to destroy satellites or launch vehicles than it is to destroy incoming vehicles (retaliatory strikes)," she said, "If someone were to launch an attack, that is where they would attack first."

Kistiakowsky said SDI would be destablizing because it would cause the Soviets to build more offensive weapons, while Satir said it was important for both countries to rely on defensive weapons rather than offensive, and to reach an agreement on defensive systems.

HIGH TIDE IN LOUISIANA—High winds and heavy rains from Hurricane Juan have had a devastating effect on this southern state in the last two days. In the above photo, two residents of Chauvin, LA paddle in a boat to check on their neighbors after flood waters submerged their town. At left, man's best friend could use a little help in New Orleans where many animals and people have been displaced by rising water from the unexpected hurricane.

Surprise hurricane causes extensive damage to coast

MORGAN CITY, La. (AP)—Unexpected Hurricane Juan wobbled ashore and stalled again yesterday knocking down a third oil rig as its heavy rain and 85 mph winds whipped offshore waves 20 feet high and drove tides up to 10 feet high above normal against inland levees.

At least three people were dead and four missing, including three believed trapped in a drilling rig that toppled in a marsh. About 160 people had been rescued from rigs and boats in the Gulf of Mexico and adjacent waters over three days, the Coast Guard said.

By 3 p.m. CST, however, Juan's winds diminished to 65 mph, and the National Weather Service downgraded it to a tropical storm. At 5 p.m., the poorly defined center of Juan was estimated to be near latitude 30.4 north, longitude 92.1 west, near Lafayette, La.

Displaced snakes, including poisonous water moccasins, and balls of stinging fire ants floated through some flooded streets.

The storm, which surprised forecasters when it strengthened into a hurricane Sunday and then stalled for a day just off the coast, came ashore and then stalled near Lafayette.

By noon, winds on land had gusted to 40 mph and heavy bands of rain extended from the Gulf south of Mobile, Ala., to Jackson, Miss., and as far east as Florida.

Offshore, winds were clocked at 85 mph and kicked up 20-foot waves at noon, seven hours after Juan moved ashore near here, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Gary Stark.

Tornadoes spun out of the rain clouds at Laurel, Miss., and Orange Beach, Ala., damaging trees, a barn and a trailer home at Laurel and a store and a car at Orange Beach. In Florida, a tornado caused minor damage to the Panama City suburb of Calloway, and rain flooded streets in Jacksonville, on the Atlantic coast. Southeastern Texas had gotten almost 71.25 inches of rain since Sunday.

Divers from the Coast Guard and the Louisiana Department of Wild Life and Fisheries cut holes in the steel hull of a jackup drilling rig that toppled in a marsh near Hopedale.

Pentagon budget approved; military alloted $302.5B

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House yesterday approved a bill authorizing a record Pentagon budget for the current fiscal year after some liberal Democrats dropped complaints that had delayed the measure for three months.

The bill, approved by voice vote, authorizes Defense Department spending of $302.5 billion in the fiscal year that started Oct. 1. That will buy thousands of planes, ships, tanks and other weapons, but it also halves President Reagan's MX nuclear missile program from 100 to 50 of the 10-war-head weapons.

It also permits development of new chemical weapons for the first time since 1969, although money to actually pay for the project was stripped last week from a companion spending bill. Those funds will have to be restored on the floor or else the Army could not build the nerve gas bombs and artillery shells.

The Senate approved the authorization measure 94-5 three months ago, shortly after it emerged from a House-Senate conference committee called to resolve 1,200 differences between the versions passed by the Democratic-controlled House and Republican-run Senate.

But some House liberals were unhappy with the bill, arguing that House members of the conference committee, led by Armed Services Committee Chairman Les Aspin, D-Wis., made too many concessions.

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., said yesterday "the position of the House was not well-represented" in the conference committee.

Wife of dissident rumored leaving USSR for treatment

BOSTON (AP)—The family of one of the Soviet Union's most famous dissidents said yesterday they expected Yelena Bonner to come West any day, if reports that she has been allowed to leave are true.

But if she leaves the country, her family said, she will stay only long enough for a treatment of serious eye and heart problems before returning to her exiled husband dissident Andrei Sakharov.

"There is no doubt about it," Efrem Yankelevich, who is married to Mrs. Bonner's daughter, said in a telephone interview from the family home in Newton, a Boston suburb. "If Andrei Sakharov is still in the Soviet Union, as soon as she has finished medical treatment she will go back to him."

A West German newspaper reported this week that Soviet authorities told Mrs. Bonner she could leave the country immediately to go "anywhere she wants."

Yankelevich said the permission came three years after she first applied for an exit visa to get medical treatment unavailable in her country.

"If she is about to leave, I would expect this to happen today or tomorrow," he said.

Sakharov and Mrs. Bonner have both been exiled to the closed city of Gorky west of Moscow and allowed little contact with the West.

Yankelevich, 35, said the family booked two telephone calls to the Soviet Union, one for Wednesday and another Thursday, in the hope of reaching Mrs. Bonner, 60.

"We haven't spoken with her for a year and a half," Yankelevich said. "We want her to come to Massachusetts. It will be easier for us to make necessary arrangements if she needs a heart bypass. But it's up to her to decide, of course, where she wants to go."

Plans released for visitor info center

Rosbsham Memorial Center for Visitors, University of Massachusetts

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

After receiving more than $175,000 from a University of Massachusetts Board of Trustee member, the University is forming plans to build a visitor and information center by next fall.

The Robsham Memorial Center for Visitors, to be located across from the Haigus Mall, will be a place where visitors can bring their questions. It is named on behalf of the late son of Paul and Joyce Robsham and will be the first new building on campus in over 10 years.

"We don't have a central meeting place for visitors,' said Dan Melley, director of university relations. He said there isn't currently a place for people to go with their general questions about the university.

"There are signs on campus directing people where to go, but what we're hoping to do is have signs leading visitors to the information center so that they can find out how to get to events and where to go to lectures," said Melley.

Melley also wants to have a computer with the kind of information that visitors would need. "We're hoping to have a computer that will have all the events that are going on around campus."

All of the University's brochures and publications will be available there as well as campus maps. In addition, the center will most likely be the starting point for the two daily campus tours. "We would like to have a room where they could see a slide show or movie as a preview to a tour," Melley said. "This way we can welcome visitors appropriately."

Melley, who would like to see the center staffed by students who are knowledgeable about the University, said that there would probably be two people working at a time when the center opens. "We would like to have it open seven days a week," he added.

Although at the present time they have not picked an architect, there are tentative plans to begin construction this spring. "This will be the first new building on campus in 10 or 12 years," said Melley.

Women in Bolivia discussed

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Correspondent

The main goals of the Federation of Peasant Women in Bolivia, South America are to progress and educate themselves as Bolivian women and to educate and raise the consciousness of their children, said a Bolivian Indian peasant woman last night at Amherst College.

Lucila Mejia de Morales, executive secretary of the federation, spoke about the history and achievements of the organization. The lecture by Morales, who speaks no English, was interpreted from Spanish by Noga Tarnopolsky, a student at Amherst College.

"Sixty percent of the population in Bolivia are illiterate and the majority of this 60 percent are women," said Morales, adding that the federation is working to educate peasant women in an effort to lower this rate.

Peasant women had to self-educate themselves, because after the 1952 Agrarian Reform Bill made education free in Bolivia, it was still economically unaccessible for peasants, Morales said.

"I left home when I was 12-years-old to educate myself, and finished basic primary school," said Morales, who after receiving her education returned home to teach other women to read and write.

In 1975, Morales went public to ask for rights of the Indian women to have an education. Due to media attention, Morales was appointed as Secretary to the Liason of Women, in La Paz, the capital of Bolivia.

The first meeting of Bolivian Indian women was in La Paz in 1975 and addressed the question of women's illiteracy said Morales. The first National Conference of Bolivian Indian Women was in 1980, and was attended by 3,500 women who spoke four different languages.

The National Conference held in 1983 achieved positive steps for Indian peasant women by demanding certain basic items such as kerosene, vaccinations for children and doctors, said Morales.

"Every advantage we have gained has been taken away and and we have nothing again," she said, attributing this to the new broad-based populist government of Bolivia.

"We try to raise a consciousness of the Bolivian peasant people, but our goals are always postponed," Morales said.

Attorney general tightens reins

Ineffectiveness in the Attorney General's office of the Student Government Association is a thing of the past, according to the new Attorney General Scot McCracken.

Student Government Association Attorney General Scot McCracken.

"The purpose of this office is to prosecute violators of the senate by-laws and constitution," said McCracken, a junior legal studies major and former Central and Northeast Area Advocate.

"There's an attitude around here that you can break the by-laws and nothing will be done about it and I plan to change that," McCracken said.

McCracken has come under criticism for pressing charges against many student senators.

"I have prosecuted John Ruddock, senate speaker, for not performing his speech duties well and I won," he said. That occurred a month ago when an SGA tribunal found Ruddock 'lax' for not providing two flags displayed at Senate meetings.

McCracken said he plans to give each senate member a copy of the by-laws and a letter explaining the purpose of his office at tonight's senate meeting.

"I will not stand for people disobeying the (senate) constitution," he said.

McCracken said he views his office as an apolitical position. "An attorney general should maintain impartiality to function as a mediator in the senate."

McCracken said his office has a responsibility to the SGA to ensure fairness and adherence to the by-laws of the constitution and "to defend and protect student's rights that are violated in the residence halls." Student residence halls should be made comfortable and safe, he said.

"The administration doesn't deserve the bad picture that is always painted of them because they are often used as a scapegoat by the SGA," McCracken said.

McCracken said he will work to improve relations between the administration and the SGA.

Speaker to focus on arms control

By JEFFERY MATHIEU
Collegian Correspondent

James Hackett, consultant to a presidential arms control committee and Heritage Foundation member, will speak on "Arms Control without Agreements" tonight at Amherst College.

The lecture, at 8 p.m. in Converse Hall, will be the second in an on-going series presented by the Five-College Program in Peace and World Security Studies.

Hackett said he will talk about "some of the things the United States and its allies can do, unilaterally, to control arms without depending on formal agree ments with the Soviet Union."

"Arms control negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union, with regard to the major agreements, have not been successful."

One arms control proposition he will discuss is the "denuclearization" of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. We can "seriously think about a non-nuclear defense of Europe," Hackett said, because of today's high technology conventional weapons.

UMass employee assaults officer

An University of Massachusetts police officer received bruises to his ribs and shoulders when he was assaulted Monday night by a 23-year-old campus employee in the Curry Hicks Cage, UMass Police said.

The employee was arrested and charged with breaking and entering, attempt to commit a misdemeanor and the assault of a police officer.

The officer was investigating a report of a man inside of the building and was allegedly beaten by the man when he went inside. Other officers could not immediately aid the officer because he entered the Cage through the roof since the buillding was locked.

The officer was treated at University Health Services and released, police said.

In other police reports:

- Thirty-four light fixtures and 68 florescent lamps valued at $1256 were reported stolen Monday morning from the first floor of Machmer Hall, police said.
- A 1976 Fiat received over $100 in damages when it was reported vandalized in the P-lot of Fraternity-Sorority Park. The incident occurred sometime since Friday, police said.
- A 21-year-old student was arrested and charged with shoplifting a $1.45 tube of glue Monday morning at the University Store.
- A 35-year-old Amherst resident was given a trespassing notice Monday evening when he was allegedly bothering students on the 17th floor of John Adams Tower. Police had had problems with the man before, they said.

'Imposter syndrome' a problem for women

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

Nancy Jones is the vice-president of a successful public relations firm, makes over $50,000 a year, and is well respected by her colleagues. But Jones doesn't think she is competent for the job. She is afraid that someday she'll be exposed as a fraud, pretending to be something she is really not.

Jones is among the many women who suffer from the "imposter syndrome." These women doubt their intelligence and think that they really don't deserve the success they've attained, said Dr. Valerie Young, president of an Amherst based consulting firm.

"Women believe that they are imposters, that they achieve their positions not because of intelligence or ability, but because of luck or accident," said Dr. Young.

Young has studied this syndrome for over five years and now gives workshops for various organizations, including corporations, universities, government agencies, and human service organizations. She facilitates workshops for University of Massachusetts staff, students, and community.

The women who attend her workshops, she said, include lawyers, businesswomen, doctors, graduate students, secretaries, and other professionals. "These women constantly doubt their competence, and question why they have succeeded," Young said.

The reasons for their self-doubt, she said, include early socialization of women. "Women get a pampering form of support, the 'don't worry your pretty little head about it' kind of attitude," she said.

This prevents these women from getting exposed to and accepting failures as a part of life, she said.

These women grow up equating their self-worth with their successes and failures, Young said, adding that "women tend to remember only their failures, disregarding all the good things they've accomplished".

Although Young has seen men suffering from this syndrome, "women suffer more collectively as a class," she said.

Perfectionism is a trait of these "self-doubters," she said. A "recovering imposter" herself, Young said that women feel that they have to be perfect, and that they are not entitled to make a mistake.

One reason for this, she said, is because women feel they not only have to prove themselves, but also prove that women in general have competence. This adds an extra pressure on the corporate woman.

Pressures from society, such as disparities in wage rates, sexist remarks, and media role models also add to a woman's feeling of inadequacy, she said.

DUNCE!
Twenty-five million adult Americans are totally illiterate. Another 35,000,000 are functionally illiterate.
Is America creating a permanent underclass . . . an academic third world?
"Absolutely," answers Reginald Damerell, former professor of education at the University of Massachusetts in his new book, Education's Smoking Gun, which squarely places the blame on the teachers' colleges and graduate schools of education.
"This is a tough, no-holds barred attack on teachers' training that has departed from the fundamental importance of the 3 R's in favor of visual aids. When a nation such as this democracy permits its educational standards to decline because teachers are not adequately trained it is necessary for someone to cry: 'Halt!'"[1]
He contends that the introduction of black studies, ethnic studies, and bilingual programs have, in fact, harmed most, those whom they were designed to help—minorities. "He damns three practices he encountered while teaching: admittance of graduate students who have abysmal academic records in an effort to offer equal opportunity; the wide-spread attitude that the 3 R's do not come first in education; and the lack of 'a body of knowledge' in the education curriculum."[2]
"Strong stuff, this, written by one who came into education after a successful advertising career. Like many outsiders, he was appalled at the ignorant, narrow-minded illiterates who peopled the classes, administrations and faculties of far too many university education departments.... Damerell is sharp and informed, with little patience for the intellectual slums represented by education courses and the empty credentialism of the Ed. D."[3]

Peace is not a game, but...

We thoroughly enjoyed Nancy Emond's column in the Collegian (Oct. 17). We often find fiction is amusing. Emond is right, it was Ghandi's birthday, she was in Amherst, and we did have a sign "Nuke the Pagoda." Other than that, time must have clouded her memory. The jeers which she wrote of were merely our opinions being voiced. Incidentally, not one obscenity was ever yelled.

Emond mentioned how poorly students attended the walk (because of our fear or apathy towards nuclear annihilation). Did she consider that the overwhelming majority of college students support Ronald Reagan's stand on terrorism and communism, and that the era of Jimmy Carter and his "turn the other cheek" attitude are over, until the Soviet Union proves it can be trusted?

She wrote about John Shucard and "Plowshare 8," and how they broke into the Trident submarine base and wrote "Thou Shall Not Kill" in their own blood to protest nuclear war. Emond spoke of them as leaders of society, but we will continue to look upon them with resolute disdain.

Emond also mentioned the Vietnam Veterans. We have nothing but the highest respect for them. It was her generation of "supposedly" educated students who rioted at universities for the return of U.S. soldiers from Vietnam, and then subjected them to cruel and unjust ridicule, and spit on men who only thought they were defending their country, and we say this in reference to your example of our so called "unthinking cruelty."

Every country, every person has the right to self-determination. Ask yourself if people in Afghanistan, Czeckoslovakia, Poland, and thousands of 6thers currently enslaved in Soviet work camps enjoy that right.

We understand her sentiment towards world peace, but the reality is that world peace cannot be reached while the Soviets continue their policy of expansionism.

We agree with her, however, that this is not a game, but we hold true to our views and opinions, in spite of her attempts to sway us.

Compromise takes time

Stephen Erickson

South Africa. South Africa. South Africa. I have noted that the world has not followed my lead in focusing more attention on other repressive regimes, so beating a strategic withdrawal until more enlightened times are upon us, I have relented on the issue of the public agenda, and am seizing the defensive in writing about South Africa.

It is not my intention to defend apartheid, however, for such a system is indefensible. The question is not whether apartheid should continue to exist in South Africa, but how and when it will be dismantled.

What, then, is the most prudent course for South Africans to choose? The African National Congress, whose ideology and good intentions many in the West seem to accept without question, demands an immediate end to apartheid, along with an election consisting of one person, one vote. It's strange that leaders of the ANC, such as its President, Oliver Tambo, enthusiastically support Marxist dictatorships such as those in Mozambique, Zimbabwe, and Ethiopia (the ANC's "Freedom" broadcasts are beamed out of Ethiopia) yet advocate democracy for South Africa. Should such people come to power, South African democracy would be short lived indeed.

The notion of one person, one vote is one that at least for now, white South Africa will not accept. This fact, it would appear, puts the government and the ANC on an unavoidable collision course.

Assuming the ANC can gain enough support for a full scale revolution, let us examine what such a revolution would mean to South Africa. Militarily, the South African army is per capita, one of the strongest in the world and the amount of destruction it could do to the South African black community is almost inconceivable. In a race war within South Africa, millions could die. Capital would quickly leave the country, and much of the remaining economic infrastructure would lie in ruins. Africa's most developed nation, with the highest standard of living for both whites and blacks, would be utterly destroyed.

It's quite easy for Americans to cheer a revolution in South Africa. It is not our homes that will be burned, not our family members that will die. Although we are supposedly from the "Give me liberty or give me death tradition," who among us can say that if they were a black African they would choose a life of poverty under a black dictator (like the rest of Africa) rather than a life of relative prosperity in white ruled South Africa? For years, Africans have made their own choice by migrating to South Africa in large numbers.

Rising living standards lead to rising expectations, and this is especially true in South Africa where white affluence and privilage naturally lead to black dissatisfaction. What's more, unless the South African government continues reform, unrest will grow into open revolt. Unless compromise is reached, South Africa will be destroyed. Compromise is the only answer.

The white rulers of South Africa must design a long term time table to be followed in granting all peoples of South Africa full citizenship rights. Although voting rights might be placed a long way down the road, many things could be done more immediately to ease tensions. They include abolition of the homeland policies and pass laws, the completion of desegregation, acknowledgement of universal citizenship, judicial reform, and equal government funding for black education.

Taken step by step, these changes can lead to the kind of evolutionary change that Chief Buthelezi of South Africa's largest tribe advocates. Liberals within South Africa's government must push for these reforms. Meanwhile, conservative Afrikaners will attempt to remain intransigent while the African National Congress engages in terrorist activities, killing fellow blacks who are willing to compromise with the government. South Africa has a fine line to walk, and for it to survive, cooler heads must prevail.

Inaccurate intentions

Bill Cole

Accuracy in Academia doesn't belong on this campus, accuracy in academia does.

Columnist Stephen Erickson condones the presence of Neo-McCarthyism on our campus because it agrees with his politics. If a socialist organization was to initiate a massive, national campaign to monitor and influence the American student's education, President Reagan, the FBI, and the CIA would see all the perpetrators behind bars. However, the leaders of AIA (like most of today's political leaders) are conservatives, so the administration not only tolerates them, but also tacitly encourages their efforts.

My disagreement with AIA isn't with their professed goal that education be accurate, but with their self-appointment as prosecuter, judge, and jury. Professors should be evaluated regularly on a variety of criterion including accuracy, honesty, currency, and, of course, teaching ability. Paramount, however, is that the University community be the monitors, the prosecutors, and the judges of what should and shouldn't be taught. This includes administrators, students, faculty, and alumni.

Individuals chose to come here to teach, to study, and to contribute in a personal agreement with the University community. Any violation or shortcoming should be dealt with solely on that basis, not through the forced intervention of a politically biased outsider with no knowledge of this University or its people.

The best case against AIA would be to televise the virtuoso performance of its maternal organization, Accuracy in Media. Broadcast this summer on PBS, it was the most openly biased, subjective, and ignorant program ever to be run west of Moscow. The lack of factual analysis and the hack-job production revealed the producers' total ignorance of journalistic technique. AIA is much more dangerous than AIM, however, because now these bludering hacks are trying to improve education. If allowed to run wild, they'll probably ruin the lives of many good professors while, at the same time, closing off doors to information which they don't agree with.

Only the most ignorant believe in "absolute truths" in all matters. Subjects like history, political science, etc. rely heavily on interpretation, resulting in individual opinions. The AIA people try to find a right or a wrong answer to everything as if it were math.

Socrates was never confident of a "fact" unless it had been repeatedly held up to challenges and weathered them intact. Only by continually questioning and studying "the truth" can we retain the slightest hope of maintaining accuracy. AIA, and those who condone it, aren't searching for truth, they're trying to isolate it.

Less hate, more tolerance

Richard A. Martin

During the trials and tribulations of my midterms, I must admit I have been somewhat lax in keeping up-to-date with the happenings in the Collegian. However, with those incredible and intolerable pieces of multiple-choice exams behind me, I finally picked up a copy last Friday and began to read. I must say the most disappointing part of my whole week was not my psych.217 midterm, no, not by a long shot. instead, it was my unfortuante decision to read the editorial/opinion page.

Now, I'll readily admit that any one of those people who write opinions in the paper are just as (or more) literate than myself. True, I am not claiming that the page is the UMass answer to Shakespearean sonnets. However, there is a certain key element lacking in these pages. That element is tolerance, especially the tolerance of another person's viewpoint. Everyone has his or her own set of values, moral judgments, and personal opinions. Everyone in this society has a right to these personal opinions, and a right to express these opinions. To heckle or criticize just for the point of insulting another person or another group is nothing but a detriment to society—nothing more, nothing less.

True, one has a right to their own personal opinions. But when someone else (i.e. The Republican Club, the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Alliance, etc.) is exercising their right to voice an opinion, no one should try in any way to harass that right. It seems that everyone around here is operating under the assumption that they must find some way to insult and ridicule the opinions of anyone who dares look at things a little differently than they do. It is as if everyone were so insecure about themselves that they proceed to insult anybody in the way; a form of paranoia that, unfortunately, has been spreading now for much too long.

After all, we are all human beings. We are living in a world so bent on hating, that each and every minute could be our last. Let's stop the hating here and now. Life is just like a multiple-choice exam, with each event we have four or five choices to pick from. Some of the questions have no single correct answer, and sometimes each and every answer is allowable. Just because I pick "A" and you pick "C," does that make me any less of a person than you are?

By the way, the time limit on the exam is about 60 to 70 years. I don't know about you, but that's much too short a time for me to stop and quibble about question number thirteen. There's still a million more questions to go.

Seatbelt laws will create criminals

There is a significant body of statistics to suggest that wearing a seatbelt dramatically improves one's chances of surviving an automobile accident. With this in mind, I strongly recommend that people wear their seatbelts, as I am not in favor of unnecessary death or mutilation. Gov. Dukakis, I think is is fair to say, shares my opinion on the wisdom of wearing safety belts, and this good. Dukakis has expressed his opinion by making is law. This is not good.

Laws are powerful defenders of the rights of individuals, or they should be. The Bill of Rights enumerates ways in which the government should not be allowed to infringe upon those rights. Does a citizen who does not wear a seatbelt infringe upon the rights of others? Clearly, such a person jeopardizes only their own life, and this may not be wise, but is it criminal? Perhaps skydiving, cigarettes, and cholesterol should also be outlawed.

The issue of the seatbelt law is clouded because saving lives has great popular appeal—and that is heartening in some ways—but let us not become confused. To say that people should wear seatbelts and live long and happy lives is a very good thing to do; shout it from the rooftops and you will have my support. Say that the citizen who does not wear a seatbelt is a criminal and levy a fine on him, and you have forgotten your place. Dukakis has forgotten that laws are for preserving the rights of individuals, not for making criminals of citizens minding their own business.

Get it together, buckle up.

FOCUS BUSINESS

Student Sense

By Christine Hughes and Peter Rice

Buy now, pay later. Charge it. Finance it. Installment plan it. Put it on my tab. Bill me. Sound familiar? It should. It's all credit in one form or another, and more and more, a credit rating is becoming essential to financial stability. Therefore, now is not too soon for you to learn how to do both—obtain and maintain—good credit.

You could have lots of money, always have paid for things on a "cash-only" basis, and never have been in debt. The fact remains, however, that as you attempt to apply for a car loan, a home mortgage, or even a credit card, the first question you'll be asked is, do you have any previous credit?

Now logically, you would think that if you hadn't ever borrowed money to buy something (or bought on credit—it's the same thing) that you would be copnsidered a good "credit risk." Wrong. Before most companies will extend credit to you, or before a bank will consider extending a loan to you, they want to see that you have borrowed money in the past and successfully paid it back. In other words, a person who has previously dealt on a credit basis will be considered a more safe and responsible financial risk that someone who has dealt solely on a cash basis.

Well, that's not so unreasonable. But the question is, if you need to have a credit history to get credit, then how do you ever get a credit history to begin with?

Realistically speaking, you probably won't be able to get up tomorrow, walk into a commercial bank, and leave with a large loan. More often than not, a bank will not consider your application unless you are currently holding a stable job in the "real world."

The major credit card companies would also like to be assured that you are earning an adequate and steady income, therefore enabling you to make steady monthly payments (although some companies do offer cards to juniors and seniors through the mail). So, until you have that second interview, or sign that contract, you can, as they say, plan on "leaving home without it."

On a less discouraging note, there are a few things that you can do now to begin building that important credit base. One way to get started is to apply for what many banks and financial institutions will call a "secured loan." A loan of this type is one in which the bank lends you a sum of money, equal to an amount that you will leave on deposit with them, until the loan is paid off. On the surface, the idea of a "secured loan" may seem almost ludicrous, but it needn't be for an especailly large amount, and it can definitely be an important stepping stone when qualifying for essential credit in the future.

Another possible way to begin establishing credit is to apply to a department store for one of its own credit cards. These companies are generally more lenient than the major financial institutions as to whom they will issue a card. They do, of course, consider your income stability and past credit, but they are more likely to take you on as a credit risk. Their main objective is to increase sales, and what better way to do this than to extend you their credit! Again, obtaining various stores credit cards may not seem so important, but it can be the initial factor in your future quest for important credit.

A credit base in its simplest form can be built through the everyday paying of bills, and the proper maintenance of your financial accounts. Late payments and bounced checks only aid in the destruction of an otherwise respectable credit history.

Most of you can begin to work toward this simply through the payment of your monthly phone bill. In case you weren't aware of it, college studetns have a notoriously bad reputation with the phone company. Why? Well, remember that night when you just had to talk to someone...only that someone happened to live in Florida? As much as you don't remember, AT&T never forgets. It, like other companies, expects to be paid on a regular basis for the service provide you.

Often times students neglect ot plan and therefore deal with the problem of bills by writing bad checks, or even worse, by not paying at all. Most companies aer practiced in cases like these, and will not hesitate in halting the provided services, charging extraneous fees, and sending the account to a collection agency. This lack of responsibility on your part enables them to take that first step in ruining your credit rating.

Simply put, of the three types of credit (good bad and non-existent), only one is of worth to you. Which you choose is your decision. A credit rating of some degree is very important, and like it or not, before long you will be confronted with the need to get credit or at least show that you can. By doing a little planning now, you can save yourself a lot of potential problems in the not too distant future.

Christine Hughes and Peter Rice are former managers of the UMass Student Federal Credit Union. Their column appears regularly on the bi-weekly business page.

Safeguarding your ATM bank card

Local banks discuss policies as national losses at $100m

Automatic teller machines. They're everywhere—all over campus, in every shopping mall, on every street corner in Amherst, facilitating easy cash during off hours to satisfy any emergency or whim. But along with the high volume of such computerized banking comes the potential for abuse of lost, stolen or even borrowed cards and occasional mechanical errors.

U.S. Department of Justice figures for ATM fraud, compiled in August, reveal there is $70-$100 million worth of ATM fraud among $262 billion worth of ATM volume nationally. One-half of that fraud is the result of lost or stolen cards.

Although local bank officials say that the automatic teller machine loss is minimal to their institutions, there are some facts the customer should know to protect himself should his card be abused and withdrawals on his account made. By law, a customer can be assessed only a $50 charge for unauthorized card use if the bank is notified within 24 hours, a provision a customer should take note of since some machines permit withdrawals of $150 and over in one transaction. After one day, the customer can be liable for up to $500, and the customer's liability is unlimited if unauthorized transactions that appear on statements are not reported within 60 days.

If a card is determined lost or stolen, the first thing to do is report it to the bank. The account will then be frozen and no additional funds can be withdrawn.

Heritage Bank in Amherst puts lost or stolen cards on a "Hot Card File," according to Don Vickowski, assistant vice president at Heritage. If someone proceeds to use cards in this file in an automatic teller machine, they will be retained by the machine. Of all the cards being reported lost or stolen at Heritage Bank, about 10-15 percent are recovered in this manner. Most cards reported lost are simply replaced by the owner and returned to the bank by the finder, Vickowski said.

Most machines will swallow a card after the user has punched in three incorrect passwords, and hidden video cameras record all people making transactions on the machines. While these can aid in catching a thief, they are mostly used as deterrents or as a customer check, according to Gordon Lauder of the marketing office at Shawmut Bank in Amherst. If someone claims that they did not make a withdrawal and this cannot be distinguished by the computer records, or "audit tape," bank officials can refer to the camera to view the person making the transaction, he said.

In addition to the precautions banks take to guard against card misuse, bank officials stress that customers should take measures as well. The password needed to make transactions on a teller machine is sacred—customers should avoid writing the word or number down and need not ever reveal it even to a bank employee, says Stephen Ruoth of Bay Bank. Choosing a password like a birthdate or other number found on identification can be risky, as a thief with a customer's wallet at his disposal could think to try to use these numbers as passwords and succeed.

But despite the risks of having a teller machine card—the Justice Department figures represent just .02 percent of all business—the cards are indeed popular. Bay Bank currently has 7,000-10,000 cards outstanding, with most of these card holders being students; Heritage Bank has about 8,000 cards out with 1,000 cards added each September, and Shawmut Bank issues between 3,000 and 4,000 cards each year to students in the area. Cards are available to customers opening either a checking or savings account at any one of these three banks in Amherst. The monthly charges, minimum balances and transaction fees vary according to the type of account and the individual bank.

Interview

Business strategy for the 1980s

By SHERRY SHARFMAN
Collegian Staff

Under-investment in American firms is a prime factor in some companies' waning ability to compete with foreign businesses and within domestic industry itself—a situation with which Elliott Carlisle is more than familiar.

Carlisle, a University of Massachusetts professor who teaches a business policy and strategy course, is a management consultant in his spare time. Having worked with such firms as Ford, Bendex, and the Stroh Brewery Company, Carlisle's role is one of helping the company with its internal problems and training managers who are ready for promotion, helping them consider the broad perspective of the organization.

Professor Elliott Carlisle

"Business strategy has never been more important to American executives than it is now," Carlisle asserts. "If you're not interested in business strategy, you're not interested in business."

Out on the job, Carlisle listens, questions and reflects on what the company executives themselves have to say, helping them reinterpret the company and its structural problems. By evaluating short term factors, he helps them develop a strategy—a task that he says is seldom easy, as it is difficult for managers to view their problems objectively.

This process can involve one consultation session or many, depending on the size of the company: it takes more time for a small firm to define its present situation, for example, and a small company can't afford financial risks the way a large one can.

"Intuition and analysis in strategic formulation must go hand in hand. One without the other is indeed dangerous," Carlisle said.

Changes in the environment and the sphere of foreign competition, Carlisle says, are changing the ways Americans must do business. Here, concentration on increased capital investment and versatility is the key.

In one case where Carlisle was called in, a highway construction company was faced with the fact that the government was halting expansion of highways. He advised the company to diversify its services to reduce the effects of this environmental change.

As for foreign competition, Carlisle observed on a trip last year to Japan with 14 graduate students, sponsored by the US Department of Education and the International Trade Institute, an entirely automated car manufacturing plant. It had no production workers, only maintenance people. Such plants enable the Japanese to mass produce cars cheaply to be sold in the United States, a move that only one American firm has followed though it was American technology from the Unimate company that constructed the Japanese plant.

The American company that has taken advantage of the technology is General Motors, with its completely automated "Saturn Project," scheduled to begin operations in its Silver Springs, Tenn. facility in several years.

Kearn's comic art: a must-see

By ROB SKELTON
Collegian Staff

Jerry Kearns is a comic-book, new-wave hipster as indicated by the style of his recent paintings, four of which are showing now at Herter Gallery.

In contrast to the children's art in the next room, Kearns' straight lines, sharp images, and solid brights in newsprint/cartoon relief mixed-presentations feel awesome, drawing viewers close to inspect the consistancy and hidden meaning of his work.

The canvases are much larger than life. There's Reagan, Three-mile Island, the Statue of Liberty—all created using a screen or half-tone effect from a projection on the wall. Canny alignment of the dots produce a very realistic image.

Fantasy juxtaposes reality; in 'Missing,' a superhero with gaping body cavities anguishes. Behind him stands camera-ready line-up shots of, presumably, Wayne Williams who, was presumably involved in the Atlanta child disappearances.

'Three-mile Rapture' features the trademark coolant towers, from which a young man's body hurls toward the ground. Again, the definitive coloring supports the whole; a familiar Tarot card theme introduces the mystical, and everything works out just right.

Kearns portrays pain in his art. 'Repo Man', which features the familiar just-off-the-helicopter Ron Reagan as real, and contrasted by fantasy pictures of a bleeding businessman, a schizophrenic Santa Claus, and a mad woman with hammer and sickle earring, all have jarring overtones. It seems to say, "Everything's okay in the President's world but over here the people are going crazy." Scattered currency and the Leninist reference perhaps indicate political flirtations. Hmmm.

'Naked Brunch' takes place near Ellis Island. A ragged man and woman chomp on fish in an inflatable raft. Behind them is the camera-ready Statue of Liberty, undergoing renovation. This one's spooky and disturbing—very nice.

A reviewer can't do justice for Kearns work. They just have to be seen to be appreciated: Words can't capture the vivid effect of this man's art. The sample at this showing is an appetizer, for what one hopes will be a bigger and better menu with which we can plan a future feast.

"Road to Casablanca," by Jerry Kearns who is currently showing in Herter Gallery.

On Sunday, November 3rd, all of us here in Amherst have a chance to do something about nuclear weapons that could really make a difference. By participating in the November 3rd College Peacewalk you'll be giving your moral and financial support to next year's historic, 9-month Great Peace March. On March 1, 1986, five thousand people will leave their jobs, schools, homes and families to walk 3,235 miles across this country, from Los Angeles to Washington, D.C. Their goal: to rid the earth of nuclear weapons for good.

The nuclear arms race is not just another issue, and the November 3rd College Peacewalk is not just another walk-a-thón. So tie your shoe laces. We're going after peace. On foot.

BIBLIOFILE
BY BRADFORD VERTER

Hi. Before we get on with the reviews, a few announcements. Albion Bookshop in Amherst is throwing a party today from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. for UMass economic professors Stephen Resnick and Richard Wolfe, authors of the highly acclaimed Rethinking Marxism under the Automedia imprint of Semiotexte. Pulitzer prize winner J. Anthony Lukas, author of Common Ground, will autograph copies of his book today at the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop from 2 p.m. to 3 p.m. So tomorrow will be an auspicious day for the adventurous autograph hound. In fact, this has been an amazing week for meeting writers. Ram Dass (aka. Richard Alpert), author of the insightful Be Here Now and once Tim Leary's sidekick in LSD experimentation, was here Monday. And last night Madeline L'Engle, author of A Wrinkle in Time, spoke at Smith. Wow.

Without further ado, here are a couple reviews of some big books with pretty pictures: KATE BRASCH: Prehistoric Monsters. Photographs by Jean-Philipe Varin. (Salem House, $12.95)

Boy, if there's one thing I love, it's a big book on dinosaurs, and that's exactly what Prehistoric Monsters is. After a brief introduction describing the usual paleontological background, the book opens for us marvelous vistas of our favorite extinct reptiles in their favorite environments. What makes this book niftier than many others is that instead of lurid oil paintings, we get actual photographs of reconstructed models (at least I hope they're models). While some of the shots require a bit of the ol' suspension of disbelief, other pictures, such as the Nothosaurus are quite convincing, even striking. The drawback is that we get none of the gory violence found in many dinosaur books, where we have feverish paintings of a hulking sweaty T-Rex ripping out the tender throat of a bewildered tracadon.

JAN GARDEN CASTRO: The Art and Life of Georgia O'Keeffe (Clarkson Potter, Inc., $30.00)

Georgia O'Keeffe, now 98 years old, has been one of the most important, subdued forces in the art world for almost 70 years. Her unique American vision has inspired countless modern artists, most obviously Judy Chicago. Her unprecedented approach to subject matter, her striking use of color, her sensuous use of form and line ensure her permanent position in the artistic canon. Castro's book, engrossingly written, follows O'Keeffe's progress and development from her childhood recollections to her current activities. In addition to the wealth of biographical tidbits offered, the book collects and discusses critical approaches to O'Keefe's work, such as her persistant denial of the interplay of male and female symbols inherent in her paintings, especially in her flowers, which have been likened to portraits of female genitalia. Often an attempt is made ot demonstrate how her art and life are intermingled. For instance, the connection is made between the work of hr lover of 28 years, Alfred Stieglitz, whose photographs make a landscape of the body, and her own paintings, which anthropomorphize the land. While the book is fascinating, it has some flaws. Castro peppers the book with numerous illustrations, most of them in color. However, she discusses many works not pictured in this volume, which can be annoying. And she uses the words "lingam" and "yoni," uncommon terms from the Kama Sutra for the male and female genitalia. Although Castro's eccentricities can match O'Keeffe's, this is an impressive book.

Ninety-eight-year-old artist Georgia O'Keefe.

Hampshire delivers a knock-out with Center Ring

By PATRICIA NYLANDER
Collegian Correspondent

Hats off to Hampshire College division III student, Richard Sinkin, producer of Hampshire College's Center Ring, for helping to present a fine collaboration of theatre pieces.

The collaboration was performed, adapted, directed and in part, created by Hampshire faculty and students. In the Hampshire College tradition, diversity was the theme of last weekend's performance and its accompanying photo exhibit by student, Anne Walker.

"I wanted to get as many people involved as possible," said Sinkin, who chose the performers who brought to the total performance six short skits and two song selections. Three of the short skits were written by acclaimed playwright and actor, Sam Shepard who starred in the films; Country, The Right Stuff, and Paris, Texas among others. Apparent in his three pieces, Savage/Love and True West was that Shepard enjoys dissecting conflicts. Savage/Love, played by Ben Schwartz and Lee Schreiber, was particularly interesting. The skit reminded me of a Levi's commercial or better yet, an MTV video with its seductive lighting and Joan Armatrading background music. The scene dealt with the interplay and exchange of emotions through the various stages of falling in love.

True West took more of a comical edge in dealing with two brothers trying who are trying to write a screenplay. At the same time they are groping for common ground between themselves.

Shepard's other piece, Killer's Head, started out as gripping and proved disappointing. The opening lights revealed a man in an electric chair. The image is very intense. What will he say? Well, he said alot of things, mostly about horses and pick up trucks. Then he was executed. Frankly, he lost me on the horses and trucks, perhaps the very nature of the short skit makes it difficult to accurately convey its meaning.

Two pieces in Center Ring were written by Hampshire students. One of them, Burt in the Marketplace, written by John Dobies and Ellen tremble was a witty look at how a dignified and ever pragmatic Englishman (played by Michael Carley) deals with facing death in the anonymity and silence of the desert.

What can you do with five actors and four newspapers? The other original piece, titled Street, attempted just that with an improvisation group, TheatreSix, performing. The group worked closely with director Leland Vall in developing their characters with the end result being a snappy scene. Nicely interwoven in the production were singers Sarah Gould and Rachael Richardson's selections. Particularly impressive were Gould's heartfelt rendition of, "Brother can you spare a dime?" and Richardson's wide range of vocal talent displayed in her performance of an Italian aria.

been the backbone of an otherwise young team. With six years of combined experience playing for Final Four caliber ballclubs, the two command a lot of respect from their coaches, teammates and opponents.

Both make things happen on the field (their combined 22 goals attest to that), but according to Hixon their styles differ.

"Megan is the field general who dictates the tempo and direction of the play," Hixon said.

"I try to work hard every day, getting the job done over and over," Donnelly said. "I model my play after Beth Anders, the former coach of the U.S. National Team, who was a hard working, competitive team player playing because of her love of the sport."

By contrast, Hixon said that Griswold is more of a one-on-one player who takes passes from the defense and challenges the opposition.

"Lisa is an exciting player who is always a scoring threat. Her moves are unpredictable and she doesn't allow opposing teams to contain her," Hixon said.

"I think of myself as an aggressive player, but I don't really try to play one-on-one. I just like to move the ball, pass it, create opportunites and get in position to score," said Griswold.

You might think that Donnelly, on defense, and Griswold, on offense, wouldn't work well together concentrating each of their efforts on separate ends of the field. But as opponents have come to realize, the two look to each other in creating opportunities.

"We work well together because when I bring the ball upfield I look for her," Donnelly said.

Griswold agreed, adding that she felt that the two have a natural chemistry between them.

"We read each other, its something that comes naturally." The Minutewomen are preparing for the NCAA tournament in mid-November. With any luck, Donnelly, Griswold and company may all have a special ring on their finger to show off to the rest of the nation.

Donnelly, Griswold leading UM to the top

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

When Megan Donnelly first arrived at the University of Massachusetts, she promised herself not to wear any rings on her fingers until her team won the national championship.

Three years later, Donnelly, the senior defender and three-time All-America, still holds to her promise and is confident that this could be the year for field hockey glory at UMass, currently the fifth-ranked team in the nation at 12-2-2..

She has had a lot of help from her teammates in contributing to the current success story, but no one has addded to this year's team any more than junior forward Lisa Griswold.

Griswold, a transfer from the University of Northwestern, has added the offensive punch that the team lacked last year when it failed to reach the Final Four for the first time since Donnelly has been here. Her addition to the team, combined with Donnelly's leadership and an enthusiastic freshman crop could prove to be the missing ingredient from last year's squad.

"We felt that Lisa would have an immediate impact on our program, she's that good," University of Massachusetts head coach Pam Hixon said.

Griswold redshirted last season after transferring from the nation's current number one nationally-ranked team, but said she has no regrets coming to UMass.

"Pam Hixon is just about the best coach in the country. The program is great here. The year off helped a lot because it gave me a chance to get in good shape," Griswold said.

Together Griswold and Donnelly have

Ball St. meets Stooges in IM finals

Title game today

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Stick to lacrosse guys.

Sack, an intramural football team made up largely of lacrosse players, was savagely beaten by Ball State, 58-12 in the semifinals of the Intramural championships yesterday afternoon on Lower Boyden Field.

In the other semi, the Stooges escaped with a slim 24-23 victory over WWF. The finals are set for today at 4:30 p.m.

Ball State was tough on defense, scoring four touchdowns on takeaways from Sack. The Stooges meanwhile advanced to the finals thanks to a blocked extra point on the last play of the game. WWF had scored to come within a point, but their low point after attempt was batted down.

In the co-rec semis, Why Townehouse was a 24-21 winner over American Express and Ball State defeated Bomb Squad 54-18. The co-rec finals are today at 5:30 p.m.

In the ultimate frisbee finals yesterday, Common Ground was a 16-8 winner over Pastafarians.

In the first-ever Intramural lacrosse championship, Grape Smugglers defeated the Bulldogs 11-10 in a hard-fought contest.

The Smugglers were led by Mike Gelson with two early goals and ken Kohlberg with a power play tally. The Dogs tied the score at four before the Smugglers went up by one, 5-4, at the half.

The Bulldogs scored three straight before the Smugglers tied it up. Taking advantage of a penalty, the Smugglers went up by one, 10-9. Mike McKie tied it at 10 before Tom Landon won the game with three seconds left.

In the co-rec soccer finals, Off defeated Amherst Towing 6-1. Allison Hill netted a hat-trick and Steve McStay added two goals for the winners. Ed Vanlingen also scored for Off.

For Amherst Towing (who IM supervisor Zelma Garcia had an unpopular name), Kraus Freuberg scored the only goal.

In the first co-rec softball championship, the undefeated Ball Bakers were 9-7 winners over Off Base.

Ball Bakers scored the winning runs in the bottom of the fifth, scoring four runs.

The teams played a close game until the fifth. The score was tied at 1-1 early. Each team scored three runs in the third inning to tighten the game up.

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team finished off their fall season with a 5-4 victory over the University of Vermont.

The Minutewomen ended up at 8-5 on the season, one of the best records in recent years. Considering that the team has coached by new two part-timers and faces a budget cut this season, quite an accomplishment.

Against the Catamounts, senior Jill Negros was an easy 6-3, 6-4 winner at fourth singles to close her season.

"It was a great way to finish up the season. We've had so many close matches against UVM- it's nice to come out on the winning side," Negros said about the match.

Other UMass winners included senior Diana Biagioli in the second singles, 6-2, 7-5. Freshman Kim Pola was a victor at third singles, 6-1, 4-6, 7-5. The first doubles team of senior Lisa Corbett and sophomore Debbie Ginn were 6-2, 4-6, 6-4 winners.

The UMass team will continue to practice outdoors until the weather worsens and forces them to move indoors.

The Minutewomen will then prepare for their spring season, the last season they will play as a varsity sport. The men's and women's tennis teams, the men's and women's skiing teams, the men's and women's golf teams and the wrestling teams were all demoted to club sport status in May of 1984.

With the exception of the wrestling team, this will be the last season for all of those teams.

Playoff hopes alive for men's soccer

Bing's goal beats Springfield, 1-0

Sophmore Andy Bing scored his fourth game-winning goal of the season and senior Don Donahue recorded his third shutout as the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team downed Springfield College, 1-0 Monday night in Springfield.

Bing's tenth talley of the year came at the 52:19 mark on a spectacular rush.

The midfielder took a chip pass from junior John Shannon, rushed from the left side toward center, beat three defenders, and nailed a shot from 18 yards off the under side of the cross bar and into the net.

The Minutemen (14-5) had a number of chances to increase the lead, but were unable to complete their opportunities. UMass outshot Springfield 30-10 and forced Chief goalkeeper Tim Miller to make 15 saves.

"We had a lot of chances and really threatened," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "We were in the right positions at the right times, but we just hit the goalie.

"Springfield was pumped up. They thought they could make their season with an upset over a division one team, we are their toughest opponents. They came at us hard."

Donahue improved his record to 6-5 and lowered his goals against average to 1.52 on the year.

The victory keeps alive hopes of a berth in the NCAA tournament for the Minutemen.

Volleyball, field hockey in action

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team will face Southern Connecticut in Boyden Gym at 7 p.m. tonight.

The Minutewomen are 28-6 on the season and must win to keep their Division 2 NCAA playoff hopes alive.

Tonight in Boston, the fifth-ranked UMass field hockey team will face Boston University looking to keep its New England dominance intact.

The Minutewomen are 12-2-2 on the season and haven't lost in their last nine games, they are riding a twao-game winning streak. Like the volleyball team, the Minutewomen are hoping to increase their chances at a tourney bid later this season.

Duff reprimanded by regents

By MARTIE BARNES
The Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The state Board of Regents of Higher Education yesterday reprimanded Higher Education Chancellor John Duff, who is under investigation for possibly violating state law by soliciting a campaign contribution from regents.

"Based on the information available to us which we have reviewed and discussed, the regents have found no indication of a practice of political solicitation by the chancellor or his staff," the panel said in a statement issued after a three-hour closed-door meeting.

"However, there appears to be a single instance of an inappropriate action on the part of the Office of the Chancellor. While the regents continue to support the chancellor, the Office of the Chancellor has been admonished for this lapse and a directive has gone to the chancellor to report to the regents what further steps will be taken to ensure that such an incident does not reoccur."

Before the closed-door meeting, Chairman David Beaubian asked Regent John Fox, a retired judge, to head an adhoc committee to study "allegations in The Boston Globe with which you are familiar."

The Globe reported last week that Duff tried to solicit political campaign contributions from board members, in apparent violation of state law.

Duff denied any such action. But he said he accepted responsibility for a letter, sent by press aide Estelle Shanley to five regents, that requested they buy $100 tickets to a fundraiser planned by House Speaker George Keverian.

Duff has said the matter has been overblown and that he has no plans to resign. He said Keverian had no knowledge of the action.

State law prohibits public employees other than elected officials from directly or indirectly soliciting campaign contributions.

Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti has said he also is investigating the matter.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who has appointed or reappointed 10 of the 15 regents, asked the regents to convene about the matter. He said it "certainly calls for some pretty decisive action."

Duff has been searching for a new job and is a finalist for a job as commissioner of the Chicago Public Library.

Meanwhile, the Globe reported that a statewide computer network the regents operated reportedly faces a multimillion-dollar shortfall.

Unidentified officials quoted in the newspaper said they think only about $500,000 or $1.6 million that the Legislature appropriated in 1983 to pay an overdue bill to Control Data Corp. was paid toward that debt during the 1983 fiscal year. They said the rest of the money was used to buy equipment.

The officials said the regents now owe Control Data at least $1 million on the old service debt and as much as $1 million more for software and for servicing the new equipment.

2 day care facilities face investigation

By PATRICK JOHNSON

A University of Massachusetts spokeman confirmed yesterday that two of the four day care facilities on campus are being investigated by the state police, the Department of Social Services and the Office of Child Services for alleged child abuse violations.

The investigation of the Grass Roots and New World day care centers started after a pediatrician from University Health Services filed a report of possible abuse to the State Department of Social Services in mid-October, according to Arther Clifford of the UMass Office of Public Information.

Clifford declined to reveal the age or the sex of the child, nor would he mention the precise nature of the complaint because of the need for confidentiality in the investigation.

Clifford denied that the investigation is centered around one certain employee of either facility, as reported in the Daily Hampshire Gazette yesterday. "The investigation is not focused at any one individual right now," he said. "It is a broad investigation and will be completed when the State Police are satisfied with the evidence."

The two facilities provide day care for 120 children between the ages of two months to 5 years old, from the University system.

Clifford said their questions will be answered when the investigation is completed. "We have only two concerns right now," he said. "The first is concern to protect the children. The second is to protect the reputation of a very good child care program."

Party, guest policies no different on Halloween

By JILL LANG

Guest policy for the University of Massachusetts residence halls will be no different than usual this Halloween weekend.

Both the East and West sides of campus will be under the same security policies, according to Larry Moneta, director of Residential Education East.

"From now on, we will have campus wide policies for things like this," Moneta said. "That is our new mission: to reduce stress for students.

"We are relaxing, but we are not eliminating security for the Halloween weekend," Moneta said.

Each resident will be allowed two overnight guests and four sign-in guests. Non-UMass students will be allowed in the residence halls, Moneta said, but they will not be allowed to attend registered parties.

Unregistered parties will be dealt with in accordance to the usual residence hall policies.

Moneta said use of Halloween masks is discouraged on both sides of campus.

Security in the residence halls will be expanded, according to Carol

Smith trustees to respond

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

The Smith College Board of Trustees promised last week to respond to a recently-submitted student proposal for divestment from companies doing business in South Africa by Feburary.

In addition, students received a renewed promise to view summaries of letters written by the trustees to the corporations with dealings in South Africa, said Cathy Peterson, student member of Smith's Student Government Association Ethical Investment Committee.

"Roughly 7.4 percent of our portfolio have South Africa related investments," said Charles Johnson, associate treasurer. Out of Smith's $222 million endowment, $16.3 miilion are in stocks which denote a share of ownership with companies tied to South African business.

The ethical investment committee submitted a three-part proposal Saturday calling for divestment that day in a meeting with the college's trustees, Smith President Mary Maples Dunn and 15 students, Peterson said.

A divestment from companies conducting business in South Africa over a two-year period was outlined in the proposal. Also, an immediate divestment from three companies that do not abide by the Sullivan Principles, a set of guidelines for reaching racial equality in employment procedures, was called for in the proposal.

"If we divest from these three companies, it would be about $3.5 million," Peterson said. U.S. Steel, Kimberly-Clark Corp. and IMS International are the three companies in which Smith holds stock.

The third point in the proposal calls for an implementation of college policies that preclude future investments in businesses and corporations that do business in South Africa.

"We are walking on tender ground," Peterson said of the committee's presentation of the proposal to the trustees. "They (the trustees) are most concerned about the money invested.

"The trustees have agreed that apartheid is awful but they have a lot of questions that can't be answered," she said. At Saturday's meeting, the trustees brought up the broader issue of what would happen if a revolution breaks out in South Africa and U.S. companies are bought out by other countries with different standards of human rights

But Peterson said the proposal is one which only concerns Smith investments and not sweeping economic pressure. College proposals draw great media attention, she said, and put pressure on trustees to take action. "It's embarassing to the trustees and it lodges a burr in their consciences."

Last spring, the college's trustees denied students access to view letters they wrote to companies and corporations which are involved in South African business. But they reversed their decision and announced last week that students could read summaries of the letters.

Peterson said the trustee's letters were requests for companies to explain their policies regarding apartheid in the country.

Hulk Hogan costume favored

BOSTON (AP) - Step aside Ronald Reagan. The nation's chief executive who was last year's favorite Halloween face has been replaced this year by a heavy-hitter of another sort: professional wrestler Hulk Hogan.

While the vampire queen of the costume rental business appears to be television's horror movie hostess Elvira, the mustachioed muscleman who inspired a pro-wrestling mania is the top choice among maskwearers.

"He's alone in his greatness," said Carl Bertolino, assistant manager of Little Jack Horner Inc., one of the nation's largest costume shops. "We can't get enough of them."

"It's great when you see a little kid wearing this humongous mask," he said. "It's hysterical. The kid looks like a Munchkin character with a big head and a little body."

As usual, said Bertolino, costumes having connections to popular movies, television shows and commercials are making money. The mask of E.T. $50, Dr. Spock $40, Mr. T $25 and Charlie Chaplin $21 are selling like hotcakes.

Bertolino said men and women across the country are renting everything from military uniforms $20-$60 to elaborate Renaissance outfits $40-$65. Classic costumes such as witches, ghosts, werewolves, devils and draculas also are hot.

South Africa holds election

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - The National Party, putting its race reform measures on the line with white voters in five special parliamentary elections, handily won one race yesterday, narrowly defeated an ultra-rightist in another and lost a third, unofficial returns showed.

Results were not in from two conservative farming communities.

The elections were viewed as a gauge of white feeling toward the government's limited moves away from apartheid after 14 months of black riots and a deepening economic crisis.

Meanwhile, police said at least seven blacks were killed yesterday and late Tuesday in violence believed linked to unrest against apartheid, South Africa's system of enforced racial separation.

The balloting was to fill midterm vacancies in the whites-only chamber, which has final say in the three-chamber Parliament.

Whites, people of mixed-race and Asians meet separately in the Parliament. Blacks have no vote and no chamber.

Soviets to interview Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, in a pre-summit gesture to the Soviet Union, will be questioned today by four journalists from Moscow in the first interview granted by an American president to the Soviet press in nearly a quarter of century.

The session, at 2 p.m. EST in the Oval Office, is a "unique and historic opportunity for the president to communicate directly with the people of the Soviet Union," said White House spokesman Larry Speakes. "We hope it is a sign of a new and more open information policy on the part of the Soviet Union."

"No restrictions have been imposed on the Soviets' questions, although they are likely to focus on Reagan's summit Nov. 19-20 with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Geneva and superpower relations, Speakes said. He said the United States has not asked to review in advance what will be published.

USSR has strategic superiority

By JOSEPH TIGAN
Collegian Correspondent

Arms control agreement talks have failed in improving U.S. security, and in the meantime the Soviets have obtained strategic superiority over the US, which they intend to maintain, the former director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency said last night at Amherst College.

"Right now, we have no defense if a missle were headed to the U.S.," James T. Hackett said.

Hackett, who outlined a history of failures in arms control agreements, said it would be impractical to use arms control in place of national defense, adding that such talks 'have only tranquiled the Americans into doing less than they should, while the Soviets build up."

"To use these type of agreements as a cheaper and safer way to maintain U.S. security is impossible," he said. "Such a precaution will not hold back a determined totalitarian state such as the Soviet Union."

Moscow's strategic forces are geared toward a first strike capability, and are employed not in deterrence, but to win, Hackett said.

"From 1972-1980, the U.S. restrained from building any missles while the Soviets engaged in the most massive build up ever," Hackett said. "And with this build-up has come the Soviet ability to intimidate and expand through military power the spread of Marxism."

Hackett said that to maintain a credible defense as a deterrent, the development of small mobil missles (Midgetman) is important. He also said that movement toward high technology conventional weapons is an excellent alternative.

James T. Hackett, former director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency

"Nothing attracts the attention of the men in the Kremlin more so much as the ability to drop a missle down the chimney," he said.

The most important move to maintain U.S. security is the Strategic Defense Initiative—SDI, or Star Wars—which has the purpose of deterring any attack and making nuclear weapons obselete, according to Hackett.

"We live in a world of mutually assured destruction (MAD—where it is assured that if one country were to send offensive missles, the opposing country could respond by sending their own, virtually assuring destruction), but the greater the defense, the less likely there would be an attack. SDI offers an escape from MAD."

Student regent likely

By JEFFRY BARTASH
Collegian Correspondent

A bill that proposes to place a student member on the state Board of Regents of Higher Education is expected to be signed by Gov. Michael Dukakis next week.

Co-chairpersons of the Student Government Association Public Policy Committee Clare Bouzen and Don Cassidy said the measure would provide for an undergraduate student from a public college or public university becoming a voting member of the board of regents.

Bouzan said, "The board of regents is a very powerful body, responsible for establishing tuition policy, overall academic regulations, and in a large measure, the overall future of public higher education in Massachusetts."

The governor will choose the student regent based on three candidates recommended to him by the Student Advisory Committee, which is comprised of student trustees from each public community college, state college, and university in Massachusetts, said Bouzan.

The appointments will operate on a three year basis, Bouzan said. The first year, the student regent will be from a university; the second, a student regent from a state college, and the next year the student regent will be from a community college. This policy aims to give all Massachusetts public higher education institutions equal input.

The state board of regents failed by one vote to pass a motion to endorse the presence of a student on its board last February, prompting student lobbyists to push the bill through the Legislature.

Cassidy said, "We lobbied in Boston this summer on behalf of the bill and we called and sent letters to members of the House and Senate."

The bill passed in the Massachusetts House in July and in the Massachusetts Senate last Tuesday, largely through the efforts of Senator Gerard D'Amico, D-Worcester, and House member Dennis Lawrence, D-New Bedford.

Bouzan said the bill is a result of several years of hard work by a strong coalition of students throughout Massachusetts.

"I think the student regent bill will give students a direct mechanism for expressing their concerns to the body that oversees their condition," she said.

Deaf people consider themselves a sub-culture

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

Deaf people do not regard themselves as disabled, but as member of a subculture, according to two interpreters who gave a presentation yesterday titled "Deafness: Disability as a Subculture."

Hannah Yaffee and Geary Gravel, of the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs, spoke about the way that deafness is perceived in our culture, and about the way deaf people perceive themselves.

"The deaf students on campus don't see themselves as disabled," so they don't belong to student groups like Disabilities Unlimited, Yaffee said. "It's a whole separate society."

People born deaf are "the only cultural group where the children are born to parents of another cultural group," Yaffee said. "It's the only subcultural group people can talk about getting rid of," which offends deaf people, Gravel said.
